— No. 1. —

No. 1.
Despatch from Lord Stanley to Gov. Sir Geo. Gipps, 14 Oct. 1841.

(No. 16.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Stanley to Governor Sir George Gipps.

Sir, Downing-street, 14 October 1841.

MY predecessor, in his despatch No. 307, of the 16th July, expressed to you, in strong terms, the disapprobation which he felt of the measures which you had taken in respect of bounty orders for immigration into the colony under your charge. It is with very sincere regret that, at the commencement of my official correspondence with a gentleman whose zeal and ability in the discharge of his public duties have been generally so conspicuous, I am compelled to adopt, to the full extent, the language of censure which Lord John Russell felt himself under the necessity of using, and to take steps which may appear to weaken your personal authority in the colony over which you preside. But the dangers to the welfare of that colony, arising out of the improvident course which you have allowed yourself to pursue, in disregard of positive instructions, are so serious and so imminent, as to supersede all other considerations, and to compel me to resort, as I am assured my predecessor would have resorted, to the most decided measures to arrest or mitigate the impending evils.

For Lord John Russell's Despatch, 16 July 1841, vide Papers relative to New South Wales, ordered by The House of Commons to be printed 6 Sept. 1841, No. 10, p. 4.

I am not now about to enter into the discussion of the comparative merits of the two systems of conducting emigration from this country to the Australian colonies, which may be denominated respectively the "Government Emigration System," and the "Bounty System." One principle is common to both of them, namely, that the surplus revenue of the land fund, after deducting such charges as it may be thought right to impose upon it, should be applied, under proper authority, to the importation into New South Wales of emigrants of the labouring class, accompanied by their families.

The system originated with Sir Richard Bourke, and on the 23d of March 1837 the following instructions were conveyed to him:

"I have to request that, in furtherance of the proposal contained in the enclosed letter, you will, at the commencement of each financial year, transmit to the Secretary of State a statement of the balance, if any, of the fund applicable to emigration remaining unexpended at the close of the preceding year, together with an estimate of the probable amount of the funds to be derived from the sale of Crown lands within the colony, and applicable to the same service during the ensuing year. You will consider yourself at liberty to appropriate one-third of this sum to the payment of bounties on emigrants introduced by private settlers, on the terms of your Government notice of the 28th of October 1835; and the remaining two-thirds will be expended under the directions of the chief agent for emigration in this country. You will, at the same time, transmit to me a detailed statement of the expenditure, during the preceding year, of the one-third which will have been appropriated on the terms of the notice to which I have referred."

It does not appear that the estimates required by these instructions, and upon which the whole scheme was founded, have ever been furnished, and there have, consequently, been no fixed data upon which the division of the emigration funds between the two systems could be effected; but, in the meantime, the bounty system materially altered its character. Upon the recommendation of the committee of Legislative Council, the scale of bounties was increased, and they were made, as nearly as possible, equal to the actual passage-money. Proprietors and settlers, moreover, did not nominate and select the emigrants; but the real practice soon became that the correspondent of some extensive shipowner in England applied at Sydney for large orders, without any particular proprietors requiring the labour; and the shipowner then sent out the numbers sanctioned, trusting to the general fitness of the people for enabling him to obtain the bounty. Nevertheless, as originally intended, the two systems, the one under the management in this country of the Government emigration agent, the other under that of private individuals and shipowners, remained in operation together until the end of the year 1839. The numbers who were conveyed to the colony in that time, and the expense of their conveyance, appears to have been as follows:

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Sent out by Home Government.

Year.	Number.	Expense. £.	s.	d.
1837 - - -	2,688	43,341	–	–
1838 - - -	6,463	122,318	–	–
1839 - - -	4,096	89,414	–	–

Arrived in Colony on Bounty.

Year.	Number.	Expense. £.	s.	d.
1837 - - -	742	8,585	–	–
1839 - - -	2,814	43,020	–	–

I have already stated that it is not my intention to enter into the comparative merits of the two systems, which have been largely discussed here and in the colony during the last three years, the colonial authorities giving the preference, on the score of cheapness, to the bounty system, but wholly overlooking or disregarding, not only the division of the funds directed by Lord Glenelg, but also the still more important question, how far the available funds are able to meet the charges thus imposed upon them. An attention to the positive instructions of my predecessors on this subject would have enabled you to avoid much of the serious inconveniences to which I am about to advert.

In the year 1840, although no official report had been received from the local government of the number for whose importation upon bounty orders had been issued, it was obvious from the advertisements of the bounty agents in this country, that a great extension had suddenly been given to this species of emigration; and prudence required that an entire stop should be put to the emigration managed by Government officers. The Commissioners of Land and Emigration, in the report which mentioned this circumstance, pointed out some evils with which they considered the bounty system might be attended, but in deference to the opinions entertained in its favour by the colonial authorities, abstained from any positive recommendation, until the large experiment then commencing should have been tried. Subsequently to the receipt of this report Lord John Russell informed you, in his despatch of the 7th of October last, No. 160, that this description of public emigration must in future be carried on under the superintendence of the Board of Emigration, and directed that all parties obtaining orders for the introduction of labourers on bounty, should put themselves in communication with the Commissioners, whose duty it would be, by themselves or by their agents, to inspect and communicate with the emigrants, as well as ascertain that all the necessary arrangements for their safety, health, and comfort during the voyage, had been made. The Commissioners were further instructed to state what would be the necessary steps for carrying Lord John Russell's intentions into effect. In proposing the plan thus called for, reference was necessarily made to the evils and abuses which had been found to exist, or which were likely to arise from the circumstance that numbers of inexperienced persons were now entering into the trade; and in their letter to Mr. Stephen of the 16th November 1840, the Commissioners mentioned two instances which had recently occurred of improper conduct on the part of bounty agents in their dealings with parties whom they engaged to convey to the colony. The Commissioners were then directed to issue the following notice in the Gazette:

"Office of Colonial Land and Emigration,
"25 January 1841.

"WHEREAS it has been made to appear to the Commissioners of Colonial Lands and Emigration, and by them reported to Her Majesty's Government, that abuses have arisen in certain cases, of vessels fitted out or advertised for the conveyance of emigrants to New South Wales, on bounties to be received from the local government; now, in pursuance, and by authority of instructions from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Commissioners do hereby give notice to all whom it may concern, that if emigrants shall hereafter be removed from this kingdom to New South Wales, by persons who hold orders for bounties on

NEW SOUTH WALES.

on the introduction of labourers or others into that colony, it will be necessary, in order to entitle the claimants to receive such bounties, that they should obtain from the officers acting under the orders of Her Majesty's Commissioners for Land and Emigration, at the ports from which the emigrant vessels may respectively sail, certificates, addressed to the governor of New South Wales, to the effect that the emigrants are fit and proper persons to be removed at the public expense, and that they are about to proceed on the voyage freely, and without any undue influence or misrepresentation having been employed on the part of the claimants of the bounties, or their agents, to induce them so to emigrate; and that all contracts made with the emigrants have been duly carried out; and further, that the vessels in which the emigrants are about to sail, are, in every respect, sound and seaworthy, and properly manned; and provided with all things requisite for the sustenance, health, and necessary comfort of the emigrants during the voyage; which certificates, on due proof being made of these facts, the various emigration agents before mentioned will be prepared to issue on application at their respective offices.

"By order of the Board,

(signed) "S. Walcott, Secretary."

In this state of things my predecessor received your public despatch, No. 29, of the 31st of January, and your despatch, marked "Confidential," of the 1st of February 1841, and addressed to you that of the 16th of July, No. 307.

For Despatch, No. 29, 31 July, vide Papers relative to New South Wales, ordered by The House of Commons to be printed 6 Sept. 1841, No. 10, p. 6.

In that despatch Lord John Russell adverts to your expectation that a great portion of these orders would be ineffectual, because it would be impossible to execute them within the prescribed period of two years. And while I am compelled to say that I concur with him in thinking that this supposed fact greatly enhanced the improvidence of the measure, I regret to add, that experience has proved how great was the miscalculation under which you were induced to take so extraordinary a step.

Upon ascertaining that bounty orders had been issued by you, amounting upon the lowest assumption to not less than 979,562*l.*, while, upon the largest possible estimates, the land revenue applicable to the purposes of emigration, could not be expected to amount, in the two years, to the sum of 600,000*l.* (and this is probably an extravagant assumption), Lord John Russell took immediate steps to diminish the pressure which he foresaw must fall upon the colony. He immediately called upon the Commissioners to furnish any information which they might be able to obtain as to the number of persons already sent out to the colony on the bounty orders outstanding and in force on the 31st of December 1840, and also as to the number of such orders as might still be in the hands of parties in this country, and were likely soon to be acted on. The Commissioners were also directed to report, as far as the information in their possession would admit, whether it might be possible to reduce, within any definite limits, that species of emigration, and, if so, to what extent that reduction could be made, and in what manner it could most conveniently be effected. Having received from the Commissioners a Report*, of which a copy is enclosed, Lord John Russell directed the issue, by them, of a notice, of which I shall also enclose a copy.

* 17 July 1841. For Report of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 17 July 1841, in Papers relative to New South Wales, ordered by The House of Commons to be printed 6 Sept. 1841, No. 10, p. 4.

31 July 1841. Ditto - - Ditto - p. 6.

4 October 1841. Enclosure No. 1.

Notwithstanding these precautions, it appears, by a subsequent statement from the Commissioners, which is enclosed, that 19,439 persons had sailed before the 1st of September, and were calculated to arrive in the colony before the end of 1841; and that in the single month immediately preceding that date, 10,794 applicants had passed their office, of whom it is probable that no great number, if any, can have been included amongst the departures previous to the 1st of September.

I shall direct measures to be taken for the purpose of enforcing to the fullest extent the restrictions imposed by my predecessor; and immediately after the 1st of November I shall furnish you with as exact an account as can be obtained of the total charge imposed upon the revenues of New South Wales in consequence of the emigration of this year. In the meanwhile the charge for the number of persons expected to arrive in 1841, taking it at the rate of actual cost in 1840, would appear to be upwards of 314,000*l.* If the whole of the certificates shall be acted upon before November, there will accrue a further demand for more than 170,000*l.* in the first two months of 1842; and out of 71,315 people for whom orders were estimated by you to be outstanding on the 31st December 1840, a number of 41,082 will still remain to be accounted for, whose conveyance would cost, at the rate of cost in 1840, 663,645*l.* This is the nearest calculation which it has been practicable to form, because from the manner in which many of the bounty orders appear to be given, authorising the export of so many "families," it is impossible to estimate with precision the charge which may devolve in consequence on the colonial funds. But assuming the general correctness of that estimate, the probable deficiency of the present year appears to be not less than 14,000*l.*, and a very large proportion of the available land revenue of the next year is liable to be anticipated in the first two months; while you have sanctioned further outstanding claims upon that year's revenue to the amount just stated of not less than 660,000*l.*

28 Sept. 1841. Enclosure No. 2.

Here I must draw your serious attention to the enclosed letter from the Treasury, pointing out that from so much of the threatened embarrassments as cannot be averted the resources of the colony, and not those of this country, must be looked to for the means of extrication.

I am well aware that you did not anticipate such a result of your scheme; but I am not the less bound to take every precaution in my power to protect the colony and intending emigrants from this country from the evils consequent upon it; and I have, in the first place, to repeat the "distinct and peremptory instruction" conveyed to you by my predecessor, that you "abstain in future from issuing any bounty orders exceeding the net amount of the land revenue clearly applicable to that purpose during the next succeeding year." I have also to direct your invariable adherence to a rule laid down by him, that a duplicate of every order issued be transmitted to Her Majesty's Government, the form of which must be carefully prepared by your legal advisers; and I have to add that no order which is not framed in accordance with those forms, nor any of which a duplicate shall not have been received by the Land and Emigration Commissioners, will receive their certificate, nor be allowed by Her Majesty's Government.

I shall have to address you in a separate despatch upon the abuses which appear to have prevailed in reference to the disposal of bounty orders. In my present despatch I apply myself to immediate measures to obviate pressing evils.

In the present circumstances of the funds applicable to the purposes of emigration, I cannot take upon myself absolutely to sanction the validity of orders issued prior to January 1841, and not yet presented to the Land and Emigration Commissioners, nor will I enter into any undertaking to guarantee the payment of the sums to which the holders of such orders may lay claim; but during the period for which they are granted, they certainly have an equitable claim to precedence over all others; and you will, therefore, cause it to be publicly known in the colony, as I shall cause it to be made known in this country, that no orders issued subsequently to 1st July 1841 will be allowed or deemed valid by Her Majesty's Government; and I shall hold you personally responsible for any issue of money in virtue of any such order. It is also my intention to give public notice, that no emigration on bounty orders will be sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government previous to the 1st of August next. By that time I hope to be in possession of accounts from you subsequent to the period of the arrival of the latest of the emigrants who may leave this country in the present year. Immediately on the receipt of this despatch, you will furnish me with an accurate account of the number of emigrants who may have arrived under the bounty orders outstanding on the 31st December 1840, of the expense incurred thereby, and of the land revenue which shall have accrued in the year, applicable to the purposes of emigration. You will also furnish me with as accurate an estimate as you can form of the probable revenue of the succeeding year. You will furnish a continuation of the same account and estimate so soon as all the emigrant ships which you shall have been led to expect shall have arrived in the colony. But under no circumstances will you consider yourself authorized to issue bounty orders for the admission of any emigrants until you shall receive from me distinct instructions to that effect.

I need not say that I look with great anxiety, not only to the derangement of the public funds of the colony, arising out of the excessive immigration of this year, but also to the consequences to themselves and to the community, of the sudden influx of so unprecedented a number of immigrants as have been sailing during the last few months. I shall rejoice to hear that the consequence of this sudden increase of the population are less serious than I anticipate; but I shall expect the fullest and most accurate account of the manner in which these immigrants are disposed of; and, for the future, the most rigid adherence to those instructions which may have been conveyed to you from this department, whenever I may feel myself justified in sanctioning the issue of bounty orders, upon your authority, for the admission of emigrants from this country to New South Wales.

While, in the meantime, I must insist on the strictest attention to the instructions contained in this despatch, I assure you that I have written it with very sincere regret for the tone which I have been compelled to take, and which has been forced upon me by my deep sense of the imminent dangers to which the credit of the colony is exposed, and which seem to me to call upon Her Majesty's Government for the most prompt and decisive steps to arrest their progress.

I am, &c.
(signed) Stanley.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street, Westminster, Sir, 4 October 1841.

Encl. 1, in No. 1.

We propose in the present letter to submit, for the information of Lord Stanley, such further intelligence as can at present be attained respecting the progress of the emigration upon bounty to New South Wales.

On the 4th of August last we reported, that of the whole number of persons for whom bounty orders were returned by Sir George Gipps as outstanding on the 31st of December 1840, 15,646 had gone, and that the additional number which the several agents announced their intention to send before the close of the present year was 13,794, making a total, in case the emigration were unchecked, of 29,440. With a view, however, of limiting these latter numbers, we had been instructed not to receive any certificates of proposed emigrants for examination at our office after the 1st of September; and further to announce, that none could be allowed to sail after the 1st November. The full effect of these measures cannot be ascertained until after the last-mentioned date shall have passed. Our only object now is to lay before Lord Stanley such facts as are at present known, with a view of keeping his Lordship possessed of the latest information, and of giving an opportunity to convey the same, as will probably be deemed desirable, to the governor.

Our former statement comprised, as was explained, all persons who at that date were known or computed to have sailed, so as to arrive in the colony subsequently to the end of last year; and we can now complete the statement up to the 1st of September—an important date, because, making the usual allowance of four months for the passage, the numbers gone, up to that period, may be considered to constitute the whole numbers who will arrive in the colony within the year 1841. We find, then, that the amount of emigrants on bounty who had sailed from all parts of the United Kingdom, up to the 1st September, was 19,439; and at the rate of 16*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* per head, which would appear, from the particulars in the Sydney Agent's Annual Report, to have been the actual rate of expense in 1840, the cost would be 314,020*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*

We have next to report that the number of persons for whom certificates were forwarded to our office in the month from the 1st of August to the 1st of September, exclusive of those which upon inquiry we rejected, was 10,794. The whole of this number, however, cannot at once be assumed to be necessarily a clear addition to the previous one of 19,439; for the certificates were reissued from the office as fast as they were examined and approved, and it is not improbable, therefore, that some portion, though a small one, of the persons to whom they belonged may be included in the number who had actually sailed before the 1st of September. It can also only appear at the end of the term whether the whole remaining portion of these 10,794 persons can be despatched in the two months from the 1st of September to the 1st of November. What deduction, if any, will have to be made on these several accounts can only be ascertained after the last ships have sailed. The cost of the whole number of 10,794 emigrants, at the average of 1840, would be 174,368*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, and the total sum consequently required for the emigration of the period of 14 months, would be 488,388*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.*

In conclusion, we would beg leave to bring under Lord Stanley's notice the circumstance, that at the time of Sir George Gipps's despatch of the 31st of January last, when the numbers who were expected to arrive during the year were stated under 12,000, the governor nevertheless anticipated difficulty in paying even for their introduction, if the division between the land funds of Port Phillip and Sydney were maintained, inasmuch as the greater number of immigrants would arrive at the latter place, while the greatest amount of revenue would accrue at the former; and we would venture to submit the question whether, under the special circumstances of the present exigency, when it will probably be deemed the paramount object to render every resource available to maintaining the credit of the colony, it might not be advisable to authorize the governor to waive the distinction in question, and to use indiscriminately all the funds applicable to emigration within the limits of his government, in meeting the unexpected amount of demands for bounty.

Sir, Treasury Chambers, 28 September 1841.

HAVING submitted to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury your letter dated the 28th ult., on the subject of the introduction into New South Wales of emigrants under the bounty system, I have it in command to acquaint you, for the information of Lord Stanley, that my Lords have learnt with much concern the improvident proceedings of the Governor of New South Wales in issuing orders for bounty to an extent so much beyond the means at his disposal for emigration purposes.

Lord John Russell having already taken such steps as are practicable for arresting the evil, my Lords have no further measures to suggest at present; but concurring, as they do, in his Lordship's disclaimer on the part of Her Majesty's Government of any responsibility for this proceeding, and of any obligation to ratify the engagements entered into by the Governor, their Lordships are of opinion that the necessity of looking to the resources of the colony, and not to this country, for the means of extrication from the embarrassments which, it is to be feared, will result from these proceedings, should be emphatically urged upon the attention of that functionary.

James Stephen, Esq. &c. &c. &c.

My Lord, Government House, Sydney, 17 July 1841.

17th July 1841. No. 1. 7th July 1841. No. 2.

I HAVE the honour herewith to forward returns of the revenue actually received into the treasury of this colony, in the half-year ended the 30th June last; the return for Port Phillip being made separate from that which is furnished for the rest of the colony.

The ordinary revenue of the half-year (Port Phillip included) is 161,433*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* and as the same for the entire year 1840 was only 311,748 l. 16 s. 11 d., there is no falling off in this branch of our revenue, notwithstanding the commercial embarrassments of the colony, which I have had repeatedly occasion to mention to your Lordship.

In our land sales, however, the falling off has been very material: in 1840, the proceeds of land sold amounted to 316,438 l. 12 s. 4 d., whilst in the first six months of the present year they have yielded only 66,482 l. 17 s. 1 d.

The sum at present in our treasury amounts to about 240,000 l. (exclusive of 41,000 l. advanced to New Zealand); I trust, therefore, we shall have no difficulty in meeting our engagements during the next twelve months, though these engagements are, as your Lordship is aware, extremely heavy, especially in respect to bounties on immigration.

I have, &c.
(signed) George Gipps.

No. 3.
Despatch from Governor Sir Geo. Gipps to Lord John Russell, 17 July 1841.

(No. 138.)

My Lord, Government House, Sydney, 17 July 1841.

WITH reference to my despatch, No. 12, of the 12th January last, I have now the honour to forward to your Lordship a return of all the monies paid out of the treasury of New South Wales on account of New Zealand, up to the present time; and as New Zealand is now an independent colony, and in possession of a considerable revenue derived from the sale of land, I presume no further necessity will exist for the government of that colony to draw upon New South Wales.

19th June 1841. No. 1.

I enclose, for your Lordship's information, copies of some letters which have passed between myself and the Governor of New Zealand, on this subject.

14th May and 9th June 1841. No. 2.

My despatch of this day's date, No. 137, will have informed your Lordship that the land revenue of New South Wales (which is always a fluctuating one) has experienced during the first six months of the present year a considerable decline, and that the sum at present in our treasury is only about 240,000 l., whilst the government is pledged to pay a much larger sum for immigration during the next two years, should emigrants from the United Kingdom be brought to the colony equal to or nearly approaching the numbers for whose importation on bounty permission has been given.

Under such circumstances, I trust your Lordship will hold me excused for requesting to be informed whether, if any necessity arise for my so doing, I may draw on the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury for the amount advanced by this government to New Zealand.

I have, &c.

(signed) George Gipps.

Encl. 2, in No. 3.

Sir, Government House, Auckland, New Ulster, 14 May 1841.

I HAVE the honour to enclose an account of sales at the auction held on the 19th ultimo for the sale of allotments in the town of Auckland, on which deposits at the rate of 10 per cent. have been already paid here. I fear I shall not be able to furnish your Excellency with a full account of the receipts at the expiration of the usual period of 30 days after the sale, in consequence of your Excellency's permission to pay the money into the treasury in Sydney or to the treasury here, at the option of purchasers.

I have to request your Excellency will inform me how you intend to apply the proceeds of this land sale; whether you deem it right to appropriate any part of it to the liquidation of the debt due from this colony to New South Wales, or to place the amount at my disposal to meet the current expenses of this government. It may be proper here to inform your Excellency that I have not received any instructions from the Right honourable the Secretary of State as to the means of obtaining supplies, nor am I informed whether or not I am to suspend my demands on New South Wales until a revenue can be raised; and I am strictly prohibited from using more than 50 per cent. of the land sales for any other purpose than for emigration. As it could not by possibility be known to his Lordship that any land sale here was contemplated, or that any money could have been raised in New Zealand from any source whatsoever, it must be inferred that his Lordship calculated upon my still drawing on New South Wales for such money as may be required for the present services of the government. May I request your Excellency will favour me with your views on this subject?

I have, &c.

His Excellency Sir George Gipps, Governor, &c. &c.

(signed) W. Hobson.

(No. 28.)

Sir, Government House, Sydney, 9 June 1841.

I HAVE had the honour to receive the duplicate of your Excellency's despatch, No. 2, of the 14th May 1841; but as the enclosure alluded to in it did not accompany the despatch, I am as yet uninformed of the amount realised by the first sale of land at the town of Auckland.

I hasten, however, to reply to that part of your despatch which relates to the appropriation of the money which may be paid into the treasury of New South Wales, under the notice issued by me that payments for land sold in New Zealand might be completed in Sydney.

As that notice was issued solely for the purpose of accommodating purchasers, and not with the remotest intention of securing to this government repayment of any sums advanced by it, I shall instruct the treasurer of New South Wales to hold all such sums entirely at your disposal.

Not having received any instructions from Her Majesty's Government on the subject of New Zealand since it was erected into a separate government, I am unable to give any satisfactory reply to the points in your Excellency's despatch which relate to the source from which funds are to be obtained for the future support of your Government. Whilst, however, you are in possesssion of funds arising from the sale of land or any other source whatsoever, I shall not feel justified in making any further advance from the revenue of this colony without express directions from the Secretary of State.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Governor Hobson, New Zealand.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 20 December 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the enclosed copy of a despatch from the Governor of New South Wales, with a return of the revenue actually received into the treasury of that colony in the half-year ending 30 June 1841.

No. 137. 17 July 1841.

I also enclose a copy of a despatch from Sir George Gipps, with a statement of the sums advanced from the Crown revenues of that colony in aid of the government of New Zealand to the 19 June 1841; and I am to request that you will furnish a return, as far as an estimate can be made, of the state of the land revenue of New South Wales for the present year, and of the probable balance which will remain applicable to emigration in the succeeding year, without having recourse to unusual measures.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 4 January 1842.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you, for your information, with reference to the funds at the disposal of the Government for emigration to New South Wales, the enclosed copy of a despatch from Governor Sir George Gipps, with a copy of his financial minute, laid before the Legislative Council on the 6th July 1841, and of the financial statements which accompanied it. Although the estimate of expenditure which accompany this despatch would, of course, be subject to revision in the Council, Lord Stanley has thought it right to place you in possession of these statements for your guidance in forming an estimate of the amount of revenue which may be available for emigration to the colony.

COPY of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Honourable E. E. Villiers to James Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 12 January 1842.

WE have not failed duly to attend to the subject of your letter of the 20th ultimo, enclosing Sir George Gipps's despatches, Nos. 137 and 138, of the 17th July 1841, and containing Lord Stanley's directions that we should furnish an estimate, as far as may be practicable, of the state of the land revenue of New South Wales for the year 1841, and of the probable balance which will remain applicable to emigration in the succeeding year, without having recourse to unusual measures. We have also adverted to the further information contained in Sir George Gipps's despatch of the 8th July last, enclosed in your letter of the 4th instant.

In obedience to the directions conveyed to us, we propose to take the actual balance in hand, and the actual rates of revenue and expenditure for the latest periods to which the authentic returns extend, and comparing these with the known amount of emigration on bounty, to exhibit the inferences which may be drawn, unless any considerable change should occur, as to the financial state of the colony this year. Without attempting to foretel fluctuations that may or may not arise, our endeavour will be to point out the results which a continuance of the existing data would produce.

With this preliminary remark, we have the honour to report as follows; annexing, for convenience of reference, a tabular statement of the principal amounts that will appear in figures.

By Sir George Gipps's despatch of the 17th July, it is reported that at that date there was a sum in the colonial treasury of about 240,000 l. From the nature of the terms in which it is mentioned, we suppose it may be taken for granted that this was a net balance in hand up to the date at which it was reported.

The land revenue, for the first half of the year, had been 66,482 l. 17 s. 6 d.; a sum, however, it is right to remark, very much less than the receipts for the corresponding part of the previous year. Supposing that the second half of the year would not be more productive than the first, it would at any rate yield 66,482 l. But we observe, in the estimate of the ways and means for 1841, laid before the Council by Sir George Gipps, and printed at p. 32 of the Parliamentary Paper, No. 81, of 1841, that a sum of 28,000 l. per annum was assumed as chargeable on the land revenue of the year, to meet the expenses of sales, surveys, and aborigines: one half, therefore, or 14,000 l., must be deducted from the second half-year's land revenue, reducing it from 66,482 l. to 52,482 l. This sum, added to the previously existing balance of 240,000 l., will constitute a total of 292,482 l.

Now there appears reason to consider this total as free of any demands on account of ordinary expenditure. In order to arrive at this conclusion, we refer to the estimates above cited, and find the following items in Sir George Gipps's list of the ways and means by which he provided for the expected expenditure:—

to

Ordinary revenue, as collected in 1839 - - - - - - -	244,777
Expected increase in 1841 - - - - - - - -	50,000
Then, after some other items which seem to fall under other denominations than ordinary revenue,—
Increase in the ad valorem duties, and in the duties on spirits - -	31,659
Total - - £.	326,436

These, then, are the only items which we should understand to come under the description of the ordinary revenue, as distinguished from Crown revenue; and their total, as will be seen, is 326,436*l.* But by Sir George Gipps's present despatch, No. 137, of the 17th of July, the actual revenue for the first half-year of 1841, from corresponding sources, appears to have been 161,433*l.*, being at a rate of only 3,570*l.* less than the previous estimate. In so general a view, therefore, as is here taken, it will probably be thought that the ordinary revenue and expenditure may, for practical purposes, be deemed equal; and that the amount of 292,482*l.*, arrived at in the preceding part of this letter, may be assumed to be entirely available for emigration services.

Next is to be considered the amount of liabilities under that head.

It is usual to allow four months for the passage to the colony. The number of emigrants on bounty who, according to this calculation, would arrive between the middle of July (when the Governor's despatch was written) and the 31st December 1841, would be 13,870. Taking the cost per head at the general average of 16*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.*, which would appear, from the particulars in the immigration agent's annual report, to have been the actual rate of expense in 1840, the disbursements to be made for these people would amount to 224,058*l.*

Deducting this from the available sum of 292,482*l.*, as above computed, there would remain at the end of the year 1841 a balance of 68,424*l.* in the colonial treasury.

We now proceed to the year 1842.

The land revenue for this year, at the same rate as the first half of 1841, which is the latest period reported, would be 132,964*l.*, subject, however, to a deduction for the probable expenses of sale, surveys, and aborigines, chargeable on the land revenues. We do not find a distinct estimate under these heads for 1842; but in the accounts for 1840, included amongst the enclosures of Sir George Gipps's despatch of 8th July 1841, which was communicated to us in your recent letter of the 4th instant, we observe that the actual expenditure for 1840 was 41,063*l.*, and we therefore assume a similar sum as the charge for 1842. Deducted from 132,964*l.*, it leaves an available land revenue of 91,901*l.*, which added to the balance of 68,414*l.* at the end of 1841, constitutes a total disposable sum of 160,325*l.*

Such being the resources, it remains to state the demands.

The emigrants who have sailed since the 1st September last, and may be expected therefore to arrive during the first three or four months of 1842, were 7,317. Their cost, at the above-mentioned average of 16*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* per head, would be 118,200*l.* Compared with the amount just shown to be available, it would leave a surplus, but one that would only accrue in the course of the year, and not be wholly available until the end, to the amount of 42,125*l.*

Sir George Gipps, in his despatch, No. 138 of 17th July, has forwarded a statement showing that 49,274*l.* is due to New South Wales for advances made to New Zealand. Whenever this sum may be repaid, it will of course form an addition to the general resources of New South Wales; but as there is no reason to doubt that these have been advances from the revenue at large, and not specially out of the land fund, it would not appear that, when recovered, they would increase the amount of the fund specifically applicable to immigration.

Such are the data, as far as existing materials will supply them, for determining at what time, and to what extent, emigration to New South Wales can be renewed.

We have, &c.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 12 January 1842.

Sir,

IN reference to our other letter of this day's date, on the financial affairs of New South Wales, we have the honour to request that you will bring under Lord Stanley's consideration the subject of the notice to be issued to the public, when a decision shall have been adopted on that Report.

The notice in the Royal Gazette, on the 6th of August last, stated that all orders for bounty which were to be acted upon during any current year, were to be produced at this office on or before the 1st of March. Some of the parties appear to construe this as meaning that ships might commence to be sent again at that period in the present year; and they have urged for final information, on the plea that some months are necessary to complete the selection and dispatch of large bodies of emigrants. Now, in his despatch of the 14th of October, Lord Stanley signified to the Governor his intention of announcing that no further emigration on bounty could be sanctioned until August 1842, at which time the reports from the colony after arrival of the whole number of emigrants already gone might be expected; but the execution of this intention was suspended till the collection of the more full and complete details which have now been obtained. When the decision to be founded upon them shall be adopted, we would apply for instructions upon the notice to be given to the public, which, we presume, will have to be issued by our office, through the Gazette, as on former occasions.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 7 February 1842.

I HAVE laid before Lord Stanley your letter of the 12th ultimo, containing a report of the state of the land revenue of New South Wales for the year 1841, and of the probable balance which would remain applicable to emigration in the succeeding year, without having recourse to unusual measures; and I am directed to transmit to you for your information, a copy of a despatch which his Lordship has addressed to Sir George Gipps, in reply to his despatch (No. 137) of the 17th July last, with reference to which your report was written.

You will perceive that Lord Stanley has intimated to Sir George Gipps the suspension for the present of further emigration on bounty orders to New South Wales.

I am therefore directed to transmit to you the form of a notice which Lord Stanley considers that it will be proper to insert in the Royal Gazette, in order that the public may be duly apprised of the determination of the Government on this subject.

Encl. in No. 8.

Office of Colonial Lands and Emigration,
9, Park-street, Westminster, 7 February 1842.

THE Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners have been instructed, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to issue the following notice:

1. The latest official advices from New South Wales, on the subject of finance, having shown reason to anticipate that, in consequence of the great extent of emigration on bounty last year, there will not be any disposable funds until a very advanced period of this year, and then only a very limited amount, emigration to New South Wales, free of expense, will continue to be suspended until further notice.

2. The orders of the Colonial Government for bounty, conditional upon the existence of funds available for their discharge, are cancelled; since it has become apparent that no means could accrue to provide for them, within the time to which such orders are limited.

3. All other orders or authorities for bounty are to be produced at the office of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, on or before the 1st of March next; but it is to be distinctly understood, that in calling for these orders, Her Majesty's Government does not pledge itself to any particular course respecting them, and only requires them to be produced, in order to ascertain the whole amount of permissions outstanding in this country for the introduction of emigrants, and to be the better enabled to determine what measures may hereafter become proper on the subject.

By order of the Board,
S. Walcott, Secretary.

Sir, Downing-street, 8 Feb. 1842.

I HAVE received your despatch (No. 137) of the 17th July last, containing a report of the amount of revenue actually received into the Treasury of the colony in the half-year ending the 30th of the preceding month.

On the receipt of that despatch, I called on the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners for an estimate, as far as might be practicable, of the state of the land revenue of the colony for the year 1841, and of the probable balance which would remain applicable to emigration in the succeeding year, without having recourse to unusual measures. I enclose for your information a copy of the report which I have received from the Commissioners upon that point. 12 January 1842.

On a full consideration of all the circumstances, I consider it necessary to suspend for the present further emigration on bounty orders. However desirable it it may be to keep up a continued supply of Emigrants to New South Wales, I cannot consent to anticipate its land revenues for that purpose; and looking to the very large addition which will have been made to its population in the course of the past and the commencement of the present year, I am strongly inclined to believe that the supply of labour furnished will have been at least equal to the demand, or at all events to such a demand as would realise the fair expectations of the emigrants.

13 September 1841.*

My Lord,

IN my despatch of the 31st January last, No. 29, I reported to your Lordship the extent to which this government had entered into engagements for the payment of bounties on emigrants brought to the colony by private individuals; and I also in the same despatch pointed out to your Lordship, that since the commencement of the month of December in 1840, care had been taken to enter into no absolute engagements, but to stipulate in every case that the bounties should be contingent on the state of our finances, and on the ability of the government to pay them.

I have now further to report, that I caused, on the 11th instant, a notification to be made to all the parties concerned, that it is probable the government may not be be able to pay bounties where they have been promised conditionally only; and that, at any rate, none can be paid until all the demands to which the government is liable on account of unconditional promises shall be satisfied.

This notification I have made very reluctantly, but for the following reasons I considered that it was required from me:—

1. Because a much more rapid immigration into the colony is now taking effect than was expected only a few months ago.

2. That our land sales have greatly fallen off in consequence of the commercial distress which has prevailed in the colony during the last year.

3. That a very decided opinion against the contracting of loans for the support of emigration has been expressed by your Lordship in some recent despatches to myself, as well as in documents laid by your Lordship before Parliament.

I cannot but be aware that the notice which I have now given, may have the effect of checking immigration in a greater degree than is required by the state of our finances, in which case dissatisfaction will in all probability be produced in the colony; and I am, consequently, induced to submit to your Lordship that some measures are much wanted to regulate the supply of emigrants, not so much to the demand which exists for them, as to our ability to pay for them.

In my despatch, No. 129, of the 9th September 1840, I suggested to your Lordship that the Land and Emigration Commissioners should watch the progress of the bounty system, and in the event of the annual supply under it falling short of 10,000 souls, that they should resort to Government emigration to make up the deficiency; the opposite evil, of a redundant supply, was not when I wrote that despatch within my contemplation, therefore I did not propose any measure for checking it; but the reason which suggested the one measure might equally suggest the other; and I would at any rate beg leave to submit to your Lordship, that in future years it may be equally desirable to check a redundant, as to make good a deficient, supply.

A well regulated immigration of from 8,000 to 10,000 souls, is what I consider essential for the prosperity of the colony, and what I believe also we shall be able to pay for.

The general tenor of my despatches on financial subjects, as well as particular passages which it is scarcely necessary to refer to, will, I trust, sufficiently have proved to your Lordship, that far from having any desire to encumber the colony with a loan, I have constantly been disinclined to the raising of one; I have, nevertheless, always admitted, that from the very fluctuating nature of the funds, out of which emigration is supported, those funds may, in some years, be insufficient to meet the expense of such an immigration as the colony requires; and I have considered that in the event of such being the case, it would not be improvident to anticipate our resources to an extent not exceeding the net average produce of one year of our land sales, and which may safely, I think, be taken at 100,000 l.

The immigration of the present year will, I trust, go far to remove the complaints which have of late been so general in the colony of the want of labour; and though, in attaining so desirable an object, some inconvenience ensue, I do not think we should shrink from encountering it.

Having still about 150,000 l. in hand, applicable to immigration, besides 40,000 l. due to the colony from Her Majesty's Government on account of New Zealand, I do not anticipate any immediate deficiency; and I shall not fail to report fully and frequently to your Lordship on everything connected with the important subjects of emigration and finance.

I have, &c.

My Lord, Government-house, Sydney, 13 September 1841.

THOUGH my last separate report on the state of the colony was dated only the 17th July last, I shall proceed again to address your Lordship on the same subject, as I consider that in the present condition of our affairs, your Lordship may desire to receive frequent communications from me.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

I lament to have to report, that the commercial distress and general want of money in the colony continues unabated; that many mercantile failures have occurred, and that still more are to be expected, as well as insolvencies amongst our settlers.

From a system indeed of nearly unbounded credit, the transition has been sudden to an almost total denial of it; and consequently persons who can no longer get accommodation at the banks, are obliged to dispose of such property as they may be possessed of, at very depreciated prices.

Owing, perhaps, to its having been the only ready-money dealer in the colony, the Government has not as yet participated in the distress; nor do I indeed apprehend any failure in our ordinary resources, greater than what we may easily be able to provide against.

In our extraordinary resources, on the other hand, or our land sales, there will certainly be a large falling off from what was the produce of last year, and consequently we may experience possibly some difficulty in meeting the very heavy engagements which we are under for the payment of bounties on immigration. The Council, however, and indeed the whole colony, is deeply pledged to support the Government in any measures that may be necessary for the support of public credit, and I shall not fail to make timely reports to your Lordship of any expedients that I may resort to.

In my last separate despatch, I stated to your Lordship that the project for the introduction of Coolies into the colony had been revived, and that the presentation of petitions on the subject would probably lead to the discussion of it in the Legislative Council.

I am happy now to be able to report, that the project found hardly any support in the Council, and that it may be considered, for the present at least, as set aside, if not abandoned.

The news of the division in the House of Commons on Mr. Grote's motion in April last, respecting the police and gaols of the colony, reached us a few days ago; and I am happy in being able to think that it will act advantageously for my Government, so far, that is to say, as at least to settle men's minds on the subject, and to lead them to look to the way in which the expenses may, by possibility, be diminished, rather than to continue in the hope, so long indulged in, that the Home Government would be ultimately forced to take upon itself a part of them.

The pecuniary distress now existing, though it may reduce many men to poverty, who but lately were esteemed rich, is not, I think, of a character ultimately to affect the prosperity of the colony; and I am happy to say there is nothing else of a discouraging nature in the aspect of our affairs.

The very rapid immigration now taking place is fast reducing the hitherto exorbitant price of labour; and I greatly hope that the complaints, which have of late years been so constant, of the want of labourers, will shortly be less loud in the colony.

The session of the Legislative Council has been a very easy one; and as the Appropriation Bill has now passed, it would be fast drawing to a close, were it not that the commercial distress has produced a call for a bankrupt law, which, when it was proposed to them last year, the merchants declared they did not want.

On the rising of the Council it is my intention to visit Port Phillip.

I am most happy to have received from your Lordship an order for the discontinuance of special surveys.

The contraction of credit, and consequent scarcity of money in the colony, has had, I am happy to say, at least the good effect of limiting very considerably the demand for surveys of this nature, only seven having been demanded; whereas if the regulation which sanctioned them had been in force during the speculative times of last year, I have no doubt that four or five times that number would have been applied for.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir George Gipps to Lord John Russell.

Government House, Sydney,
2 November 1841.

My Lord,

IN the series of despatches named in the margin, written during the present year, on the subjects of emigration and finance, I have endeavoured to place before your Lordship a correct view of all the proceedings of this Government in respect to these important matters; and in my two despatches, especially, of the 13th September (marked No. 175, and separate), I pointed out the probability that emigrants may arrive in the course of the next few months faster than, on account of the great diminution which has taken place in our land sales, we may be able to pay for them.

I now enclose a return of the immigrants landed in the colony (including Port Phillip) since the commencement of the present year, and of the bounties and other expenses already paid, or now due upon them, by which your Lordship will perceive, that including authorized gratuities, and quarantine expenses, the total sum either paid, or in course of payment, on account of immigration, during the part of the year already elapsed, amounts to upwards of 251,000 l., whilst the produce of the land fund during the same period (after deduction of the authorized charges on it, for surveys, aborigines, &c.) amounts only to about 50,000 l.

The great drain upon our resources, occasioned by these expenses, has so reduced the funds in our treasury, that after payment of all that is now due, and reserving only a reasonable sum for other services, I cannot reckon on having more than about 40,000 l. applicable to the further purposes of immigration, in addition to the sum of about 43,000 l. owing to us on account of New Zealand; and even this latter sum is not available until I receive authority to draw for it on the Lords of the Treasury.

Immigration in the meantime continues to go on very rapidly, and it is impossible for me to calculate, with any degree of certainty, on the sum which may be required during the next few months to meet the expenses of it, it being, as I have had occasion formerly to observe to your Lordship, the real inconvenience of the bounty system, that whilst we are bound to pay for all emigrants that may arrive, we have no certainty whatsoever whether they will arrive or not.

Deeply impressed as I am with the extreme importance of immigration to this colony, I feel still so sensibly the inconvenience of encumbering the Government with any considerable amount of debt, that I consider it my duty to invite your Lordship's interference for the purpose of preventing too extensive an immigration from England to this colony during the year 1842.

Where parties may have made arrangements for sending out emigrants, or incurred expenses on the faith of unconditional promises made by this Government, I consider we are in honour bound to receive the emigrants, and pay the bounties that may be due on them; but without any breach of faith, I think your Lordship's authority may be interposed in such a manner as to limit the emigration of 1842, to an amount that it may not be inconvenient to us to have to meet.

In my despatch of the 13th September last (No. 175), I stated that an immigration of from 8,000 to 10,000 souls per annum, would be about what we might require, and be able to pay for; but the continued depression of all the monied interests in the colony, and the consequent decrease in our land revenue, now causes me to think that the emigration of 1842 ought not to exceed, even if it amount to half that number.

It is my duty next to place before your Lordship the course which I propose to adopt, in order to meet the expenses of immigration, during the period which must elapse before I can receive any further instructions from your Lordship.

The raising of a moderate loan for the purpose of maintaining immigration has always been in the contemplation of the government and legislature of this colony, and has often been brought under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, especially in my despatches of the 31st of October 1838, (No. 177,) and the 22d of November 1839 (No. 157); and in the latter of these despatches a plan for the raising of a loan was detailed, which, though it has never been authorized, was not objected to either by your Lordship or the Lords of the Treasury.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Following up so much of the plan as it may be in my power to adopt, I propose to issue debentures in sums of 100 l. each, in the nature of Exchequer bills, bearing interest at the rate of 4 d. per diem (about six per cent. per annum), and to make the bills, and interest accruing on them, payable in London, through the agency (if it can be obtained) of the bank of Australasia; and I propose to do this under the sanction of an Act of Council, and on the security of the ordinary revenue of the colony, as without the express consent of the Crown the Council can have no right to pledge in any manner the land fund, which is the revenue of the Crown.

As I have no authority to draw on the Lords of the Treasury, or on the commissariat chest in the colony, even for the money due to us on account of New Zealand, it is not my intention to resort to either of these measures; but I trust I may express a confident hope that the debentures issued by me may be taken up and paid off by the Lords of the Treasury, to the extent of the debt owing to us (about 43,000 l.) on account of New Zealand, and that such further guarantee may be given on account of the land fund of the colony, as may enable us in as short a time as possible to reduce the interest on our debentures from 6 per cent. to 4.

For the reasons already given it is not in my power to estimate the extent to which it may be necessary to issue these debentures; but by the help of the document which I enclose, it will not be difficult in England to make an approximate calculation of it.

The Commissioners of Emigration are regularly informed of all ships leaving England with emigrants for this colony, as also of the number of emigrants they carry; the bounties, therefore, on all the vessels which are not included in the list sent herewith, may easily be estimated; and if from the amount of these bounties, the sum of about 40,000 l. be deducted, the remainder will be the sum for which I may be under the necessity of issuing debentures.

As for instance: supposing the number of ships which may have left the United Kingdom, since those named in the list, to be 30, and the average number of emigrants (men, women, and children) in each ship to be 300, the total number will be 9,900, which, at 16 l. per head, will be 144,000 l.; and if from this sum be deducted the 40,000 l. which we have in hand, the amount for which debentures must be issued will be 104,000 l.; from which again if the sum of 43,000 l. be deducted, which is due to us on account of New Zealand, there will remain as a debt the sum only of 61,000 l.; and this debt, I have no doubt, even in the present depressed state of the colony, we shall be able to pay in the course of a year or two.

In conclusion, I have only to request your Lordship's attention to the fact, that this debt is to be incurred solely on account of immigration, and that I shall continue to use my best endeavours to keep the ordinary expenses of the colony within its ordinary income, as has been the case for the last two years.

I have, &c.

30th Nov. 1841.

IN my despatch, No. 212, of the 2d ult., I reported to your Lordship the measures which I had in contemplation, in order to meet the expenses of immigration into this colony from the United Kingdom; and I have now the honour to enclose a copy of a Minute on the subject, which I yesterday laid before the Legislative Council.

I cannot but deeply lament, that a necessity should have arisen for the measure which I propose; but in my Minute to the Council, I have so fully explained the causes which have led to it, that it seems to me unnecessary to dwell further on them in this despatch.

I regret to have to state, that the commercial embarrassment of the colony, and the consequent depression of all interests in it, continues unabated.

I have, &c.

LAND AND EMIGRATION DEBENTURES.

MINUTE of his Excellency the Governor, to the Legislative Council, on presenting a Bill to secure on the Ordinary Revenue of the Colony the payment of DEBENTURES issued to meet the expenses of IMMIGRATION.

IN laying before the Council a Bill to secure upon the ordinary revenues of the colony the payment of debentures proposed to be issued for the support of immigration, I feel it incumbent on me to state in the fullest and most explicit manner, the circumstances which have compelled me to have recourse to the measure.

The importance of immigration to the colony of New South Wales is so generally admitted, and has been so often insisted on in the public declarations of the Council, that it may perhaps appear unnecessary to enlarge upon it; there is however one circumstance peculiarly affecting the colony of New South Wales, which it seems to me scarcely possible too often to point out, and which I must accordingly for an instant dwell upon; it is, that immigration is not only desired in New South Wales, as elsewhere, for the purpose of increasing the population, or of opening new sources of wealth, but that in New South Wales

Wales immigration has been, since the discontinuance of transportation, required, in order to maintain the industry of the colony in a state even of ordinary progression, the disproportion of the sexes, or the preponderance of males, having been such, when transportation ceased, that the colony barely possessed within itself the means of keeping up its population at its then existing numbers.

The absolute necessity of resorting to immigration being thus universally felt, it followed as a legitimate consequence, and was indeed admitted as an inevitable deduction, that immigration was to be maintained at any sacrifice; and that in the event of the funds specially appropriated to defray the expenses of it proving insufficient, to produce of those funds should be in some manner or other anticipated.

The principal public documents which prove that such was the decided opinion of the Council, and of the colony, I will briefly refer to.

The report of the Immigration Committee, which state in the year 1838, shows that the committee had before it a project for raising in eight years, by way of loan, the sum of two millions sterling; and in a letter addressed to the chairman and members of the committee, appended to their report, signed by 181 gentlemen of the first consideration in the colony, that proposal was strongly urged upon the attention of the Council. The committee reported generally in favour of a loan, but did not specially recommend the amount at which it should be fixed.

Immigration Report of 1839, pp. 13 to 16, and Appendix (H.) and (K.)

The Immigration Committee of 1839 again recommended a loan; and the report of the committee having been taken into consideration, on the 19th of November in that year, the following resolution was (amongst others) passed by the whole Council, nemine dissentiente:—

"1. Resolved, that this Council, having had under consideration the report presented to them on the 12th instant, by the committee appointed to inquire into and report on the subject of immigration, concur in, and adopt the opinions expressed by their committee, as to the necessity of continuing immigration on an extensive scale; and the Council further concur in the recommendation of the committee, that in the event of the funds now applicable to immigration being found insufficient, measures should be taken for raising money in England, by way of loan, on the security of the land revenue of the colony, (with the additional security, if necessary, of the ordinary revenue of the colony,) to any extent not exceeding 125,000 l. in each of the next eight succeeding years; and the assent of Her most gracious Majesty be solicited for the secure and unalterable appropriation of such a portion of the land revenue as may be required for the payment of the interest on such loan; and also for providing a sinking fund, at the rate of five per cent. per annum upon all sums so borrowed, to accumulate for the extinguishment of the entire debt within 15 years from the date of the first loan.

In 1840 the same committee reported as strongly as before on the urgent necessity of encouraging and supporting immigration on an extensive scale; but as the produce of the land revenue was in that year sufficient to cover the whole expense of maintaining it, the committee did not enter on the subject of a loan.

Amongst the resolutions of the Council, however, which were passed in that year, on the subject of immigration, the following is to be found, being No. 15 of the series of resolutions adopted nemine dissentiente, on the 23d of October 1840, on the motion of Mr. Jones.

"15. Resolved, That as, in the opinion of this Council, the continued influx of eligible emigrants will, in proportion to their number, increase the demand for land, enhance its value, and replenish the fund applicable to the encouragement of emigration, no temporary deficiency in its amount (the reverse of which is happily the case at present) should be allowed to interrupt the requisite supply of labour; and this Council would therefore express an earnest hope, that Her Majesty's Government will, at all times, be ready to assist this important dependency of the Crown, in a matter so materially affecting its interests, under a full assurance of the certain and speedy reimbursement of any advance which may be made for promoting so vital an object."

And, lastly, on the 25th August, in the present year, the Council having again adopted and confirmed the Report of its Committee on Immigration, passed a resolution very similar to that which has just been extracted from the proceedings of the 23d October 1840, with this difference however, that the concluding paragraph of the resolution of 1841 ran thus:—

"And this Council therefore guarantees to the utmost of its ability, a speedy reimbursement of such sums as the Government may find it necessary to advance in anticipation, towards promoting an object of such vital importance."

The measures adopted by myself to carry into effect the wishes of the Council are next to be stated, in so far, that is to say, as they are connected with the project of a loan.

On the 31st October 1838, I transmitted to the Secretary of State the Report of the Immigration Committee of that year, in a despatch, No. 177. That despatch was printed in the Parliamentary Paper, No. 536, of the Session of 1839, and from it I extract the following passages:—

"As the subject of emigration, and the appropriation to it of the proper funds, is one of intense interest in the colony, I shall be happy to receive from your Lordship explicit instructions in respect to it. Your Lordship will perceive that the question has been raised of providing funds for carrying on emigration on a large scale, by means of a loan, and that the committee is not disposed to view the proposal with disfavour. I must confess it would be with regret that I should see anything like a perpetual debt entailed on the colony; and although the committee has proposed to redeem the amount of it in a certain number of years, experience has, I think, taught us not to put much faith in calculations of that sort, or in the contrivances of sinking funds. I cannot also but apprehend that it would be extremely difficult to administer the government of this colony with proper economy in the midst of the fictitious wealth which would be produced by a loan. Already the reputation of having a well-filled treasury has caused demands upon the Government, which it is extremely difficult to withstand, but which, if not checked, will lead us to bankruptcy.

"All I can myself undertake at present to recommend is, that immigration should be kept up for another year or two at its present rate, and that if our funds prove insufficient to meet it, we should rather have recourse to a loan than put a stop to it. I am disposed however to think that we should, even in that case, measure the sum to be borrowed by the demand for immigration, rather than fix the amount of the loan (which it has been proposed to do at 2,000,000 l.), and regulate our importation of immigrants in such a manner as to spend the amount of it in a given number of years."

The report of the committee of 1839 was transmitted to the Secretary of State with my despatch, No. 164, of the 4th December 1839, which despatch has also been published in the Parliamentary Paper, No. 612, of 1840. Having, however, on the 22d of the preceding month of November, sent home a specific project for raising a loan (as is presently to be mentioned), I did not, in my despatch of the 4th December, do more than refer to that project.

The Immigration Report of 1840 was forwarded by me to the Secretary of State in a despatch of the 9th of September of that year, No. 129, which has been printed in the Parliamentary Paper, No. 241, of the Session of 1841.

From this despatch I extract the following passages:—

"By carefully watching the progress of emigration under the bounty system, the Emigration Board in London will, it is hoped, be enabled to judge of the extent to which Government emigration should be thus resorted to, as a supplement to that on the bounty system, and I would myself beg leave to suggest, that whenever the supply under the bounty system may appear to fall short of the proportion of about 10,000 souls per annum, the Commissioners should endeavour to make up the complement.

"Our land revenue bids fair at present to be able fully to meet the expenses of such an immigration; but as this revenue is subject to great fluctuations, I would beg leave to suggest, that immigration should be carried on independently of any consideration, either of its actual or expected amount; and I would further beg to refer your Lordship to my despatch of the 22d November, 1839 (No. 157), to show that there is no sacrifice which the people of this colony are not prepared to make, and no security which they are not ready to offer, in order to procure the supply of labour which they so unanimously concur in thinking essential to the continued prosperity of the colony."

The receipt of my despatch, No. 177, of the year 1838, was acknowledged by the Secretary of State, on the 28th May 1839, in a despatch, with which two documents were transmitted for my guidance. The first of these was a letter from the agent-general for emigration to the under Secretary of State, dated the 22d April 1839; the second, a Treasury letter of the 21st May 1839; and they are both printed in the Parliamentary Paper, No. 536, of 1839.

The following is an extract from the letter from the agent-general for emigration:—

"So far as my opinion may be required on this proposal, I would state, that I entirely concur in the inconvenience of putting a check to the newly created flow of emigration to New South Wales, and in the event of the proper funds proving inadequate to its maintenance at its present rate, I feel no doubt that the best remedy, both in regard to the interest of the colony and to the ultimate good of the revenue itself, would be not to curtail the amount of emigration, but to borrow the necessary funds for its continuance on the credit of the future receipts from land. But having submitted this opinion in general terms, I am unwilling to proceed further at present, because I believe a report of the Council on the whole subject of emigration, probably including this topic, may be daily expected from the colony."

The following is the letter from the Secretary to the Treasury:—

"Sir, "Treasury Chambers, 21 May 1839.

"With reference to your letter of the 30th ultimo, and the report from the agent-general for emigration therein enclosed, urging the expediency of encouraging emigration to New South Wales this year, to the same extent as during the last year, I it have in command from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to request you will acquaint the Marquis of Normanby, that adverting to the representations against any present diminution of the expenditure for promoting emigration, which are stated to have been submitted to his Lordship, and to the consideration that from the large accumulation which had occurred of funds applicable to that purpose, the means of meeting emigration expenditure during the greater part of the present year to the same extent as last year are already provided, my Lords conceive that it may be advisable that emigration to that extent should be continued for the present year; but I am to request you will further observe to his Lordship, that this concurrence of my Lords in the suggestion of the agent-general is given without any reference to the loan which has been suggested for this object, any proposition respecting which must necessarily be accompanied by very explicit information as to the arrangements the local Government would feel enabled to make for securing a due payment of interest and liquidation of the principal.

"I am, &c.

This

This letter was received by me on the 28th September 1839, and as required by it, I transmitted on the 22d of the following November, a detailed project of the way or ways in which, in case of necessity, I proposed to raise money for defraying the expenses of immigration.

No decision has ever been received by me on this proposal, the reason of which probably is, that on the 30th of the following June, in a despatch which has also been printed in the Parliamentary Paper, No. 81, of the present year, I reported that our land revenue had, during the first six months of 1840, so greatly and unexpectedly increased, that the raising of money by way of loan, for the support of immigration, during 1840 would be unnecessary.

The documents from which I have made these extracts sufficiently prove, that even before wages had risen to the rate which they attained in the year 1840, the necessity was felt and admitted, of maintaining immigration on a great scale, and even, if necessary, of resorting to a loan in support of it.

When wages, however, rose to the price which they attained in 1840, the necessity of increasing immigration in a still more rapid manner, in order to reduce the price of labour, became apparent, and such an immigration was more loudly called for than before.

The bounty system of emigration, which the colonists were nearly unanimous in preferring to any other, had, up to that period, been in the hands almost of a single individual in England; and the supply afforded by him was not equal to the wants of the colony. In order, therefore, to induce other parties to engage in the business of bringing to New South Wales emigrants from the United Kingdom, the bounties were, on the recommendation of the Council, considerably increased in the month of March 1840.

This measure had the desired effect; numerous applications for permission to import immigrants were addressed to the local government, and were very generally complied with, it being considered next to impossible that immigrants could arrive in the colony, within the two years for which the permissions were granted, faster than the colony would require them. Even if the emigrants themselves could be obtained, it was considered that ships to convey them to the colony could not be procured, without so raising the cost of freight and conveyance, as to make the speculation on the parts of the importers an unprofitable one.

Towards the end, however, of 1840, circumstances occurred which induced me to look with some anxiety on the extent to which I had, on the part of the Government, made engagements for the payment of bounties on immigrants; and I determined shortly afterwards to issue no more unconditional promises of bounties.

The circumstances which led me to take an altered view of our affairs, in the latter part of the year 1840, are now to be stated.

Up to the month of October, in that year, the proceeds of our land sales were large beyond all precedent. One sale alone realized, in the Port Phillip district, upwards of 104,000 l.; and the proceeds of the 10 months ended on the 31st of October 1839, amounted to the large sum of 313,628 l. 18 s. 1 d. The ordinary revenue of the colony had moreover increased, during the same period, to such an extent, that the whole of the land revenue, deducting only the authorized charges upon it, might reasonably be looked upon as applicable to immigration.

With a land revenue of 300,000 l. a year, it seemed scarcely possible to carry on immigration too rapidly, nor was any decrease in that revenue then apprehended, as, in addition to the newly opened districts of Port Phillip and Portland Bay, fresh lands in the northern parts of the colony, at the Clarence River, and Moreton Bay, were about to be thrown open to location, for which purchasers were known to stand ready.

In the month of November, however, these flattering prospects began gradually to fade away.

By instructions under the sign-manual, which have been published, both in England and in the colony, I was prohibited from opening the new lands on the Clarence River, and at Moreton Bay, to which I had looked confidently for a large accession of revenue. I was equally prohibited from selling land in the county of Macquarie, in which good lands remain unsold to a greater extent than in any of the counties which now form the middle district of the colony.

In carrying into effect the same instructions, I also found myself forced to reserve from sale the most valuable lands in the Port Phillip district, that is to say, the lands which lie within five miles of the towns of Melbourne, Geelong, and Portland, in order to prevent their falling into the hands of purchasers at the utterly inadequate price of 1 l. per acre.

In the months, moreover, of October and November, 1840, the first appearances disclosed themselves, of that commercial distress which has since fallen so heavily on the colony; and which, by creating a great scarcity of money, has greatly diminished the ability of the colonists to purchase land.

The revenue derived from the sale of land in the whole of the year 1840, was 316,626 l. 7 s. 5 d., that of the 11 months already elapsed in 1841, is only 84,145 l. 5 s. 7 d.

Meanwhile the impulse given to the bounty system in March 1840, has been producing its full effect, and an effect even greater than was expected from it, as the freight of vessels from the United Kingdom to Australia does not seem to have increased in the ratio that was anticipated, in consequence of so largely an increased demand; a circumstance which is, I believe, to be attributed to the depressed state of commerce at home, and particularly of the trade between England and America.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

The increased popularity of New South Wales, amongst the emigrating classes at home, has also, I have reason to believe, enabled the bounty agents generally to obtain some payments from the emigrants themselves, and thus to increase their profits, which increase has again, of course, tended to bring new speculators into the trade. Could these two circumstances have been foreseen, the increase in the bounties of March 1840, at the time so generally and loudly called for, might perhaps have been unnecessary.

The total number of immigrants introduced on bounty into the colony was, in 1840, 6,697, and in 1841, up to the present date, it is 16,612.

The money expended on immigration was, in 1840*, 148,314 l. 17 s., and up to the present date in 1841 (when everything now due is paid), it will be 276,682 l. 14 s. 9 d.

If everything now due for immigration were paid, the money remaining in our treasury for the service of every department of government, would be under 60,000 l.

There is due to us indeed the sum of about 40,000 l. from New Zealand, and of 3,000*l.* from South Australia; but I have no authority to draw for these amounts.

It is not in my power to estimate with any approximation to correctness, the sums which may be required to meet the expenses of immigration during the next 12 months, it being the chief, and perhaps the only inconvenience of the bounty system, that whilst the Government is bound to pay for all immigrants who may be brought to the colony, under unconditional promises of bounty, there is no corresponding obligation on the part of the importers to bring them.

On the 11th September last, I issued a circular notice to all persons who had received conditional promises of bounty, warning them, that it was very probable the Government would not be in a condition to pay them. This notice will, it may be presumed, have the effect of greatly checking immigration; and in issuing it, I could not but feel apprehensive, that it might have this effect in a greater degree than would be salutary to the colony.

Nevertheless, seeing the contents of our treasury so rapidly decreasing, I judged it further necessary to address the Secretary of State on the subject; and accordingly, in a despatch which left this colony on the 4th instant, and may be expected to arrive in England in the first days of March, I suggested that measures should be taken to limit the emigration from the United Kingdom to New South Wales, chargeable on the funds of the colony, in the year 1842, to the number of about 4,000 or 5,000 souls. Should arrangements have been made in England prior to the arrival of my despatch, for the emigration of a greater number, or expenses incurred by parties who have received unconditional promises of bounties, I need scarcely, however, observe, that the Government is bound to receive the immigrants, and pay the bounties on them.

I have often expressed in Council, and in my despatches to the Secretary of State, the extreme reluctance with which I could ever propose or consent to a measure tending to encumber this colony with a debt; and I have not failed to take into consideration the chances which may even now exist of my being able to avoid the necessity of incurring one, by bringing forward land for sale, and especially the valuable lands, either in Sydney or its neighbourhood, which still remain the property of the Crown; but on a full consideration of all the circumstances in which I am placed, I have determined rather to come to the Council with the measure which I now propose, than to have recourse to any expedients which might be injurious to the permanent interests of the colony.

The plan which I propose is, that the debentures to be issued for the support of immigration shall be secured on and paid out of the ordinary revenue of the colony; if not satisfied within three years, out of the land fund. That the debentures, as also the interest on them, not exceeding the rate of six per cent. per annum, shall be payable in London; that none shall be issued for any other purpose than immigration, nor until the funds in the local treasury shall be less than 50,000 l.; that none shall be issued after the 31st December 1842; and that the total sum for which they are issued shall never exceed 200,000 l.

I further propose, that the debentures themselves shall be taken at any time in payment for land.

In proposing that the Council should give to these debentures the ultimate security of the ordinary revenue of the colony, in addition to that which they will primarily bear, of the land revenue, it is scarcely necessary for me to observe, that I ask no more than the Council has spontaneously and repeatedly offered; nor do I ask for more than is in itself just, since the ordinary revenue of the colony has often been assisted out of the land revenue, and may be considered, at the present time, as greatly indebted to it. It is not, however, on either of these arguments that I rely in bringing forward my present proposal, so much as on the fact that the measure which I submit to the Council is one essential to the interests of the colony. Believing it to be so, I confidently leave the measure in the hands of the Council.

30 November 1841.

George Gipps.

P.S.—With this minute I lay upon the table a return of the immigration of the present year.

Audit Office, Sydney, New South Wales,
30 November 1841.

William Lithgow,
Auditor-general.

5 VICTORIA, 1841.

A BILL to secure on the Ordinary Revenue of the Colony of New South Wales, the payment of Debentures to be issued, to a limited amount, by the Governor thereof, in support of Immigration.

Preamble.

WHEREAS the funds arising from the territorial revenue of the colony of New South Wales are at present insufficient to provide for the introduction into the said colony of a supply of labour adequate to the wants which exist in all branches of its industry, and it is therefore expedient to make further provision for defraying the expense of importing emigrants from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and whereas it is necessary in order to secure the negotiation upon advantageous terms, of any promissory notes or debentures which may be issued by his Excellency the Governor of New South Wales for this purpose, that, in addition to such security as may be sanctioned by Her most Gracious Majesty on the territorial revenue of the said colony, further security for the payment of the same should be granted upon the ordinary revenue of the said colony: Be it therefore enacted by his Excellency the Governor of New South Wales, with the advice of the Legislative Council thereof, that from and after the passing of this Act, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor for the time being of the said colony, to issue, or cause to be issued, debentures, in the form or to the effect set forth in the schedule to this Act annexed, for sums of 100*l.* each, or for any number of hundreds of pounds, bearing interest at any rate not exceeding 4*d.* per 100*l.* per diem, upon and in respect of the whole of the monies contained therein respectively; and the principal sum contained in every such debenture, together with such interest as aforesaid, to be computed from the date of the issue thereof, shall be paid off and discharged in the manner and at the times respectively appointed for the payment thereof in the schedule to this Act annexed; provided however, that the total amount of such of the said debentures as may be outstanding and unpaid, shall never at any one time exceed the sum of 200,000*l.*; and provided also, that no such debenture shall be issued after the 31st day of December 1842.

The Governor empowered to issue debentures.

2. And be it enacted, that no such debenture shall be issued for a period longer than three years from the date of the issue thereof; but if any such debenture shall not have been presented for payment at the expiration of three years from the date of the issue thereof, such debenture shall nevertheless continue to bear interest, at the rate aforesaid, until the same shall be presented for payment, and be paid, unless a notice shall have been previously published, by order of the Governor for the time being of the said colony, in the Government Gazette thereof, and in the London Gazette, requiring that all such debentures as shall then be, or have been outstanding and unpaid for a period longer than three years from the date of the issue thereof respectively, or such as shall be so outstanding and unpaid, and shall become due at any time within the six months next following the date of such notice, to be presented for payment within six months from the date of such notice, or within six months after the day on which they shall respectively become due, and further requiring all debentures not becoming due until after the expiration of the said period of six months from the date of the said notice, to be presented for payment upon their becoming due; and all such debentures as shall not be so presented for payment, shall cease to bear interest from and after the date on which the same should have been respectively presented for payment, in conformity with such notice.

Period for which they are to be issued, three years.

Notice when they are to be called in.

3. And be it enacted, that the payment of all debentures which may be issued as aforesaid, together with the interest accruing thereon, or so much of the same as may not, under the sanction of Her Majesty, be paid or satisfied out of the territorial revenue of the colony of New South Wales, shall be a charge on the ordinary revenue of the said colony; and it shall be lawful for the Governor thereof for the time being, to cause the same to be paid out of the said ordinary revenue, in the manner, and at the times herein appointed for the payment of such debentures and the interest thereon.

Payment of debentures (if required) to be defrayed out of the ordinary revenue of the colony.

4. And be it enacted, that for the purpose of security, and in order to render the said debentures more easily negotiable, they may and shall be prepared and executed in duplicate: provided however, that the duplicates of the said debentures shall be kept either in the colonial treasury at Sydney, or in the hands of the agent, to be appointed as aforesaid, in London, and that the said duplicates shall only be issued upon such proof as may be deemed satisfactory of the loss or destruction of the originals: provided further, that the person or persons so receiving the said duplicates, do give security to the Governor of New South Wales, or to the agent in London aforesaid, to be approved of by the said Governor or agent, to pay into the receipt of the colonial treasury in Sydney, or of the agent in London, as the case may be, for the use of the fund for which this Act is passed, so much money as shall have become due and be paid upon the original debenture stated to have been lost, if at any time after the payment of such duplicate, such original debenture shall be presented for payment and be paid, together with any additional interest and expenses which may arise by reason of the payment of such duplicate.

Debentures to be executed in duplicate.

Debentures paid off not to be re-issued.

5. And be it enacted, that no debenture which shall have been once satisfied or paid off, shall be re-issued, but the same shall be cancelled, in such manner, and in the presence of such persons as the said Governor may appoint.

Limiting the issue of debentures to the purposes of immigration.

6. And be it enacted, that no debenture shall be issued under the authority of this Act, for any other purpose than that of defraying the expense of importing emigrants into the colony of New South Wales from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or other expenses attendant on their importation; provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall restrain, or prohibit the negotiation or disposal by sale, assignment, or otherwise, of any number of debentures which it may be necessary to issue for the purpose of defraying the expenses of immigration as aforesaid.

Debentures to be registered, and the numbers issued or paid off, to be published monthly.

7. And be it enacted, that all debentures issued under the authority of this Act shall be numbered and registered; and that an account shall be published monthly in the Government Gazette of the said colony, showing from time to time the number, amounts, and dates of issue, of all debentures issued, and the like particulars of all debentures paid off or satisfied.

Penalty on forging debentures, &c. felony.

8. And be it enacted, that if any person shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any debenture, or any indorsement on, or assignment of any such debenture, issued under and by virtue of this Act, with intent to defraud any person whomsoever, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be transported beyond seas for the term of his natural life.

George Gipps, Governor.

NEW SOUTH WALES LAND AND EMIGRATION DEBENTURE.

THE Governor of the colony of New South Wales and its dependencies doth hereby acknowledge, that the government of the said colony is indebted to A. B. the sum of 100 l., on account of the expense incurred in importing emigrants from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland into the said colony. And by virtue of an Act of the Governor and Legislative Council of the said colony, passed in the 5th year of the reign of Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, "An Act to secure on the Ordinary Revenue of the Colony of New South Wales, the payment of Debentures to be issued, to a limited amount, by the Governor thereof, in support of Immigration;" the said Governor doth hereby acknowledge and declare, that if the said debt of 100 l. be not paid or satisfied within the term of three years, reckoned from the date of the issue hereof, out of the territorial revenue of the said colony, the same shall be considered a debt, chargeable on, and shall be payable, and be paid out of the ordinary revenue of the said colony. And the said Governor doth further declare, that this debenture shall bear interest from the day of the issue thereof at the rate of 4 d. per 100 l. per diem, and that the interest at that rate due thereon, shall from the date of the issue thereof be payable, and be paid on presentation hereof, half yearly, that is to say, on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December in every year, at the colonial treasury in Sydney, or at , in London. And the said Governor doth lastly declare, that this debenture is issued for the period of three years, from the date of the issue thereof, and that it will not be called in or paid off until the expiration of that period, except with the consent of the holder thereof, but that at any time after the expiration of such three years it shall be paid, if presented for payment, or it may be called in and paid, provided that six months' notice of the intention of so calling it in and paying it off shall have been published in the London Gazette and in the Government Gazette of the colony of New South Wales. And if this debenture shall not be presented for payment within six months from the date of such notice, the same shall cease to bear interest from the expiration of the term of such notice.

Given under the hand of the Governor of New South Wales, and the Seal of the Colony, this day of

G. G.

Countersigned E. D. T. Colonial Secretary.
W. L. Auditor General.

I hereby declare that this debenture was issued by me on the day of and that it bears interest from that day, at the rate of

No. 15.
Sir Geo. Gipps to Lord John Russell, 11 December 1841.

(No. 230.—Executive.)

My Lord, Government House, Sydney, 11 Dec. 1841.

As I am informed that no vessel is likely to proceed to England direct from this port during the course of the next few weeks, I avail myself of the opportunity of a ship about to sail for Madras to forward to your Lordship, by the overland mail from India, copies of my despatches of the 22d ult., and 1st inst., Nos. 212 and 226; and to report to your Lordship, that it is probable the Bill which I presented to the Legislative Council on the 30th ult. will not be proceeded with, but that other means will be resorted to for procuring the money which may be required by the Government to meet the expenses of immigration during the next few months.

The committee of the Legislative Council to which the Debenture Bill was referred has not yet reported; but their proceedings have led to an offer of money from the banks, which, I understand, the committee will recommend me to accept. The committee will also, I believe, press me very earnestly to draw upon Her Majesty's Government for the sum due to us for advances to New Zealand (about 40,000 l.), and to proceed to sell the reserved lands at Port Phillip, and to open the Clarence River and Moreton Bay.

Notwithstanding the continuance of great commercial distress, and the consequent scarcity of money in the colony, I am happy to state that I think our prospects during the last ten days have improved.

Intelligence has reached the colony (which, though not official, I have reason to believe authentic), that in consequence of directions from the Commissioners of Land and Emigration, the emigration from England for the present year was to end on the 31st October; and I have, for the purpose of trying the market, advertised the sale of some land in Sydney in the months of February and March next, though at upset prices sufficient to guard against their being sold too cheap.

The season has, I am happy to say, been, on the whole, a favourable one; the hay and wheat harvest is nearly complete, the maize promises well, and there is generally an abundant supply of grass for sheep and cattle.

The last accounts from England (down to the 20th August) having brought better reports of the price of wool, have tended also to revive confidence in the public; and I am glad, in conclusion, to say, that the country was never more free from party spirit, or from any desire to oppose or thwart the Government.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 11 April 1842.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you for any suggestions and observations which you may have to offer, the enclosed copies of two despatches from the Governor of New South Wales, No. 175, of the 13th of September 1841 (p. 16), on the subject of the financial condition of the colony as connected with immigration, and a despatch of the same date, marked "Separate," reporting that the commercial distress and general want of money in the colony continues unabated (p. 17).

Lord Stanley would call your particular attention to the passage in the former despatch, in which the Governor suggests that the progress of the bounty system should be carefully watched. To that end, it will doubtless occur to you that it is absolutely necessary that the late regulations which require the Governor to transmit to the Secretary of State copies of all bounty orders issued should be rigidly enforced.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,

Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 13 April 1842.

IN obedience to Lord Stanley's directions contained in your two letters of the 11th instant, we have perused and carefully examined the despatches therein enclosed from Sir George Gipps, of the dates and numbers enumerated in the margin, respecting the financial state of the colony, and progress of immigration.

No. 175, of 13th September 1841.
Separate of 13th September 1841.
No. 212, of 2d November 1841.
No. 226, of 1st December 1841.
No. 230, of 11th December 1841.

The points to which we thought it our duty to direct our attention were: first, how far the number of immigrants on bounty up to the latest dates in the colony, had agreed with the several estimates and returns which we had formerly submitted; secondly, what were the numbers of immigrants still to arrive; thirdly, what would be the amount payable on account of them, and what the funds to meet it, so as to exhibit a balance against or in favour of the colony; and fourthly, what the conclusion to be drawn as to the practical course to be observed respecting the renewal of emigration on bounty during the present year.

1. With

1. With regard to the first point, we have the honour to state that the accounts just received confirm the estimates already made in this country, of the number of immigrants on bounty likely to arrive in the colony in the course of the year. In a Return laid before Parliament, on the 6th October last, it was assumed that 19,439 persons would be introduced into the colony in 1841; and from the Return appended to Sir George Gipps's despatch, No. 226, dated 1st December, it appears that up to the end of November 15,918 persons had arrived, upon whom bounties were paid. If to this number be added 3,034, the number who sailed from Great Britain in August, and who may therefore, according to the usual allowance of four months for the voyage, be expected to arrive in the remaining month of December, the result will be 18,952.

2. With regard to the number who would arrive subsequently to the date of the latest returns from the colony, viz. the 30th of November, we have to report that in addition to those whose arrival has been notified in those returns, 10,749 persons sailed from England, and, with the exception of the passengers destined for the "Mangles," who were detained until the 6th January, might be expected to arrive by the beginning of March.

3. From the data furnished by the Returns appended to Sir George Gipps's despatch of the 1st of December, it appears that the average cost of the immigrants during the first 11 months of the year had been about 17 l. 7 s.; and computed at that rate, the expense of the immigrants who, as already stated, would still arrive in the colony on bounty, would amount to 186,495 l. Such being the estimated cost, we next proceed to consider the funds available to meet this expense. By the despatch No. 212, of 2d November, it appears that at that date Sir George Gipps considered that he could not reckon on having more than 40,000 l. applicable to the further purposes of immigration. On comparing the returns of bounty expenses appended to that despatch, and dated 31st October, with those made out on the 30th November, and appended to the despatch dated the 1st December, we find an increase for the intervening month of 25,236 l., which would leave a sum of 14,764 l. as the amount of money actually in hand at the latter period, to meet the demand of 186,495 l. There was, however, a further sum of about 40,000 l. owing to the colony on account of advances to New Zealand, though this amount is mentioned by the Governor not to be available without authority from England. In addition to this there would be the produce of the land fund for the last two months of 1841, and the first two months of the present year. The net land revenue for the first 10 months of 1841, is stated in the despatch of 2d November, to amount only to 50,000 l. Unless, therefore, the opening to sale of lands hitherto reserved, as contemplated by the Governor, should have the effect of raising that revenue to an amount much exceeding that of the past year, a sum of 20,000 l. only could be expected to accrue during the four months above adverted to. From a passage, indeed, in Sir George Gipps's Minute to the Committee of Council, dated 30th November, it appears doubtful whether the land sales had not at that time been discontinued altogether. These two sums, however, if rendered available, would, with the before-mentioned amount of 40,000 l., make in all a total of 74,764 l. to meet the expenses amounting to 186,495 l., and showing a balance against the colony of 111,731 l.

4. With reference to the question of a renewal, under existing circumstances, of the emigration on bounty during the present year, we have first to advert to that part of the despatch of 2d November, in which the Governor refers to an opinion he had previously expressed, that the annual emigration to New South Wales should not exceed 8,000 or 10,000 persons, and suggests that, viewing the present state of the funds, not more than half that number should be sent during the year 1842. It appears, however, by Returns which have already been furnished by this Board, in a Report to Lord Stanley, dated 12th January last, that 22,752 emigrants sailed for New South Wales during the year 1841. Seeing, therefore, that the colony has been supplied during that year with far more than double the number estimated by Sir George Gipps to be required annually, and considering the large sum of money already deficient, and the great and continual decrease which has taken place in the amount derived from the sales of land, we do not find any grounds on which we can recommend to Lord Stanley the resumption of the emigration on bounty during the present year. As soon as any final decision is adopted on this point, it might allay anxiety to announce it publicly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

With respect to the last paragraph of your letter, relative to the regular transmission to the Secretary of State of every bounty order issued by the colonial government, we beg to state that in the event of the future renewal of this species of emigration, we entirely feel the necessity which Lord Stanley points out, of a rigid adherence to this course, and also of the adoption of a more precise form of order, without which it must be impossible to exercise in this country, an effectual control over the numbers annually sent out to the colony.

We beg leave to annex, for convenience of reference, a tabular statement of the results arrived at in our present letter.

We have, &c.

My Lord, Government-house, Sydney, 23 Sept. 1841.

20 Sept. 1841.

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith a copy of a letter which has been addressed to the secretary of this colony, by Dr. Udney, offering to bring adult emigrants to the colony at 16*l.* per head, which is 3*l.* lower than the bounty now paid on them.

In conversing with Dr. Udney on the subject, I do not find that any company, such as that alluded to in his letter, has yet been formed; but as I have long considered it reasonable, that some portion of the expense of removing emigrants from England to New South Wales, should be defrayed out of other funds than those of the colony, I think it right to bring Dr. Udney's proposal under your Lordship's notice.

Dr.

Dr. Udney not being in a condition to guarantee the introduction of any specified number of persons, I have entered into no engagement with him; but considering that your Lordship may probably be induced to sanction some arrangement with Dr. Udney, or the parties with whom he may be associated, I take the liberty of suggesting, that in such case, a period should be fixed, within which the emigrants should leave England, and that such period should not exceed three, or at most six months, from the day on which the engagement for paying bounty on them may be made; also that this Government should be informed immediately on the completion of any such agreement.

As Dr. Udney is about to proceed to England, by way of Valparaiso, he will be the bearer of a duplicate of this despatch.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 19.

Sir, Sydney, 20 September 1841.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 6th instant, and I have now to say that I will, with a company of gentlemen whose object is not profit, carry out whatever number of immigrants the colony may require in future, for the sum of 16 l. per head, and, I pledge myself, in as good a manner as at present, and the immigrants shall be of a much superior class. Encl. in No. 19.

We do not ask any interference with parties who are already licensed; nor any pledge, except to pay when it shall be convenient for any we may import, until the Governor is perfectly at liberty, in every point of view, to grant us licence, after he is satisfied of the superiority of the parties we send, and the style in which they are sent; and then we will only expect payment from time to time, as most convenient, after delivery; we will also deliver at any required point of the coast of the colony. Our object is to relieve the mother country, and to benefit this colony; from its advanced state and fine climate, better adapted to give enjoyment to the poor than any other colony of the Crown. From personal experience I can attest, that as many as required can be obtained for 20 l., they finding their families, or 25 l., being more than is paid in England, with the disadvantages of climate, cold and changeable as it is. I offered to Mr. Marshall to carry to his ships some of the 40,000 starving Highlanders, and as many as were qualified for a free passage of the Lowlanders: his obligation to his Irish agents prevented him accepting the offer; when the most important of them deserted him, he asked me to obtain English for him in the midland counties, as complaints were received by him of the excess of Irish sent. I filled 540 certificates in three months (about 1,100 persons), after rejecting about 10,000 on account of their health, families, trades, age, or character; but his engagements in Ireland prevented his receiving more than 50 each ship; there is, therefore, no want of English and Scots, if they had opportunity, and, I may add, justice.

As I leave in a day or two for England, by Valparaiso, please address me as under, at your own convenience, stating if his Excellency will, in one year after the delivery of any immigrants, perfectly approved of, pay at the rate of 16 l. each adult.

Any information I can communicate on emigration (having had extensive experience) before I leave, I will be most happy to give; and I have, &c.

9, Park-street, Westminster, 22 April 1842.

Sir,

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, transmitting to us, for any observations we may have to make, the copy of a despatch from the Governor of New South Wales, accompanied by a letter from Dr. Udney, on the offer of himself, and a proposed company to be associated with him, to introduce for the future any number whatever of emigrants into New South Wales, at one fixed rate of 16*l.* per head.

We have the honour to state, that we agree with Sir George Gipps in thinking that if such an offer as this were accepted, it would be necessary to fix some certain period within which the emigrants should leave England. But we apprehend that this very condition would necessarily put an end to the offer; for if, as we presume, the price of 16*l.* is to be understood to mean, according to common usage, a rate per statute adult, it is so much lower than any at which it has hitherto been found practicable to conduct the enterprise, that we conclude the only hope of the parties could be to send out emigrants, when shipping happened to be particularly cheap, and at other times to abstain from sending them at all. This in fact is an inconvenience inherent in all arrangements by which the colony is bound to pay a fixed sum on the introduction of emigrants. When the price of shipping is low, and when consequently the fixed price may be viewed as a bad bargain for the colony, vast numbers of people will be sent out, as was the case last year; but when prices rise, and the bargain becomes comparatively favourable to the colony, the business must fall off, or cease altogether, according to the extent to which the contrary would be an advantage. The only remedy would be a guarantee that the emigrants should go at any rate. But with such a guarantee, we should apprehend, as we have already said, that the present proposal would not be likely to be maintained.

Since Dr. Udney, however, has not announced his arrival in this country, or come forward with any proposition here, there is no practical question now pending; and it may be unnecessary for us, therefore, to add any more at present, than that should any actual offer of the expected kind be made, and referred to this Board, we shall be anxious to give it our best consideration.

We have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir George Gipps to Lord John Russell.

Government-house, Sydney,
26 August 1841.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour herewith to forward to your Lordship the Annual Immigration Report of the Committee of the Legislative Council of this colony for the year 1841.

The Report was formally taken into consideration by the whole Council on the 25th instant, and I enclose copies of two resolutions of the Council, which were passed on that occasion.

The first resolution simply adopts and confirms the report of the committee; the second repeats the pledge already given by the Council, to make good to the very utmost of its power any deficiency that may arise in the local funds, to meet the engagements into which the Government, acting on the former reports of the Council, has entered, in order to ensure to the colony a copious influx of emigrants from the United Kingdom.

My despatch of the 31st January 1841, No. 29, will have informed your Lordship of the exact nature of those engagements, and of the possibility of our not being able, without anticipating the resources of future years, to meet the whole expenses of the rapidly-increasing immigration which is now being directed on our shores.

The almost total cessation of land sales, consequent on the commercial distress of the colony, has now rendered the probability of our being obliged to borrow money greater than it was when the despatch alluded to was written.

Under these circumstances, I beg again very respectfully to solicit attention to my despatches of the 17th July and 12th August 1841, Nos. 138 and 154, wherein I requested repayment of the sums advanced by this government to the colonies of New Zealand and South Australia; also to my despatch, No. 91, of the 11th April 1841, in which I begged I might be periodically informed of what sums may be received by the agent of the colony in England, for lands sold by the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration in London; and lastly, I would venture again to bring under your Lordship's consideration the request contained in my despatch, No. 157, of the 22d November 1839, that in the event of any actual deficiency in our funds, I might be allowed to look for temporary relief to the military chest, in the same way that the military chest has repeatedly received assistance from the Colonial Treasury during the course of the last seven years.

I have, &c.

REPORT from the Committee on IMMIGRATION, with the Appendix, Minutes of Evidence, and Replies to Circular Letter on the ABORIGINES.

EXTRACT from the VOTES and PROCEEDINGS of the Legislative Council, No. 1.

Tuesday, 8 June 1841.

6.—IMMIGRATION; Committee appointed to consider the question of immigration generally, with the view of ascertaining the present and prospective demands of the colonists for labour, and how the same may be most effectually and economically met, with instructions to examine evidence, and report:—

The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Australia, the Honourable the Colonial Secretary, the Auditor-General, Mr. Jones, Mr. H. H. Macarthur, Sir John Jamison, Mr. James Macarthur.

His Excellency the Governor then laid upon the table the undermentioned papers on the subject of immigration, viz.:

(1.) A copy of His Excellency's despatch to the most noble the Marquis of Normanby, No. 164, dated 4th December 1839; to be printed.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

(2.) A despatch from the Right honourable Lord John Russell, No. 160, dated 7th October 1840, with its enclosures; to be printed.

(3.) Report from James Denham Pinnock, Esq., Colonial Agent for Immigration, on the subject of immigration generally, for the year 1840; to be printed.

(4.) Return by J. D. Pinnock, Esq., of the number of immigrants who arrived in the colony of New South Wales, from the 1st of January to the 31st of December 1840, showing the number, description, and cost, of immigrants arrived by Government ships, and of those for whom bounties have been paid; showing also the number and description of immigrants who arrived unassisted; to be printed.

(5.) Return by J. D. Pinnock, Esq., dated 7th June 1841, of the whole number of persons, the permissions for whose introduction into the colony yet remain in force, and for whom bounties have been promised in conformity with the Government notices of 28th September 1837, and 3d March 1840; distinguishing the number of those for whom bounties have been promised absolutely and conditionally.

(6.) Return showing the number of persons, the permissions for whose introduction into the colony will expire between 7th June 1841 and 3d March 1842.

7.—His Excellency the Governor land upon the table, the under-mentioned papers respecting the aborigines of the colony; viz.

(1.) A despatch from the Right honourable Lord John Russell, No. 128, dated 5th August 1840, enclosing a copy of a communication received from the secretary to the Church Missionary Society, again bringing under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government the state of the society's mission in New South Wales, and urging the claim of the society to some further support in aid of that mission; and enclosing also a copy of a report on the subject, received from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, with the enclosures referred to.

(2.) A despatch from the Right honourable Lord John Russell, No. 132, dated 25th August 1840, relating to the treatment of the aborigines, and recommending that 15 per cent. of the yearly produce of the sales of Crown lands should be applied to their protection and civilization; to be printed.

(3.) A despatch from the Right honourable Lord John Russell, No. 161, dated 8th October 1840, enclosing a copy of a report received from Captain Grey, late commandant of an expedition into the interior of Australia, upon the best means of promoting the civilisation of the aborigines; despatch and its enclosures to be printed.

8.—His Excellency the Governor laid upon the table a despatch from the Right honourable Lord John Russell, No. 146, dated 5th August 1840, enclosing a copy of a letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, with forms of two public notices, intended to give publicity to the new arrangements regarding the disposal of Crown Lands in New South Wales; despatch and its enclosures to be printed.

The foregoing despatches and other papers relating to immigration, the aborigines, and the sale of Crown lands, to be referred to the committee on immigration.

REPORT from the Committee on Immigration, 1841.

THE Committee appointed by the Council on the 8th of June 1841, to consider and examine the subject of Immigration, have agreed upon the following Report.

THE gratifying fact that the transportation of felons to these shores terminated on the 1st of August last, from which period this colony ceased to bear a penal character, could not fail to be accompanied by a general, though, as your committee trust, a temporary inconvenience, in an increased deficiency of labour. In every description of employment and of mechanical skill, but especially perhaps in the occupation of shepherds, the convicts had been found useful; and on every establishment, and in every department of the settler's life, the loss of the services of the assigned servants is felt, as their numbers are diminished by the expiration of their periods of transportation, by their obtaining tickets of leave, or by death; while the channel is closed through which such vacancies have been heretofore supplied. Your committee refer to this state of things, not with a view to express any regret at this failure in the supply of convict labour, the gradual extinction of which they are persuaded must exercise an influence for good upon the social state and relations of this community, far outweighing the inconvenience and loss which are unavoidably attendant in the first instance upon so great a change in the transportation system. But this notice of the effects produced by its cessation is called for, in order to bring into prominent observation, the necessity of employing more energetic measures than have been yet resorted to, for the purpose of supplying, from purer and better sources, the prevailing want of labour. Your committee cannot doubt that the services of the convicts may be in every instance replaced, provided that due facility and encouragement be afforded to the introduction from the United Kingdom of labourers and handicraftsmen. In directing their attention to the best and most effective method of affording that encouragement, it has not escaped the observation of your committee, that the most difficult kind of labour to be provided is precisely that on which the produce of the staple article of this colony mainly depends. The growth of wool is the chief resource and support of this community, as will be evident when it is observed that the export of this article during the year 1840, amounted to more than 8,600,000 pounds weight, the estimated value of which exceeded half a million million sterling.* It will be found that there is no opposition of evidence or diversity of opinion as to the fact that shepherds are the description of labourers whose services it is most difficult to procure; and your committee do not hesitate to say, that this is too serious a subject to be trifled with. Either some adequate remedy must be applied, or else not only the fortunes of individuals, but the permanent continuance of the colony in its present state and circumstances, will be endangered.

This topic your committee cannot doubt will command the consideration of the council, no less than that of Her Majesty's Government; and the most urgent motives will not fail to present themselves to call forth, on the part of both, very prompt endeavours to avert a crisis threatening such calamitous results. The destruction of the flocks, or even the deterioration of their produce, to which the want of due superintendence must lead, as it impoverished the landholders of New South Wales, would deprive the British merchant and manufacturer of that growing and already important mart for exports which this colony affords; it would involve the destruction of a very large British capital invested here, as well as of that which has been created through its agency; it would abolish an extensive emporium of shipping, and a promising nursery of seamen; and would cut off from the clothing districts of England one chief source for the supply of that article on which the operations of their industry, and their consequent prosperity, chiefly depend. Your committee therefore, feel assured, that in urging upon the attention of the authorities in England the expediency of affording every facility to the introduction of that species of labour in particular which is required for the maintenance of the chief article of colonial produce and export, they are not advocating any narrow or local interest, but are seeking support for one of the most important pillars of the colonial greatness of the empire.

Their first inquiries have related to the practical operations under which the introduction of immigrants into the colony has been conducted. During the past year this has been effected exclusively by means of the bounty system; no ship chartered on account of Government for the conveyance of immigrants having arrived since the 21st of February 1840. This transfer of the business of immigration to the exclusive management of one description of agency, has not been contemplated with satisfaction by your committee, any more than, they are persuaded, it will be by the council or the colony in general. The desire of the committee of last year was to find that the expenses attendant on the Government system might be so far reduced as to place it, in that respect, upon a par with the bounty system; and in this manner they trusted that the two might be carried on simultaneously. Your committee deprecate the supposition that they have ever regarded this question in the light of a debate on controverted topics between them and the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration. On their part there never existed any feeling of mere preference for either one or the other of the systems of immigration which have been so much spoken of; and they may affirm, that throughout the colony generally, the same degree of indifference prevailed as to the means which might be employed for the introduction of labour, provided only that the universally-desired result were attained without any superfluous expenditure. But in the course of their inquiries in former years, your committee could not but be struck by the excess of expenditure incurred in the Government scheme of emigration, compared with that which attended the bounty system. This difference it became them, as depositaries of the confidence of the council, distinctly to notice; and in justice to themselves they must now remark, that the reasonings resorted to by the Commissioners have failed to disprove the accuracy of the conclusion, founded on official statements, that the sum expended in the introduction of about 13,000 persons on the Government system, exceeded what would have been the cost of introducing the same numbers on the bounty system, by upwards of 71,000*l.* Your committee entirely concur in the soundness of the opinion expressed by the Commissioners, "that the cost is not the first consideration in point of real importance." It therefore does not appear to them upon what ground it is to be implied that this, namely, the rate of expense, is "the particular which very naturally attracted the most attention in the colony." On the contrary, your committee on discovering the above-stated excess of expenditure, directed their most earnest inquiry to ascertain whether there might not be, as regarded more important particulars, some superiority belonging to the Government system which should account for and justify the extra cost. Such superiority, had it been discoverable, they would at once have admitted as more than a compensation for the excess of expenditure; that is, if proof had been afforded that such excess had been incurred in providing for the better treatment of the emigrants, or had been productive of a greater exemption from disease among them. But when, upon the most careful inquiry, it was impossible to trace any compensatory properties attached to the Government system, either as to the class of ships employed or the mode of their fitting, and when it could not be made to appear that there was any superiority on the part of that system, in the description and character of the persons introduced, their sustenance and comfort during the voyage, or in their medical treatment, as evinced by the state of health and the average rate of mortality among them, it was not in the power of your committee to form or to express any other opinion, than that the costliness of the one system above the other was not attended with any corresponding advantage either to the immigrants or to the public. This conclusion, arrived at by a methodical process of inquiry, and recorded in the calmest terms, is almost the only one which your committee have pronounced as to the existence of any opposition between the systems; and that, without pledging themselves to a decided or exclusive preference for either, if the costs and advantages of each could be equalised. It would be on many accounts most gratifying to them, as it would afford the most certain and most extended advantage to the colony, that the two systems should be in concurrent operation, according to the arrangement established by Sir Richard Bourke in 1837. The official prominence for which the Commissioners contend in the management of their branch of the business need not interfere, so far as your committee can discover, with the active employment, at the same time, of respectable private agents connected with the bounty system. Your committee, nevertheless, deem it right to record their persuasion that any interference with the latter, either by direct regulation and control, or indirectly by the imposition of conditions which should embarrass the proceedings of the parties who engage in it, and occasion them to relinquish the occupation, would not be regarded with satisfaction by the colonists, who, from the experience of several years, have learned to rely on the bounty system for providing them, to a very great extent, with a regular supply of labourers and mechanics, upon terms sufficiently economical, and, all circumstances considered, with a very slight intermixture of unsuitable or ineligible persons. But while expressing this conclusion with respect to the general character of the bounty system, your Committee consider it indispensable to advert with great disapprobation to the mode in which some few of the private ships have been managed. The documents in the Appendix, having reference to these instances, while they prove the culpable neglect of some of the parties connected with those ships, will also show that due vigilance is exercised by the colonial authorities for the detection and punishment of such misconduct. Your committee, however, most anxiously desire not to be forced into comparisons, any further than a watchful concern for the husbanding of the colonial resources may require that they should be instituted. But previously to quitting the subject, they must direct attention to the suggestion of the Land and Emigration Commissioners, that the facilities afforded under the bounty system to the class of passengers termed intermediate should be done away with, in consequence of an objection raised to them by the late health officer, when examined before the Committee of 1839. It is not difficult to urge conjectural apprehensions of the evils which may arise from the admission of such passengers, either as regards the general accommodation of other emigrants on board, or their supposed greater liability to disease. The most secure and proper mode of deciding the question must be by a reference to experience; and on inspection of the returns of sickness and mortality during the voyages of all ships with immigrants which have arrived here during the last three years and a half, no indications are to be found of a less favourable state of health on board of those ships by which intermediate passengers were conveyed. On the contrary, the most unhealthy ships during the year 1840–41 were the Champion, the Margaret, and the Salsette, two of which had no passengers of the class in question. As it is thus clearly shown that immigrants of this description may be conveyed with security to themselves, and without risk to the ships by which they proceed, as they are generally persons of a class somewhat superior to the passengers who claim the bounty, to whom they set an example of regularity and good conduct, while they also, by the support which they render to the surgeon and officers, may contribute very much to the maintenance of order on board, your committee most earnestly would discourage any interference with the practice which has grown up in this respect. Such interference, resting upon apprehensions of danger not confirmed by experience, would have the effect of checking, or of totally preventing, the introduction of a class of persons, who, without any charge upon the emigration funds, add at once to the numbers and respectability of the community. Among them are unquestionably many who could not obtain a passage at the public expense, on account of their exceeding the limited age. But these are most commonly relatives and connexions of parties going out in the same ship as bounty passengers, whom they are desirous of accompanying. In all probability, neither the one class nor the other would be induced to come to the colony, but for the existence of a system which thus enables each to obtain a passage upon terms most suitable to its circumstances, and to gratify their desire of not being separated. Your committee cannot but express themselves adverse to the breaking up of a system which works thus favourably both for the public and private benefit, and the doing away with which would not, so far as they are able to discover, conduce to any useful end.

Appendix (C.)

In another respect, that is, in recommending an extension of the age within which immigrants shall be, upon certain conditions, eligible to receive a free passage, your committee are happy to find their opinion more closely in agreement with that of the Commissioners. This subject engaged their attention to some extent last year; and during the present session has been more carefully examined. As a general limit, it cannot be denied that the age of 40 is very properly fixed; because the colony cannot expect after that to enjoy the services of the most active and useful period of life. But the most pressing want now experienced appears to be that of shepherds, an occupation which calls for the exertion of steady attention and regularity, rather than of vigour. A man approaching to 50, or being even of 50 years of age, may be as well qualified as a much younger man to take charge of a flock of sheep. In point of disposition, probably he may be even more so, on account of his having acquired with his years more stationary habits, in which the usefulness of a shepherd very much consists. Your committee have therefore given a fair consideration to the question, whether the parents' more advanced age might not be equitably compensated by their bringing with them a family so far grown up as to be capable of rendering useful service. Such a family would be a valuable acquisition, though the father or mother should be upwards of 40 years of age, if their children were correspondingly advanced beyond infancy; if, for example, the family included daughters who would soon be fit for domestic service, and sons of an age to assist in attending sheep.

Such

Such boys, from being thus early habituated to the employment, would grow up, it is reasonable to believe, in a permanent attachment to it. Upon these grounds your committee recommend, that married couples above 40 years of age should be considered eligible for a free passage if they be still hale and capable of work, and if, in consideration of every two years by which their age may exceed forty, they be accompanied by one child above the age of 10 years; for example, if the parties be above 40, but under 42, they must have with them one such child; from 42 years to 44, two such, and so on; and if they shall be above 48, but not exceeding 50 years (which is the extreme limit), they must be accompanied by five children, the youngest not being below 10 years of age. With reference to the nature of a shepherd's employment in this colony, it is to be feared that some misapprehension prevails in England, leading it to be supposed that none except those who have been regularly trained to it can be qualified. The points of attention are, however, so few and simple, that they may be mastered by any one possessing the disposition to observe and learn. With a view to correct any false impressions which may prevail, a paper is inserted in the Appendix, exhibiting a brief view of the shepherd's duties, which, it will from this appear, are such as any man, or even boy approaching to manhood, with steady habits and ordinary activity, is qualified to undertake. It would be advantageous that copies of this paper should be circulated as generally as possible in the United Kingdom, not only in those districts where pastoral occupations prevail, but also in the manufacturing districts. Many of the inhabitants of the latter, persons accustomed to sedentary habits, who are now at a loss to obtain employment even at a low rate of wages, might be found willing to engage in an occupation neither injurious to health nor requiring laborious exertion, which, at the same time, holds out the advantage of good wages and a comfortable maintenance. Your committee therefore recommend, that the meaning of the term "labourer" should be so enlarged, as to comprehend persons of this class, and that the regulations should be so modified as to render them eligible for the bounty.

Appendix (D.)

The distress under which flock-masters are at the present time universally labouring, has its origin in two causes: the very high rate of wages and cost of rations demanded by shepherds, and the difficulty, amounting almost to an impossibility, of obtaining a sufficient number even upon those exorbitant terms. It has been confidently stated, that the attendant expenses of a sheep establishment at this time, do more than consume the profits arising from the sale of the wool; and your committee have every reason to believe that this statement is accurate, when sheep are kept upon purchased land, and a large yearly allowance must be made for interest upon the capital sunk in the purchase. On establishments beyond the boundaries, where the land on which the sheep are keep has not been purchased, but is rented at an easy rate, there may still be an attendant profit. A grazing establishment, even under these disadvantages, might still be carried on with advantage, if there were a ready sale for the surplus of the increase. But in the stagnation arising from the scarcity of labour, even this resource is effectually cut off; because few persons can be found willing to invest capital in the purchase of sheep, when they are aware that they cannot depend on being able to hire shepherds to take charge of them; and thus, through the absence of almost all demand, the value of stock has sunk in a disproportionate degree, and it is not without difficulty that sales can be effected. Besides this, the importance of the shepherds' services being thus great, their tendency to frequent changes of employ is strong in proportion; the masters are exposed to very great annoyance, and most serious loss, in consequence of the prevailing determination of their men not to engage in service for more than a very limited term certain, and of their general practice to quit as soon as their time expires, even when no others can be found to replace them in charge of the flocks; it is therefore not surprising that, under a sense of pressing difficulty, many settlers should have turned their thoughts to the practicability of introducing a cheaper and more abundant kind of labour. A project which was strongly recommended a few years ago, of bringing down the Hill Coolies from India to be engaged as shepherds, has accordingly been revived, and would appear to have commanded more attention, owing to the alleged success of the experiment upon a limited scale. Your committee have accordingly felt it their duty to bestow the utmost attention upon this question; and they have considered in every possible point of view, and with the advantage of having had before them many intelligent witnesses conversant with the subject, the policy and expediency of thus having recourse to the services of the Hill Coolies. During the preceding session the subject was somewhat incidentally under the observation of this committee; and in their last report they stated their opinion to be favourable, notwithstanding many objections of considerable weight, to the employment of those people for a limited period by the colonists who might be willing to introduce them at their own charge, and upon condition that provision should be made for their return to their native country at the expiration of their covenanted terms of service. Were it possible to obtain full security that this expressed condition would be fulfilled, your committee, under the peculiar circumstances of the colony at this time, might still be willing to abide by their previous opinion; but they cannot conceal that the more attentively they have reflected on the means of establishing any system for ensuring the removal of the Coolies from the colony, after the expiration of a limited period of service, the more impracticable and hopeless has such a measure appeared to be. In reality they have arrived at a conviction, that if this race of people were to be once introduced and extensively employed, their removal could not be effected in opposition to their own feelings of interest, and the influence of proprietors unwilling to dispense with the services of dependents to whom they had become habituated. To treat this measure fairly, therefore, it must be viewed in connexion with its certain consequence of establishing here in perpetuity a race of different origin, colour, and habits from the European, and necessarily doomed to occupy a station of inferiority. That this is the natural consequence of the measure it is not unfair to conclude, because the expressed expectation is, that the Coolie, though equalling, if not surpassing the European in the employment of a shepherd, will yet be satisfied to undertake it at a permanently lower rate of remuneration. Without this attendant recommendation of comparative cheapness, no one, it is acknowledged, would urge the introduction of Coolie labourers. Yet such a depression of wages below their natural level, as the advocates for the introduction of Coolies anticipate, could not be maintained if the labourer and his employer stood in the genuine relation to one another of master and servant; nor unless the Coolie, though nominally free, were by the force of circumstances deprived, to some extent, of the privileges of a free agent. Your committee, however, offer this observation, not as concurring in the expectation that Coolies could be for a continuance retained at a rate of wages below the ordinary average; their persuasion is, rather, that in proportion as the Indian labourer acquired skill, and still more as he became more sensible of his own value, his demands would naturally enlarge and his rate of wages must rise. Neither can it be expected that Indian immigration, if once commenced, would be limited to that description of servants which is now principally contemplated. Other classes or castes, capable of performing every kind of work, and no less accustomed than the Coolies to a low rate of wages, would speedily be led to settle here; and the European workman must, in the same proportion, curtail his pretensions, as he would find himself more and more pressed by rivals ready to take any employment out of his hands upon which he would not submit to an abatement. The ultimate settlement of the scale of wages would, in all probability, be at a medium height, beneath the existing rate, but certainly much above that point of depression at which it has been too hastily assumed the remuneration of the Coolie would be fixed. This, therefore, being the view of the case which is sanctioned by reasonable calculation, the true question for consideration is, whether for the sake of an uncertain, and at the best, a transient relief, it would really be worth while to introduce into our social system a new element which could not fail to deteriorate, or, it may even be said, to deprave its constitution. The expectation of introducing Coolies for a time to be limited, and of dismissing them when the present necessity ceases to exist, appears to your committee to be perfectly visionary. Not only, if once admitted, must they permanently remain, but there will be a growing necessity for their introduction in greater numbers, because it is evident that the apprehension of such rivalry will check the readiness of European labourers to embark for this colony, and even such of that class as may arrive, it is admitted, will have a tendency to sink down into the state of employers of Coolies, rather than to persevere in that course of strenuous exertion to which they were bred, and for the sake of which their introduction to the colony was principally to be desired. Whatever defects may be chargeable upon the state of society here, it is at present so unmixed in its composition as to promise to supply materials for the fabrication of a social and political state corresponding with that of the country from which it derives its origin. Your committee therefore would not willingly be the instruments of recommending any measure likely to interfere with what appears at present to be the natural tendency of events. Their deliberate conclusion upon this subject is, that the proper source from which relief should be sought for the present difficulties of the colony, is in a more extended emigration from the United Kingdom; that for its promotion the most energetic measures should be taken; and that no time should be lost in the adoption of such measures. With regard also to the admission of Coolies, they would have it borne in remembrance, that the removal of the restrictions which prohibit it could not furnish that immediate accession of labour which is needed, and which the advocates of the measure appear to assume that it would afford. No alteration can take place without reference to the Executive Governments of India in London and Calcutta, a proceeding in itself attended with considerable delay; and even if their concurrence should be obtained, an additional interval must necessarily elapse before any importation of Coolies could possibly take place. It should also be borne in mind, that the laws of this colony oppose no obstacle to their introduction into it to any extent which might be determined by private enterprise pursuing its own advantage. Your committee therefore are of opinion that, in leaving this an open question, so far as itself is concerned, the government of this colony has done as much as in prudence it ought to do; and they cannot recommend its making any positive effort to promote a measure by which it does not appear to them that the well-understood and permanent interest of the colony would be promoted.

It is however a natural and obvious suggestion that, when a dearth of labourers is thus giving encouragement to the proposal of obtaining them from an external source, some prior attention should be bestowed upon the practicability of rendering more available the services of the aboriginal people of the colony itself. Your committee are far from wishing to deny the fact, that the peculiar disposition and habits of this race of people, render every attempt to domesticate them extremely difficult; neither can it be doubted, that even if that primary obstacle could be overcome, the numbers of the native tribes within the limits occupied by Europeans are so reduced, that the engagement of the whole of them as shepherds could but partially abate the pressure of difficulty. But every motive of policy, even if those of a higher nature were not to be considered, enforces the expediency of resorting to this resource, so far as the survivors of this race of people can yet be made subservient to a purpose of utility. Your committee are not aware that it is within their power to prescribe any rules by which this end is to be accomplished; because it must be obvious that it depends much more upon the prudence and humanity of the settlers, availing themselves of opportunities to attach the natives to their service, than upon any code code of positive regulations which could possibly be framed. The general complaint against the aborigines is their indisposition to labour, and their apparently insuperable propensity to quit their tasks and occupations, at whatever time they may be summoned to associate themselves for a season with their roving tribes. But it will admit of a question, whether any such systematic and persevering attempts have ever been made to subdue this propensity, as probably would have been resorted to by the settlers at an earlier period, if the want and the value of labour had then been as sensibly felt as they are at present. So long as convict labour was easily attainable, that of the native black was slighted; but now, under circumstances so changed, it should be so no longer. Even as it is, there are instances to prove that the aboriginal natives of the colony, like all other beings, have a faculty which qualifies them for settled employments, and which, if duly cultivated, might possibly yet be turned to considerable advantage. The leading defect in the system (if so it may be called) which has hitherto been pursued towards them, consists in not remunerating them by fixed wages, of the value of which they might soon become sensible, and might be made also to comprehend that they were given in repayment of their services. These people have sufficient sagacity to perceive the footing upon which they are treated. The casual provision which is allowed them, puts them under no sense of obligation, and the apprehension of losing it occasions no feeling of alarm; consequently the invitation of their confederates suffices to draw them away from that which may in most cases be termed the scene of their idleness, more properly, than of their labour. Your committee cannot but think that, if there be any desire to profit effectually by the services of the natives, a different course must be pursued towards them; and that they can be made to acquire the steady habits of Europeans, only by being gradually put upon the same footing with them. In proposing, therefore, to improve the condition of these people, and at the same time to render their services of value to the settler, by giving him some resource and security against those frequent interruptions of them which at present occur, it is plain that the first step must be that of making the natives feel how much it is to their advantage to work regularly at fixed wages, and how greatly it is against their interest to forfeit them by irregularity and neglect. It is not possible to believe that they could be permanently blind to this difference, if due pains were taken to impress it upon their minds by the lesson of daily experience.

Against this it is objected that even where they are domesticated in families, and in all respects well treated and apparently happy, their disposition occasionally to wander away, on the invitation or mandate of their tribe, cannot be repressed. But in the first place it is questionable whether in such cases of domestication, the experiment of paying regular wages has generally been attempted. In all probability this is not the case. Neither is it intended to maintain that the mere payment of wages is likely to effect the end desired unless accompanied by another engagement; namely, that the loss of those wages and other painful consequences should invariably be the punishment of the act of misconduct which it is now found so difficult to repress. The native, under present circumstances, has no sufficient motive to resist the invitation of his countrymen; because he sustains no immediate loss, and, on the conclusion of his wandering, is sure of being received back into that state of lax dependence and irregular servitude in which the greater part of his time is idled away. But if, by a sense of mutual advantage, the settlers in every district could be induced to combine in a resolution not only to pay wages to the native blacks, but also to refuse to employ any of them who should have quitted the service of a former master without leave or a sufficient warning, putting them in this respect on a footing with well-conducted European servants, it can scarcely be doubted that the native who had learned to prize the advantage of regular industry, from knowing the profits derived from it, would hesitate before he wantonly abandoned them. He would not be, as now, ready to attend his countrymen in their vagrant excursions, when he reflected that the employer whom he deserted would discharge him in consequence, and that none else would hire him; or in other words, that if he should once desert his work and return to a bush life, he must make up his mind to continue the bush life for ever afterwards. He would then have a motive to weigh beforehand the consequences of his own decisions and acts; whereas, under their present treatment, it is not surprising that they should persist in a wandering habit which gratifies them for the present moment, and which they may relinquish whenever they think fit, without being subjected to loss or inconvenience on account of their having indulged in it. It appears scarcely necessary to add that the preceding observations can apply to such of the aborigines alone as are placed so far within the pale of civilization as to have the force of their own barbarous customs to a certain extent weakened and controlled. Such a system of regular employment can obviously not be thought of as yet among those more distant tribes with whom scarcely any communication can be held, and whom it is even dangerous to approach.

Your committee have in the next place to consider the amount of the land fund during the past year; and especially that proportion of it which, after payment of all the expenses to which the fund is subject, remains applicable to purposes of immigration. According to a statement, of which a copy will be found in the Appendix, the gross revenue derived from land in the Sydney and Port Phillip districts, between the 1st July 1840 and 30th June 1841, amounted to 250,437*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*; and it is shown by a communication from the Colonial Secretary, conveying the opinions of his Excellency the Governor as to the expenses which should be defrayed from the land fund, that deduction must be made on account of the surveyor-general's department, a portion of the charge for the treasury and audit departments, and the whole of the outlay for the benefit of the aborigines. It is most gratifying to your committee to find that, burdensome upon the colony as the charge for police and gaols undoubtedly is, no portion of it, during the year now under review, is to be derived from the land fund. The heads of expenditure above recited may be calculated as amounting in all to about 35,000 l., which sum being deducted from the gross amount of the land fund, leaves 215,607 l. 4 s. 7 d., disposable for the introduction of immigrants, up to 31 July, in the present year. Turning in the next place to a comparison of this with the actual expenditure during the same interval, your committee find that the amount paid for bounties and gratuities to surgeons and officers of ships has been at Sydney, 108,657 l. 16 s. 6 d., and at Melbourne 47,668 l. 14 s., making together a total of 156,326 l. 10 s. 6 d. To this must be added the expense of the Immigration Office for the year, including the charge occasioned by the ships "Champion" and "Margaret" having been placed in quarantine. The total amount of these latter expenses has not been ascertained; but when every requisite addition on account of them shall have been made to the sum paid for bounties and gratuities, the outlay of the year, it is evident, will fall short of the income; or a balance of nearly 60,000 l. may be carried forward in augmentation of the land revenue of 1841–2. It may be, however, proper to remark, that in the above stated balance at Sydney is included the sum of 42,974 l. 4 s. 2 d. advanced on loan to the government of New Zealand, up to the 19th June 1841. The number of immigrants who have arrived during the period now under consideration are as follows: men, 2,425; women, 2,565; children, 1,538; total, 6,528; in addition to the above there have arrived at Port Phillip 1,089 men, 1,155 women, and 549 children, in all 2,793. Under the bounty system, therefore, 9,321 individuals have been added to the population of the colony at the public expense. In the bounty ships have also arrived, unassisted by the public, 1,454 men, 473 women, 352 children, or 2,279 individuals; making the grand total of immigrants, 11,600. The aggregate numbers added by immigration to the colony since the commencement of the system may be thus stated: Government ships, 12,770; bounty ditto, 14,641; unassisted, 7,265; grand total, 34,676. The average cost of introducing the immigrants of the past year has been 16 l. 15 s. 5 d., showing an increase over the former year of 2 l. 4 s. 9 d. each. This arises from

The remaining excess on the average arises from the smaller proportion of children this year, it having been reduced from 1 in 2.62 to 1 in 3.27.

As regards the average state of health, the general return of the past year is not unsatisfactory; though this remark cannot be offered without exception. The "Salsette," the "Champion," and the "Margaret," have been the only ships on board of which a bad state of health is to be complained of. These ships respectively have lost by death 13, 23, and 42, at sea or in quarantine; that is, 71 out of 789 embarked; or 1 in 10. The general average of deaths during the year has been 299 out of 9,620; or 1 in 32.17; or excluding from the average the three ships above named, the deaths on board the remainder have been 221 out of 8,831, or 1 in 39.96, which is a diminution upon the rate of former years. With a view of elucidating the causes to which the existence of extraordinary mortality on board immigrant ships may be imputed, your committee annex to their Report an extract from the Report of a Board appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the circumstances which led to the prevalence of so much sickness on board the "Margaret." It appears most reasonable and necessary that there should be a superintending authority in England, empowered to inspect all ships destined for the conveyance of immigrants to this colony, and to enforce an observance of such regulations, both with regard to the ships themselves, and to the accommodation for the passengers, as may afford a reasonable security against the danger of such fatal results as have arisen, especially in the "Champion" and the "Margaret." Your committee, however, deem this the proper place to observe that, in their opinion, this power of inspection and supervision ought to be limited to such particulars as concern the probable prosecution of the voyage without liability to more than an average amount of sickness and mortality. The Commissioners appear to recommend that the investigation under their agency should be carried far beyond this; that it should include a personal inquiry of each individual emigrant as to the motives which have led him or her to determine on removing themselves to this colony. The ground assigned for this interference is certainly a good one; namely, to afford security against any one being led by fallacious representations to emigrate to the colonies. So far, however, as relates to the colony of New South Wales, your committee are of opinion that it is scarcely possible to impose a false representation upon skilful and industrious individuals, if they be merely assured that there is certain and constant employment at good wages for as many of them as may design to make this colony their future home. With regard to delusive representations as to the superior advantages of any one colony over the rest, which it is the expressed desire of the Commissioners to check, your committee entirely concur in the opinion that everything like deception ought to be checked. As to New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, commonly termed penal colonies, and on that account much maligned, it may be right to observe, that the systematic employment of forced labour in them during so many years, has alone conduced to furnish them with those accommodations and facilities of communication, without which the habits and intercourse of civilized life can hardly be maintained. The towns, the public buildings, the churches, the roads, the bridges, the mountain passes, the extent of cleared land, and the secure enclosures by which this country is distinguished above those which surround

it, afford at least some compensation for the partial evils which a convict system may have occasioned, especially as those evils, by the abandonment of that system, are rapidly disappearing, while the advantages and comforts which have been derived from it will remain in perpetuity to the present inhabitants or to any who may hereafter resort to the colony. Your committee therefore think that every discouragement should be given to the proposal of authorising persons, totally unaware of the features of the country, and of its peculiar recommendations, to enter upon a discussion with the body of people who propose to emigrate, for the purpose of ascertaining the motives which have led them to determine on that measure. With regard to this colony, your committee must repeat, it is not easy for those to be misled who propose only to labour honestly and desire no more than a bountiful remuneration for their exertions. Persons of another class there may be, whose minds are filled with expectations of a certain elevation to immediate wealth. These must be disappointed, and ought therefore to be discouraged. But your committee cannot fail to perceive the danger that the agents of the Commissioners, in affording a proper warning to these, may infuse needless scruples and suspicions into the minds of many who ought on every account to be encouraged in their purpose of emigrating; and it is therefore their decided opinion, that it will be better to allow things to find their natural level.

But in one respect your committee think that a very salutary improvement might be introduced; that is, in apportioning the stations of vessels chartered for emigrants with greater attention to the local circumstances and comparative claims of the various divisions of the United Kingdom. Those vessels, as appears from a Return in the Appendix, have been dispatched from 20 different ports. But the bounty ships from England have been confined to London, Plymouth, and Liverpool; and from Scotland, to Leith and Greenock; while one-third of the ships chartered by Government have sailed from Irish ports. Your committee cannot pass unnoticed a circumstance which has attracted serious attention on the part of the public; namely, that of the entire number of immigrants brought to the colony, one-third have been Roman Catholics. The ships from Plymouth have introduced 11 of that denomination for every 15 Protestants; and from Liverpool the proportions are as 11 to 27; while from the Irish ports the numbers of Roman Catholics compared with Protestants, are as two to one. There is obviously a departure from the principles of justice in an arrangement which leads to such a result; the proportion above stated being widely at variance with the respective numbers of the religious persuasions in this colony, and with the relative contributions of Protestants and Roman Catholics toward the land fund, from which the means of supporting immigration are derived. They are at variance no less with the admitted principle, that the expenditure of that fund should be regulated by a just consideration for the advantage of all parts of the United Kingdom. With a view, therefore, to correct the existing inequality, and to afford a more general participation in the benefit of emigration to those counties in England and Wales from which a most desirable class of persons may be obtained, your committee beg to suggest, that Portsmouth, Milford Haven, Lynn, and Hull, should for the future be included among the ports from which ships for the conveyance of emigrants take their departure.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT.

THE Committee on Immigration, for the more complete fulfilment of the duty intrusted to them, annex a few observations upon the documents which have been submitted to them by direction of his Excellency the Governor, since the preceding report was completed. With regard to the first of the questions proposed by the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration, in their letter of 4th March 1841, namely, "Whether in families where there are many adult sons and daughters, it would not be advisable to extend the limits of parents' ages," your committee need only remark, that they have expressed an opinion favourable to this suggestion; proposing to allow an addition of two years to the age of parents between 40 and 50, in consideration of each child of 10 years of age and upwards which shall accompany them. In reply to the second question, concerning the limitations imposed upon the description of workmen for whom the bounty might be claimed, and the expediency of extending the same, so as to include a greater variety of avocations, your committee think it necessary to direct attention to the principle upon which the Government Regulations have, in this respect, been framed. The object has been to apply the resources of the colony, that is, the proportion of the land fund which might be available for immigration, to provide labourers in those departments which are of the first necessity and importance to the settler's welfare, or in pastoral and agricultural employments. Upon this ground it was that the offer of encouragement to the mechanical occupations, which contribute chiefly to convenience, was more sparingly introduced in the generality of cases, and in others was withheld altogether. Your committee, however, would not be indisposed to recommend some extension of the present conditions, so far as to make sawyers and brickmakers eligible for the bounty. They consider also that some advantages might arise from substituting the term "Labourers" instead of "Agricultural Labourers," to show that it is not farming men alone who are intended, but men of all descriptions, who may be able and willing to occupy themselves in manual labour. Beyond that extent your committee would not be willing to go; because they are aware that, without a very positive limitation of the kinds of employment on account of which the bounty may be claimed, there can be no security that funds will be sufficiently at command to provide labourers in those occupations which must be carried on, or the ruin of the colony would follow, such as agriculture and sheep farming. With reference to the latter branch of employment, it may be right to repeat, that although clothiers, weavers, and other manufacturers would meet with little or no encouragement here at present in the exercise of their several trades, yet such of them as might be disposed to apply themselves to the business of a shepherd, would be very certain of meeting with regular and profitable employment.

Your committee have also had under consideration the various regulations proposed by the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, with a view to produce uniformity and prevent abuses in the general system of Emigration. The abstract of quarterly returns required to be furnished from the colony by the agent for immigration, may probably be attended with advantage. It will, however, be necessary that much latitude of judgment should be allowed to that officer in making periodical returns of the rate of wages, and cost of articles of consumption; the difficulty being very great in forming correct averages applicable to the entire colony.

So far as relates to enforcing proper rules as to the class and sea-worthiness of ships to be employed for the conveyance of emigrants, and to ensuring that sufficient provision is made for victualling them properly during the voyage, your committee consider that the inspection and approval of the Commissioners by their agents would be highly proper. Nor would they recommend that such inspection should be limited to the particulars specified in the Passengers' Act; but it should be so extended as to ensure such fitting of the ships, and the observance of such regulations on board, as may promote decency, order, and comfort among the passengers. Your committee, however, are less disposed to anticipate advantage from the proposed regulations relating to the inspection of certificates and the measures for ascertaining the identity of the bearers of them, before any ship with bounty emigrants is allowed to sail. Least of all do they believe that any useful results would follow from the establishment of the practice of questioning the emigrants, when on the eve of departure, as to the motives and inducements which have led them to determine on that step; or as to the representations by which they have been induced to make choice of one particular colony in preference to others. The mere institution of such an inquiry, however cautiously or judiciously it may be conducted, will unavoidably create a disposition on the one side to prefer many groundless complaints, and on the other, that is, on the part of bounty agents, will give rise to irritation and disgust, by which the whole system of emigration must be seriously disarranged, if its entire cessation be not the ultimate consequence. Your committee therefore, dreading a result so injurious, would seriously recommend the reconsideration to this extent of the proposed regulations of the Commissioners; and they are of opinion, that if care be taken to ascertain, previously to sailing, the sea-worthiness of the ship, the sufficient supply and good quality of the provisions, and the arrangement of the passengers on board, in such a manner as to ensure proper order and decorum among them, the investigation of all other particulars may be securely and advantageously left to a Colonial Board of Inquiry, whose certificate of approval must precede the payment of any portion of the bounties.

MEMORANDUM from the Agent for Immigration.

THE gratuity to the chief mate of the Resource, which arrived in Port Jackson on the 29th of December 1840, was withheld by direction of his Excellency, on the recommendation of a board of inquiry, in consequence of his gross misconduct during the voyage.

Whilst the Argyle, from Liverpool, was discharging her immigrants at Port Phillip, in the month of April last, a box, the property of an immigrant, was, through carelessness, lost overboard. The sum of 10*l.* 10*s.* was deducted from the first officer's, and 9*l.* 10*s.* from the second officer's gratuity; the united sums being the value of the contents of the said chest.

Gratuities to the officers are only paid on such immigrants as may be considered by the examining board as eligible to be imported on bounty.

Inquiries have at various times been instituted into the conduct of the officers and surgeons of immigrant ships, but, with the foregoing exceptions, no stoppage of gratuities has taken place.

Sir, Melbourne, 25 January 1841.

MY own impression, notwithstanding the defence of the supercargo, is, that the provision made by the agents in Liverpool for the comfort and health of the immigrants was very inadequate; and further, that the arrangements on board were ill calculated to produce contentment among the immigrants during a long voyage. I must more particularly call his Excellency's attention to the fact stated in the acting immigration agent's letter to me of the 12th January, that the surgeon-superintendent of the ship was put on board by the importers without having received any power and authority whatsoever to see that justice was done to the immigrants during the voyage, as respects the quality of the provisions; he was even unprovided with any written instructions, the duty of serving out the daily ration being under the sole control and management of the supercargo, who was one of the joint proprietors.

EXTRACT from a LETTER from the Agent of Immigration to the Honourable the Colonial Secretary, respecting Immigrant Ship Salsette.

Immigration-office, 10 February 1841.

I HAVE also carefully perused all the evidence and documents forwarded to me by Mr. La Trobe, relating to the insufficiency and bad quality of the provisions and water put on board the Salsette for the use of the immigrants during the voyage, and, after much consideration, I beg to make the following report:

It cannot be denied that there was an insufficiency of water; and, notwithstanding the statements of Mr. * * * and Mr. * * *, I consider it was the duty of the captain and exporters to have ascertained that a sufficiency of so essential an article was put on board.

It must be admitted, however, that steps were taken to remedy this inconvenience when ascertained, which was not until they were considerably past the Cape.

No explanations can excuse the badness of the bread; and even had they experienced worse weather than is stated by Mr. * * * they did, it ought to have been of such quality, and sufficiently well packed, to have kept in a state of preservation. The same remarks will also apply to the flour.

With reference to the beef and pork, some excuses for their badness may be deemed admissible, inasmuch as it is admitted by all parties that there was both good and bad in each cask.

Mr. * * asserts, that a very high price was paid for those articles, by the affreighters, to the same house that had previously supplied their ships with provisions; and that they cannot justly be blameable for their dishonesty in putting a mixed quality into each cask, especially when the provisions were examined and approved of by Lieut. Henry, R. N., the Government emigration agent at the port of Liverpool.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

His Excellency the Governor's Minute on the foregoing:

The bounties may be paid, but Messrs. * * * must be informed that the whole duty of this ship appears to me to have been performed in an unsatisfactory manner, and that, had the issue of the voyage been calamitous, the loss of the bounties would not have been, in all probability, the only consequences which would have fallen on them.

The provisions appear to have been insufficient in quantity, and in great part bad in quality; and the mistake about the water, even concluding that it was only a mistake, might have been attended with fatal consequences. The arrangement respecting Mr. * * does not seem to me to have been a good one; unless Messrs. * * * 's future ships are better managed, I shall not feel at liberty to grant any fresh permission to them to import immigrants.

EXTRACT from a LETTER from His Honour the Superintendent of Port Phillip to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Melbourne, 9 March 1841.

ALL the documents containing the evidence elicited by the board were forwarded to the immigration agent at Sydney, to be laid before his Excellency; but I then stated my own impression, that notwithstanding the defence of the supercargo, the provision made by the agents in Liverpool, for the comfort and health of the immigrants, was very inadequate; and further, that the arrangements on board were ill calculated to produce contentment among the immigrants during a long voyage.

I have now, in recurring to this subject, to state for his Excellency's information, that from the very week of their disembarkation, and before they could provide for themselves in any way, a very considerable number of the immigrants by the Salsette were attacked by the low fever then rife in the town and neighbourhood. Many have since died, and in general it has been observed by the medical men, that these immigrants were, from previous hardship and insufficient nourishment, much less able to bear up against the disease than others, and much more liable to sink, even after the fever had been subdued.

The fever assumed, in the case of many of these immigrants, a new and more alarming type, and appearing to spread, I was induced to nominate a board of health, to report upon the state of disease in the town. From the urgent representation made to me by the gentlemen composing the board of the great extent of destitution and disease among the Salsette's people, I further authorised the colonial surgeon, upon the requisition of two medical men, to issue certain medical comforts to those who were in a state to demand such charity, although I was aware that, strictly speaking, the parties had no claim upon Her Majesty's Government.

In so doing, the greatest economy has been recommended and exercised. I trust that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, his Excellency will approve the steps taken, and sanction the slight increase of the hospital expenditure which may be consequent upon it; but I beg leave to observe, at the same time, that whatever expense has been incurred might with full propriety be deducted from the bounty otherwise claimable by the importer of the immigrants by the Salsette.

SKETCH of a SHEPHERD'S DUTIES in New South Wales.

THE duties of a shepherd in New South Wales are exceedingly simple. A flock usually consists of from 400 to 500 ewes, or from 600 to 1,000 dry sheep, three flocks being folded at one station. The shepherd is required to take his sheep from the fold in the morning, not later than an hour after sunrise, to keep sight of them on the pastures throughout the day, and to bring them back at sunset to the fold. They are then counted over and left in charge of the night watchman, whose duty it is to take care of the flocks in the folds until the morning, when each flock is again counted and delivered over to the shepherd. In the lambing season, on well-managed establishments, the ewes about to lamb are withdrawn from the flock and kept separate, under the care either of the watchman, or of some other person appointed for the purpose for a few days, until the lambs are strong enough to travel with the flock. At shearing time, the flocks are brought in rotation to the home station, to be washed and shorn. It is then the shepherd's business (unless he be also a shearer) to follow his sheep and take care that they are kept as free as possible from any kind of dirt, until the fleece is in a fit state to shear, which in general is the case about the third or fourth day after the washing.

From this account of the ordinary duty of a shepherd in New South Wales, it will be seen that almost any one is capable of taking charge of a flock. Sheep are subject to very few diseases, and with the treatment of these either the master or the overseer will be conversant. In such cases, the shepherd has only to follow diligently the directions he may receive from those under whose superintendence he is placed, and if possessed of common intelligence, he will soon be capable of acting for himself. In fact, a weaver or button-maker, after a few months' experience, will generally prove a better shepherd, in New South Wales, than the man who having been brought up as a shepherd in England, may have acquired habits or prejudices exceedingly difficult to shake off, however unsuitable to the new position in which he is placed; in proof of this it may be noticed that some of the best superintendents of sheep in the colony are natives of London, Manchester, or Birmingham, and that few professed English or Scotch shepherds are entrusted with the care even of a single flock. The duty of a watchman is as easy as that of the shepherd; he sleeps by the fold, in a watch-box, trusting to his dogs to awaken him in case of the approach of a native dog or any other cause of alarm; he counts the sheep in and out, and shifts the hurdles. Nor is the life of a shepherd at all irksome to those who have been accustomed to sedentary occupations; on the contrary, such persons have in various instances become strongly attached to it, which will not seem surprising when it is considered that it is a life of very great ease, and freedom from care. Indeed it is commonly remarked of the shepherds, that they are more healthy, and seem much more cheerful and contented, than any other class of farm servants. The wages of a shepherd or watchman have been of late about 30*l.* a year on an average, with from 7lbs. to 10lbs. of meat, 10lbs. flour, 2 ozs. of tea, and 1lb. sugar per week, or in the place of tea and sugar, milk; 20*l.* a year is, however, as much as, at the present low price of wool, can be given with profit to the sheep-owner, and out of this sum a man of frugal habits may lay by a considerable sum yearly, more particularly should he learn to shear, by which he may put a few pounds into his pocket every summer in addition to his wages, and still more so, should he by care and good management get charge of a breeding flock, and obtain a prize for rearing a large number of lambs; again, if he be the father of a family, with two or three sons from 12 to 15 or 17 years old, he may, after a short time, take charge of a station, the sons going out with the flocks, whilst he acts as watchman, in which capacity he will have many hours unoccupied during the day, which may be employed in improving his cottage and making his home comfortable; he may also cultivate a garden, or even a small field of corn, whilst his wife would find full employment in domestic matters, the rearing of poultry, &c.; and should there be daughters of sufficient age, they will be sure to obtain good situations as servants in respectable families.

EXTRACT from Captain G. Grey's Report upon the best means of promoting the Civilization of the Aboriginal Inhabitants of Australia.

THIS principle was, that although the natives should, as far as European property and European subjects were concerned, be made amenable to British laws, yet, so long as they only exercised their own customs upon themselves, and not too immediately in the presence of the Europeans, they should be allowed to do so with impunity.

I would submit, therefore, that it is necessary, from the moment the aborigines of this country are declared British subjects, they should, as far as possible, be taught that the British laws are to supersede their own, so that any native who is suffering under their own customs, may have the power of an appeal to those of Great Britain; or, to put this in its true light, that all authorized persons should in all instances be required to protect a native from the violence of his fellows, even though they be in execution of their own laws.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

So long as this is not the case, the older natives have at their disposal the means of effectually preventing the civilization of any individuals of their own tribes; and those among them who may be inclined to adapt themselves to the European habits and mode of life, will be deterred from so doing by their fear of the consequences that the displeasure of others may draw down upon them.

I have known many instances of natives who have been almost or quite civilized, being compelled by other natives to return to the bush; more particularly girls who have been betrothed in their infancy, and who on approaching the years of puberty, have been compelled by their husbands to join them.

To punish the aborigines severely for the violation of laws of which they are ignorant, would be manifestly cruel and unjust, but to punish them in the first instance slightly for the violation of these laws, would inflict no great injury on them, whilst, by always punishing them when guilty of a crime, without reference to the length of period that had elapsed between its perpetation and their apprehension, at the same time fully explaining to them the measure of punishment that would await them in the event of a second commission of the same fault, would teach them gradually the laws to which they were henceforth to be amenable, and would shew them that crime was always eventually (although it might be remotely) followed by punishment.

Some other principal preventives to the civilization of the aborigines, in addition to those I have already stated, are:—

1st. The existence of an uncertain and irregular demand for their labour; thus they may have one day sufficient opportunity afforded them for the exertion of their industry, whilst the next day their services are not required, so that they are compelled once more to have recourse to their former irregular and wandering habits.

2dly. Their generally receiving a very inadequate reward for the services they render; this, combined with their natural fondness for the bush, induces them to prefer that mode of subsistence, which, whilst it is infinitely more agreeable and less laborious, procures for them nearly as great a reward as hiring with white people.

3dly. Their not being taught that different values are attached to different degrees of labour, as well as to the skill and neatness with which it is performed.

Until this difficulty is got over, it appears evident that the natives will only be employed in herding cattle, or in the lowest order of manual labour, which requires no skill, and for which the reward they receive will be so small as scarcely to offer an inducement to them to quit their present wandering mode of life.

The Government, in order to create a supply of labour in the colonies, have been in the habit of giving certain rewards to those individuals who introduced labourers into them. Now it would appear, that he who reclaims one of the aborigines, not only adds another labourer to those who are already in the colony, but confers such a benefit on his fellow settlers, by rendering one who was before a useless and dangerous being, a serviceable member of the community, that this circumstance alone entitles him to a reward.

MINUTE by His Excellency Governor Sir George Gipps, on Captain Grey's Report to the Secretary of State, on the Means of Improving and Civilizing the Aborigines of New Holland.

THE first 14 paragraphs of the report represent the evils which, in the opinion of Captain Grey, grow out of a practice, or supposed practice, of treating the aborigines as a conquered people, and of allowing them, from a feeling of generosity, to be governed by their own laws, in matters wherein they only are concerned.

I am of course unable to speak of the practice in other Australian colonies, or to say what may be the language held by the governments of those colonies towards the aborigines; but the practice alluded to by Captain Grey, has not for many years past been sanctioned by any act of the Government of New South Wales; the language held by this Government being, that the aborigines are Her Majesty's subjects; and that whilst they are entitled in every respect to the benefit and protection of English law, they are amenable also to the penalties imposed on infractions of the law, whether the offence be committed against one of themselves, or against white men. The practice of the government also, is, as far as possible, in conformity with this language; and no law, save English law, or to speak more correctly, the law of the colony founded on English law, is recognized as being of any force in it.

It is true that in administering the law, and especially in enforcing the penalties of it, a difference is frequently made between savages who understand it not, and persons of European origin; but this difference is invariably in favour of the savage; and if it were not so, the law would become the instrument of the most grievous injustice.

It is only the more obvious offences against society, that can, with any degree of justice, be visited against the savage with extreme severity, such as murder, rape, violence against the person, and other offences, which, there can be no doubt, should be regarded alike by the savage and the civilized man, as deserving of punishment.

The next five paragraphs of Captain Grey's report, relate to the disadvantages which the the aborigines are supposed to labour under, from the inadmissibility of their evidence in courts of law.

On this head, it is only necessary to remark, that an Act of Council was passed in this colony, in the year 1839, (3 Vict. No. 16,) to admit their evidence, and that it was disallowed at home, the disallowance of it being notified to me, by the Secretary of State, on the 11th August 1840, and published in the Government Gazette of this colony.

It seems to me, however, essential to remark that the inadmissibility of their evidence, acts perhaps quite as often in favour of the aborigines, as against them. The hardship of the exclusion of evidence that might be favourable to them, is always urged on the jury, both by their council and by the judge; and is again taken into consideration by the executive, in carrying into effect the judgment of the court. The admission indeed of their evidence was, in 1839, as much called for in this colony, by persons who had suffered from the aggressions of the blacks, as by those who advocate their civilization; and complaints have long been loud, that whilst the penalties of the law are rigorously enforced against persons who commit violence on the aborigines, the aborigines themselves are, when brought into our courts, almost invariably acquitted.

This has operated, there is some reason to believe, very unfavourably for the aborigines, as from the difficulty and uncertainty of bringing them to justice, there is a disposition engendered in the minds of the less principled portion of the white population, to take the law into their own hands, as was the case when, about three years ago, not less than 28 aboriginal natives were barbarously murdered in the Liverpool Plains District; an act of atrocity for which seven white men paid the forfeit of their lives on the scaffold.

I may further observe, that council is usually assigned by the supreme court to any natives brought for trial before it; and that the Government always provides the attendance of interpreters, when they can possibly be found. Mr. Threlkeld, a missionary of the London Society, has usually acted on such occasions; and he must, I doubt not, consider it his business to protect the natives as well as to interpret for them.

I have moreover recently, on the application of the Chief Justice, appointed a standing counsel for the aborigines, who will receive a fixed payment or fee from the Government, for every case in which he is engaged. The fee is to be three guineas for every case in Sydney, and five guineas in the country. The remainder of Captain Grey's report I am disposed to think by far the most valuable part of it, as it relates to the means by which the aborigines may be induced to become voluntary labourers for wages.

I consider this the most important part of the report, because I am myself firmly persuaded, that next to the diffusion of Christian instruction, the use of money, or to speak more correctly, the enjoyments which the use of money commands, are the most effectual of all means that can be resorted to in advancing civilization.

I have on various occasions, and particularly in answer to an address presented to me at Wellington Valley, by the inhabitants of the county of Bligh, endeavoured to pursuade the settlers of New South Wales to look to the blacks for a supply of labour.

I have also seriously contemplated the introduction of rewards to persons employing them, somewhat after the manner that is suggested by Captain Grey, but have hitherto been deterred from attempting it, by the fear of the abuse to which such a practice might lead, and the certain difficulties that would attend on the distribution of the rewards.

It is by the employment of the aborigines as labourers for wages, and the education of their children in establishments conducted either by missionaries or official protectors, that I consider the civilization of the aborigines of this continent must be worked out, if it is ever to be accomplished.

It may perhaps be observed, that my opinions with the respect to the employment of the aborigines are at variance with those of many persons, who consider it essential to keep them as far as possible out of contact with white men.

I agree with these persons in thinking that missionary or other establishments for the education of aborigines, should be placed as far as possible from the resort of ordinary settlers, and I have accordingly directed the fixed establishments of the protectors to be so placed in the Port Phillip district; but at a distance from these establishments, I consider that it is by contact with white men, and by being placed as nearly as possible on a par with them, that the civilization of the aborigines is most likely to be advanced.

It must be admitted, indeed, that this will frequently expose them to temptations, which they may not be strong enough to withstand; the men to the use of ardent spirits, the women to be seduced from their husbands or natural protectors.

Already, however, a law exists in the colony which inflicts a penalty of 50*l.* on any person who may be convicted of giving or selling spirits to an aboriginal native; and a law may perhaps be devised that shall give further protection to the women. 2 Vict. No. 18, sect. 49.

It is also to be observed, that during the last session of the Council, an Act was passed to prevent the aborigines, as far as possible, from using or having fire-arms. 4 Vict. No. 8.

Government House, Sydney,
8 July 1841.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

(E. b.)

Gentlemen, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 22 April 1841.

REFERRING to the conversation which the Governor had with the members of the committee of the Church Missionary Society, shortly after his return from Wellington in the month of December last, I am directed to express to you his Excellency's readiness to devote the sum of 50*l.* per annum to the purchase of rewards for distribution amongst the aborigines belonging to the missionary establishment at Wellington Valley.

The rewards should, the Governor considers, be given equally to children as to adults, and should be awarded for general industry, and good conduct, as well as for proficiency in school exercises, or in the mechanical or agricultural skill.

The prizes should consist principally of useful articles, and especially of such as come frequently into use; books may of course be given, but they should not be exclusively religious books.

It is by no means to be understood that the whole sum of 50*l.* is necessarily to be expended in every year; the expenditure should, on the contrary, be at first kept considerably within the 50*l.* in order that the prizes may be increased in number and value in future years, should the effect produced by them render such an increase advisable.

The grant is made for five years certain, and during these five years the unexpended balance of one year may be carried on to the next; no part of the money, however, must be applied to any other purpose than that for which it is granted.

I am directed to add, that whenever the number of aboriginal children (or persons under the age of 16) at the establishment shall, on the average of the whole year, be not less than 50, the amount allowed for rewards will be increased to 100*l.* per annum.

I have, &c.

Colonial Treasury, Sydney, 8 July 1841.

Stephen Greenhill,
Francis L. S. Merewether,
Acting for the Colonial Treasurer.

(G.)

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 27 July 1841.

Sir,

I DO myself the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th instant, No. 149, stating that the clerk of the councils has, by desire of the chairman of the immigration committee, applied to you to furnish him with a return of all charges upon the land fund, up to the latest period, exhibiting the balance now actually applicable to immigration purposes; and requesting, therefore, to be informed of the nature of the expenses which the Governor may consider should be defrayed from the said fund.

In reply, I am directed to inform you that his Excellency considers the following to be legitimate charges on the land fund:—

1st. The expenses of survey and sale, including the whole of the surveyor-general's department, and one-third of the expenses of the treasury and audit departments.

2d. Expenses incurred on account of the aborigines, in which he includes one-half of the border police and Crown Land Commissioners.

3. The charges for immigration.

And Sir George Gipps trusts that, from the 1st of January 1840, this arrangement may be considered as taking effect.

The Lords of the Treasury have, however, given their consent to an arrangement, by which, in new colonies, 50 per cent. of the land fund may be applied in aid of the ordinary revenue (if required), and the permission given three or four years ago, to apply a portion of the land revenue of Port Phillip to the ordinary expenses of government, has never been revoked.

The Governor holds it, therefore, to be competent to the local legislature to apply half the land revenue of the Port Phillip district to the ordinary expenses of government, although he hopes there may be no necessity for so doing. I am directed to add, that it is essential to explain, and always to keep in mind, the difference which exists between the Crown revenue and the land fund.

The Crown revenue comprehends quit-rents, licenses to depasture stock or to cut timber on Crown lands, and some few other items, as well as the revenue derived from the sale of land; land; the essential character of it being, that it is not raised by taxation, and that it may therefore be appropriated, even in colonies that have representative assemblies, under the authority of the Crown alone, and that no authority save the Imperial Parliament can interfere in the appropriation of it.

The land fund is a branch only of the Crown revenue, and consists exclusively of the money raised by the sale of land, and, properly speaking, by the sale only of wild land, or of that description of land which was granted gratuitously up to the year 1831.

Improved lands, and especially lands in large towns, such as Sydney, are not of this description, and the proceeds arising from the sales of them are applicable to purposes of local improvement in the first instance, rather than to immigration.

I am further directed to observe, that as to the balance applicable to immigration at the present moment, it is impossible to ascertain it with any correctness. His Excellency considers all the funds of the colony to be in reality applicable to immigration, repeated pledges having been given by the Legislative Council, with the full concurrence of the public at large, as far as the opinion of the public can be collected, that immigration shall be supported to the utmost extent possible, even although it be necessary to anticipate the proceeds of the land fund, or to mortgage the ordinary revenue for the purpose.

EXTRACT from the REPORT of the BOARD appointed to inquire into the Cause of Sickness and Mortality on board the Immigrant ship "Margaret".

Immigration Office, Sydney,
19 April 1841.

Sir,

WE are of opinion, that not the slightest shadow of blame can attach, either to the surgeon or commander of the Margaret, who indeed, appear to have used every exertion to mitigate and overcome the sickness which prevailed. We found these opinions on the evidence which we have received; and we more especially beg to draw his Excellency's attention to the statement made by Dr. Galloway, a surgeon in the Royal Navy, which, from his having brought out seven vessels with convicts and immigrants to this colony, we consider to be particularly worthy of consideration. That officer expressly states that the provisions of the ship were good, the medical comforts sufficient, and the height of the 'tween decks averaged nine feet, and that the great mortality is to be attributed to the immigrants themselves; this opinion is corroborated by the commander of the vessel, and by three of the most intelligent of the immigrants.

Under such circumstances we cannot but exonerate the affreighters from any wilful neglect in their arrangements towards ensuring a happy termination to the voyage; but we nevertheless consider it of the utmost importance that the necessity should be strongly impressed upon them, of using the greatest caution in the selection of the immigrants, who may in future be sent in their ships. It may be clearly inferred from the accompanying evidence, that the majority of the Margaret's immigrants were greatly deficient in the necessary articles of common clothing, so requisite for the preservation of cleanliness and health, to enable them to undergo the hardships of a long voyage. And we would more especially instance the family of Monahan, alluded to in the evidence of Mr. Wm. Mace.

Although, as has been before stated, no specific fault can be found with the ship, we are nevertheless of opinion that she is not of the class most suitable to the service last engaged in; though so lofty in the 'tween decks, she was but scantily supplied with side ports, and those of the least possible size; whilst at the same time she was entirely unprovided with what we consider to be of the utmost importance, viz., stern ports in the hospitals—a provision which cannot be too strongly insisted on, in all ships engaged for the conveyance of immigrants.

She was also built in North America, where the spaces between the timbers are usually filled with salt to preserve the wood, and consequently from their dampness most unhealthy. We are unwilling to draw invidious comparisons, but it cannot be denied that immigrants sailing from Liverpool, are far inferior in every respect to those from other ports.

We have, &c.

(signed) J. Denham Pinnock,
W. H. Christie,
Arthur Savage,
H. H. Browne.

The Honourable the Colonial Secretary.

EXTRACT from the Statement referred to in the foregoing Extract.

Dr. Thomas Galloway, R. N., states to the court as follows:—

During the voyage there were 41 deaths; he considers that 23 deaths out of the 41, were caused by scarletina; in the remaining cases other diseases assisted in the mortality.

He considers the fever to have been the result of natural causes, but it was greatly aggravated by the slothful habits of the immigrants, and their continued disobedience to the orders that were promulgated for the maintenance of their health and comfort.

He received every support from the captain and third mate; the first and second mates behaved as ill as it was possible to do, giving every opposition to him, and encouraging the discontented part of the community. The height of the vessel between decks averages nine feet.

Mr. William Mace, who acted as constable on board, states, that he considers a family of the name of Monahan brought the scarletina on board, and that the disease was greatly aggravated by the filthy habits of the immigrants, by their refusing to take the medicines prescribed, and by their non-attendance to the order given by the doctor; he does not consider the vessel, or any one connected with it, to have either produced, or augmented the disease, as the provisions were good and plentiful, and the medical comforts sufficient; he lost a fine child on board, but is perfectly satisfied with Dr. Galloway's attention and mode of treatment.

Governor's MINUTE on the foregoing.

The gratuities must be withheld from the officers whose want of attention is complained of.

G. Gipps.

MINUTES of EVIDENCE taken before the IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE.

The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Australia in the Chair.

Tuesday, 15 June 1841.

Sir Thomas Livingston Mitchell, Knight, Surveyor-General of the Colony, called in; and Examined.

1. THE committee have requested your attendance for the purpose of obtaining information in regard to the extent and probable value, first, of the undisposed of Crown lands comprised within the limits of the 19 counties constituting the old colony of New South Wales, and described in the published Government Order dated 14th October 1829; * and, secondly, of the country lying to the westward of those counties, extending to the eastern boundary of South Australia, and bounded on the south by the courses of the rivers Murrumbidgee and Murray: can you, in the first place, inform the committee what number of acres of Crown lands remain unalienated within the 19 counties above referred to?—A return is in course of preparation, which, when completed, will enable me to answer this question with tolerable accuracy. In the meantime I can only state generally, and in round numbers, that the total contents of the 19 counties are about 24,000,000 of acres, of which the quantity granted and sold, up to the year 1836, was about 4,500,000 acres; and allowing 500,000 acres to have been disposed of during the last five years, the number of acres alienated by the Crown will be about 5,000,000, leaving about 19,000,000 of acres yet undisposed of.

* The proclamation was made at a much later period, by Letters Patent, after the rough descriptions referred to had been substantially altered by the Government.

2. Can you inform the committee what proportion of those 19,000,000 of acres is suitable for agricultural and pastoral purposes?—I cannot at present; but I made a report to the government in the year 1834, from which much information respecting the soil in each county may be obtained.

3. Can you inform the committee what proportion of those 19,000,000 of acres you consider saleable, and what is the amount of purchase-money that such saleable proportion would probably realise?—The Report to which I have just alluded will furnish the best information I can give on this point. It will be obvious, from that Report, that the saleable proportion depends much on the formation of roads.

4. Do you think that the new regulations, allowing lands to be sold in the Southern or Port Phillip division of the colony, at the uniform price of 1 l. per acre, which regulations will will soon probably be in force also in the Northern or Moreton Bay division, will prevent or materially retard the disposal of land within the 19 counties, put up for sale by auction at the minimum price of 12 s. per acre?—If the lands within the 19 counties are uniformly put up for sale at the minimum price of 12 s. per acre, I do not think they would; but if higher prices than 12 s. per acre are exacted for the Crown lands remaining undisposed of within the 19 counties, I apprehend very little or none will be sold whilst lands of superior quality can be obtained in the new divisions or districts at the uniform price of 20 s. per acre.

5. Do you mean, then, to express an opinion favourable to the system of sale at a uniform price?—I do not; I mean only to say that, considering the relative value of the best lands in the new districts, which only will of course be selected so long as any remain for selection, and of the land which remains still undisposed of within the 19 counties, if 20 s. per acre be deemed a fair average value for the former, or if they can be obtained at that price, I would consider 12 s. per acre as the full value of such parts of the latter as may be saleable at present. Considering the greater facility of communication with Sydney which will be possessed by occupants of lands within the 19 counties, I would deem those lands as well worth 12 s. per acre to them, as the choice lands in the new districts are worth 20 s. per acre to new settlers, who have roads and bridges to make, markets to create, &c. I ought not, however, to omit to remark, that although I am of opinion that considerable quantities of land within the 19 counties might find purchasers, if offered for sale by the government at the minimum price of 12 s. per acre, yet I do not expect that such purchases will be made chiefly by newly-arrived immigrants; but, on the contrary, I am of opinion that the purchasers would rather be landholders possessing contiguous lands—persons already settled in our towns, possessing capital, and looking to the capabilities of the land when brought into value by improvements still to be made, and to the greater demand for available land, when concentration followed. But with regard to the new population so much wanted, it seems clear that, so long as in those Southern Districts the mode of sale at a uniform fixed price is adhered to, if we wish to induce immigrants possessed of capital to settle amongst us, we can only hope to do so by adopting a similar mode of sale, and offering our lands of secondary quality at a proportionately lower price.

6. You have expressed your opinion of the necessity of adopting the system of sale at a uniform fixed price in the 19 counties, if that system is to be adhered to in the Southern and Northern Districts; but what is your opinion on the abstract question of adopting the system of sale at a uniform fixed price for the disposal of Crown lands?—I consider the sale by auction, as it has worked well in this colony, the best system as yet devised for a pastoral country; all it appears to me to want to suit present circumstances seems to be the sale, by private tender, of lands not sold after having been put up to auction. But, considering abstractedly the intrisic average value of land in Australia, in reference to the annual return or interest on the purchase-money which those lands will produce, my opinion is, that the average prices which have been paid for Crown lands, purchased under the system of sale by auction, are considerably beyond their real value, that is, in reference to any immediate return to be derived from those lands when occupied with a view to either pastoral or agricultural purposes. If I were asked why this should be, my reply would be, that not only are the prices demanded too high, but too little land has been brought into the market, particularly at Port Phillip; and the result has been a great profit to speculators, without any material benefit to the land fund.

7. In respect to the land to the westward of the 19 counties, and bounded by them on the east, by the Murrumbidgee and Murray on the south, and by South Australia on the west, can you inform the committee what extent of that land you are of opinion might be made immediately available to the purposes of immigration, and at what price it might probably be sold?—I think that along the whole western frontier of the 19 counties, to the distance westward of about 40 to 50 miles, or about the average breadth of a county, the land generally is very suitable for grazing purposes, and that much of it would sell at the average rate of 12 s. per acre.

8. Are you aware that the whole of the land which you have just described as likely to be saleable, is at present occupied under depasturing licences?—I believe a considerable portion of it is so occupied.

9. What is your opinion as to the policy of throwing open that land for sale, and thus compelling occupants under the licensing system to go still further to the westward?—If I must point out how a revenue can be raised by the sale of Crown lands, I must say that our necessities render it expedient that those lands should be sold.

10. But looking at the true interests of the colony, without reference to compulsion by the force of circumstances, do you think it would be desirable to put up those lands for sale?—I think that to put up those lands for sale over the heads of the present occupants might be impolitic, especially at this time; but to determine the boundaries of the counties, and to allow those to purchase who could do so, would not, I think, be impolitic. Speculators might certainly annoy occupants; but it is to be considered that there are now much finer fields for speculation, and that our western lands could only be of value to the people occupying them, and these might be allowed the right of pre-emption for certain periods, and the right made even transferable by the squatters, to whom it might afford, in some cases, relief from those difficulties now felt by most people who have depended on stock as a source of profit or income.

11. Generally, then, is it your opinion that a sufficient fund for the purposes of immigration can be raised by sales of land within the 19 counties?—I do not think it can.

12. Does any alteration of the system occur to you by which a sufficient annual fund

NEW SOUTH WALES.

might be raised by sales of land in the Middle District?—I cannot suggest any alteration in the system of sale now in operation in the Middle District, because, as I have already observed, I consider the sale by auction, at a fixed upset price, the best of all modes of sale. There is, however, an amendment which I would suggest, and which has always appeared to me very desirable, and that is, the sale of those lands by private tender, or "by the candle," which have been offered for sale by auction, and not bid for. The lands so remaining after a public sale in the United States of America are, I believe, open in this manner to sale by private tender.

13. Can you inform the committee what are the operative causes which make the difficulty of realising a fund by the sale of Crown lands in the Middle District so much greater than in the Northern or Southern District?—The greater extent of available land; the promised ready means of obtaining it; in fact, the Southern District comprises an extent of good country equal to three times the area of the 19 counties, and the whole of this is open to purchase at 1 l. per acre; for, although the surveys for the sale of small portions do not extend far, the special survey system will meet the public demand.

14. But is there any cause why, in proportion to the good land still remaining unalienated in the Middle District, there should not be as great facility in raising a fund as from the good land in the Southern District?—Because, in point of fact, we have but a small proportion of good land now accessible in the 19 counties which has not been already taken up; and in reference to the land to the westward of the 19 counties, its distance renders it less available. I am of opinion, however, that with convict labour on the requisite roads and bridges, it would be possible to raise from it, for many years, a fund sufficient for all the purposes of immigration. The soil along the banks of the rivers Lachlan, Murrumbidgee, and Murray, is good, and would support an agricultural population throughout nearly their whole extent. These rivers water the extensive regions to the westward of the 19 counties, and if they were not so far from the coast and from roads, I have no doubt that their banks would be fully taken up. On inspecting the maps of locations, it will be seen that they range along the lines of rivers; but we have no rivers within the 19 counties whose banks partake of the same favourable character for agricultural or grazing purposes as those of the Murrumbidgee and Murray. I think that if a township were laid out in a good situation at the junction of the Lachlan and Murrumbidgee, or near where the latter river joins the Murray, and the land measured for immediate sale there, and population could be thereby induced to concentrate about such an inland spot, the rest of the river banks might come into demand and acquire a value, especially as the route between Sydney and Adelaide must be in that direction. Such an interior settlement might be favourable to the accomplishment of other desirable objects, besides the sale of land; the conciliation, for instance, of the numerous and ill-disposed native tribes, who are likely to molest our out-stations, while they are also becoming more and more formidable. These natives derive their subsistence chiefly from the fish in the rivers Murray and Darling, and are probably the most numerous united body of natives at this time in all Australia. New fields would thus be opened to such small farmers as might depend upon the produce of the land. I may add, that the power of making towns in the Central District, and which is no longer vested in the government in the Southern or Northern, might, when judiciously exercised, be much in favour of the land sales, especially if the towns were laid out in connexion with a general system of roads: but I allude to an arrangement so very general as to reach, indeed, beyond even the territory under consideration. The banks of the River Darling partake much of the same grassy character, and along the extensive plains bordering the banks of this long river a level and direct line of communication may in time be opened over land, from the shores of South Australia to the heart of the Northern District, behind Moreton Bay. With the exception of the immediate banks of the rivers above mentioned, and whose courses are laid down in the maps, I can say, without hesitation, that the rest of the intervening country, and extending as far westward as I have travelled, and eastward to where the proposed new counties would reach, as I have already observed, is an unprofitable desert, consisting of barren scrubs of soft, red sand, naked plains, covered with salsolaceous plants, or ridges of quartz and sandstone, where very rarely indeed is any water to be found.

John Mackay, Esq. late of Bengal, Indigo Planter and Merchant, now of Sydney, called in; and Examined.

J. Mackay, Esq.

22 June 1841.

1. You have resided in India for some years, I believe?—Yes, for about 28 years.

2. Were you in the habit of employing Coolies there?—For the greater part of that time; for about 20 years.

3. As field labourers?—For every purpose, excepting as in-door servants.

4. What description of people are known by the name of Coolies; are they people of a particular caste?—The word Coolie means a labourer; the labouring classes of people of every caste in India are called Coolies; indeed, I may say all are so called, excepting the higher castes.

5. In what capacity do you think they might be most usefully employed in this colony?—As agricultural labourers, and particularly as shepherds.

6. Have you employed any Coolies yourself in this country, or have you any experience in in respect to their employment by other people?—I have employed them myself, and have seen them employed by others.

7. As shepherds?—Mr. John Lord took 20 of a number of them brought here by myself nearly four years ago, and he has employed them ever since as shepherds on his land upon the River William, and finds them, as I understand, better than Europeans, being more attentive, especially in the lambing season; I visited the Coolie shepherds myself three years ago, and found them doing well.

8. Are you aware of any causes which would prevent their being employed here, if the colonists were so inclined?—I know that laws have been passed in India to prevent their leaving that country, but I am not aware of anything peculiar in the circumstances of this colony to prevent their being employed here: the laws I refer to were passed in India in compliance with orders from the Board of Control, in London.

9. Has Mr. John Lord those people still in his employ?—He has.

10. You presented a memorial to the government in 1836 on this subject?—I did, two.

11. What were the principal suggestions that you made in those memorials?—The memorials were printed, and will be found among the council records; and what I then said I still adhere to.

12. Is the demand for labour now as great or greater than it was then?—Greater, certainly.

13. Is there any perceptible change, either physically or morally, upon the Coolies brought here by you since their arrival?—I think the moral habits of the 43 who came here with me have generally improved, with the exception of those of two, who are, however, of a bad caste.

14. Have they associated much with European labourers during their stay here?—Very little.

15. Are they Hindoos or Mahometans?—They are neither; they can hardly be said to be of any religion.

16. Has the employment of these people enabled you to forego the employment of European labour?—It has.

17. Has it enabled you to obtain such European labour as you required at a cheaper rate?—No, because the number which I employ is too small sensibly to affect the general price of labour.

18. Is the demand for labour so great, that the introduction of Coolies would not throw any Europeans out of employment?—Certainly the introduction of Coolies might cause fewer Europeans to be employed as shepherds, but there would be abundance of employment for them otherwise. Europeans seldom like to be employed as shepherds; and besides, the cost of employing them is much greater than that of employing Coolies.

19. Can you state what the difference of cost would be?—A European shepherd would not cost less than 50*l.* a year at present, for wages and rations. Three persons would be necessary to take charge of 1,000 sheep, who would cost 150*l.*; an Indian shepherd would not cost more than 20*l.* at the utmost, or 60*l.* for three of them; and supposing 1,000 sheep to produce from 2,400 to 2,800 lbs. of wool, and taking the average to be 2,600 lbs., the difference of cost between European and Coolie shepherds would make a difference in the price of wool of about 8*d.* per lb.

20. You say the Coolies are fit for being employed as agricultural labourers also?—Yes, with the exception of holding an English plough, which I have never known any of them equal to.

21. Is there any reason that you know of to prevent their acquiring in time a knowledge of mechanical trades?—None that I am aware of.

22. Then would they not gradually come into competition with a more numerous class of English labourers than shepherds or farm labourers?—In course of time they might possibly do so; but I do not think they would be disposed to remain longer in the colony than the five years they agree for.

23. How long have Mr. Lord's Coolies been here?—About three years and a half.

24. Have they shown any disposition to return to their own country?—About a year ago many of them said they would remain in the colony; but as the termination of the period of their agreement approaches, all of them, except the few who have saved but little or no money, talk of returning to their own country.

25. Would you not consider it advisable to offer them even higher wages than they at present have rather than allow them to leave your service without having it in your power to supply their place?—I should be glad to offer some of them double the wages they at present have, and a few of them even more than double, in order to retain them; but I have not yet made such an offer to any of them.

26. Would not such experience of the profit to be derived from remaining here induce them to stay in your service?—I think that some of them might remain here; but as the period for which they are engaged draws near its termination, the greater part seem more anxious to return home, especially those who have saved money, which all of them, except one or two, have done in my own service. I do not know what is the case with respect to those in Mr. Lord's service, but I think it must be much the same.

27. If proprietors in general were to engage Coolies in the same proportion that you have done, would not this enable them to dispense in the same proportion with European labour, and so to render it less valuable?—In a great measure it would, in so far as regards shepherds; but it would not enable them to dispense altogether with European labour; for instance, I think the Coolies cannot use an English plough, and I know that none of them are mechanics.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

J. Mackay, Esq.

28. Is it not possible that landed proprietors, finding the great pecuniary advantage attendant on the employment of Indian labour, might be induced to employ it as extensively as possible, so as in a great degree to surround themselves with Indians, and in the same degree to dispense with the service of Europeans?—I think, as far as they could, they would do so, but not to the entire exclusion of Europeans. European ploughmen and mechanics must in all cases continue to be employed, as well as European domestic servants of almost every description.

29. But would not there be a continual tendency in the Coolies to acquire those descriptions of skill in which they are now deficient, so as to come gradually more and more into competition with Europeans?—Not beyond field labour; they may acquire more dexterity in field labour of all descriptions, except ploughing; but I have never seen any of them attempt to become mechanics of any kind; the difference of wages even in their own country is as 2 to 16, and yet that has not had the effect of inducing them to attempt to become carpenters, &c.

30. But in their own country, does not the existence of caste almost operate as a prohibition against their entering into any fresh mode of employment, however profitable or desirable it may be?—No, it does not amount to a prohibition, but there is a feeling or disposition in individuals not to aspire beyond the condition in which they were born; this prejudice is so strong, as to render their acquiring the knowledge of any mechanical trades almost impossible. But if a Coolie wished to become a mechanic, there is nothing in his caste to prevent him; the prohibition exists only in their own prejudices and habits.

31. Would not their experience of our customs gradually free them from their prejudices, and lead them to acquire skill in other modes of employment?—I do not think it would in anything beyond mere field labour; at any rate, I do not think that the prejudices of people coming from India for a limited period only could be so far removed; but upon young people, brought up from their youth in this colony, it might have that effect.

32. Have you considered how far it would be for the political and moral benefit of this colony to have spread over all parts of it men of the Coolie caste, continually entering into competition with the European labourer, and from the inferiority of their habits, enabled to underbid him in the labour market, and so continually to depreciate his services?—I cannot say that I have given that question the degree of consideration which it merits; but I am not inclined to think that the introduction of Coolies can materially affect this colony either morally or politically, and if at all, certainly not prejudicially in either way; their moral habits will not suffer by comparison with those of the population of any country; and, politically, I conceive their introduction would materially benefit the colony, in extending and improving its resources; I would not wish to see them spread over the face of the country indiscriminately with all classes, but as they would only come for a limited period, and in very limited numbers in proportion to the European population, few or none would, in my opinion, remain; indeed I do not think there would be a trace remaining of them in a generation hence; moreover it is, I believe, not to be expected that we shall have cheap labour until we have a superabundant population; when Europeans and their descendants multiply in the country, and every flat and valley susceptible of profitable employment is occupied, and thriving villages arise in every eligible position, (and the time may not be far distant when such may be the case,) the country will be in a position to depend on its own resources alone, not only for labourers to till the ground and tend its flocks and herds, but also for every necessary as well as comfort of life; Coolie labour, as well as every other description of foreign aid, will then cease to be required, and such things will only be remembered as being among the other anomalies in the history of the early progress of this country.

33. Would not your first impression be, that it would tend to reduce the European character to the level of the Indian?—Character depends so much on early habits, that I do not think the European character could be much affected by it; and it would be found that the Indian labourers would seldom or never aspire to the attainment of any improvement in their condition which could affect the European.

34. Would it not appear to you that the European labourer must relinquish some of his present habits to enable him to compete with the Coolie?—The effect would certainly be to reduce the rate of wages, but I do not think it would have any effect upon the intellectual or moral habits of the European.

35. Would not the effect in the United Kingdom be to check the disposition to emigrate, if it were known that there existed in this colony a class of people constantly operating in this way to keep down the price of labour?—It might, partially, at first; but when a sober industrious European labourer was informed that, by saving a little money here, he might himself become an employer of cheap Coolie labour, he would be more disposed to emigrate, and such parties would come in greater numbers. I know indeed some gentlemen of capital in India and England who have been deterred from coming to this colony by their knowledge of the high price of labour here, but who would readily come if they saw a prospect of obtaining cheap Coolie labour, which would enable them to employ their capital profitably; I have, however, considered it to be my duty to advise them not to adventure to the colony so long as the present scarcity of labour exists.

36. But if persons of capital should come to this colony with the purpose of depending entirely, or almost entirely, on the labour of Indian Coolies, would not the consequence be, that that a state of society must prevail which would be anything but desirable?—They would employ as many Coolies as they could, no doubt, because they would come out and bring their capital with that view; that would be the inducement to come. I know two persons of large property at this time, who would come here if they could be sure of having Coolie labour; but they would nevertheless be obliged to employ Europeans as grooms, in-door servants, and ploughmen.

37. If Coolie labour should become superabundant, would it not have the effect of enabling many Europeans of the working classes to employ Coolies under them, and thus cause the condition of the European labourer to be improved rather than deteriorated?—That is my opinion; but I do not think (and I say this deliberately) that Coolie labour can ever become superabundant.

38. Do you think there is any reason to suppose that Coolies could be procured in such numbers as to cause the supply to be superabundant, or in excess of the demand for their services?—I think not; there is now so great a competition for their labour in India, that it would prevent their coming in such numbers as to affect the present rate of their wages.

39. Is it really your opinion that the condition of the European labourer would be improved by his being enabled to become an employer of Coolie labour?—Such is my opinion. I speak only of such Europeans as by sobriety and industry could save money, and thereby have it in their power to employ Coolies.

40. If the European labourer were enabled to employ the Coolie in his own service, instead of himself serving a master, would it not have the effect of making European labour still more scarce, and therefore still more expensive than it is at present?—It would have that effect at first, but I think more of the labouring classes of Europeans would come here if they found that they could employ the Coolies.

41. Are you of opinion that the employment of Coolies by those Europeans who are or have been labourers would take place?—I do expect that such would be the case.

42. In proportion as the Coolies might acquire skill in other occupations besides field labour, would not the same consequences follow, of their being employed in such occupations in preference to Europeans, because obtainable at a cheaper rate of wages?—It is not my opinion that they would take up other occupations; they never do so in their own country. I look upon it as next to impossible for any Coolie, after passing the age of 18, to acquire skill in any other occupation than that in which he was trained.

43. Do you suppose the Coolies to be incapable of acquiring skill in any mechanical occupation?—Coolies are suitable only for the most simple kinds of labour.

44. Do you think the condition and habits of the Coolies have been improved, or the contrary, since coming into your service?—From their better food in this country, they have acquired more bodily strength than they possessed when in their own country; they cannot plough, but they use the grubbing-hoe better than Europeans do, and are far more efficient in weeding; and with a little trouble in teaching them, would become equally useful in reaping, &c.

45. Might not the prevalent employment of Coolies render European labourers less willing to come to this country, and make it more difficult at the same time to retain in that condition such as should arrive?—I certainly think that European labourers of sober and industrious habits would come here in greater numbers when they found that, by saving their money, they could themselves employ Coolies; and I do not think that Coolies could ever be brought from India in such numbers as to interfere with the employment of European labourers, upon such terms as they would be quite contented with.

46. Have any of the Coolies left families in their native country?—I do not with certainty remember, but they were examined on their arrival here, and the information sought by the committee may be obtained, I suppose, from the report of that examination; I think that seven of them left families in India; one of them brought a child with him.

47. Have many of them been able to save money out of their wages?—The whole have; the greater part of them have saved from 15*l.* to 20*l.* I believe such a sum would enable a Cooolie, in his own country, to live very comfortably with his family for the remainder of his life. Some of them, after going home and spending some time with their friends, would, I have no doubt, return to this colony.

48. Then you think it decidedly advantageous to Coolies to be allowed to come here for a few years?—I do.

49. If Coolie labourers were introduced here in great numbers, would it be necessary to enact any law for their protection?—I think it would, even should only half the number at present required be introduced.

50. Should that law embrace an engagement on the part of their employers to return them to their own country at the expiration of the term for which they were engaged, or would that be provided for in the regulations made in India in respect to the permission for them to emigrate?—I think it should be provided for by enactments to be made in this colony; and that a bond should be taken from every man employing Coolies, obliging him to return them to their own country at the expiration of their agreement, unless of their own free will they chose to remain.

51. Have you a copy of the agreement made with the Coolies brought here by you?—I have;* it is written both in the English and in the native Indian languages. (Copy put in.) *(A.)

52. Have you a copy of the law passed by the Indian government to prevent the emigration of Coolies?—I have.† (A printed copy put in.) †(B.)

FORT WILLIAM LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT, the 27th May 1839.

The following Act is passed by the Honourable the President of the Council of India in Council, on the 27th May 1839, with the assent of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, which has been read and recorded.

Ordered, that the Act be promulgated for general information.

Act, No. XIV. of 1839.

I. It is hereby enacted, that Acts No. XXXII. of 1837, and No. V. of 1837, be repealed on the 1st day of July next.

II. And it is hereby enacted, that on and after the said 1st day of July next, every person who shall make with any native of India any contract for labour to be performed in any British or foreign colony without the territories of the East India Company, or who shall knowingly abet or aid any native of India in emigrating from the said territories for the purpose of being employed as a labourer, shall be liable on conviction before a magistrate, or justice of the peace, to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees for every native so contracted with, aided, or abetted, and in default of payment of such fine, shall be liable to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three months.

III. Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall be taken to apply to any native seaman, who shall of his own free will contract to navigate any vessel, or who shall embark on board such vessel in pursuance of such contract, or to any person who shall contract to serve as a menial servant only, or who shall embark as such menial servant.

Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

Friday, 25 June 1841.

John Lord, Esq. of Sydney, Merchant and Landowner, called in, and Examined.

J. Lord, Esq.

25 June 1841.

1. THE committee understand that you have been for some time in the habit of employing Hill Coolies in your service; will you have the goodness to state their number, and how you employ them?—I have 19 ordinary Coolies and one sirdar; the sirdar and 17 of the Coolies have been employed at my farm at William's River, about three years and a half, principally as shepherds, in which capacity, as well as in that of general farm servants, they have given every satisfaction, and are themselves, I believe, equally satisfied.

2. In saying that they have given satisfaction as general farm servants, will you state what kind of farm work they are qualified to perform?—They are efficient in the field with axe or hoe, and are expert at reaping with a sickle, but I have not tried them with the scythe; they are expert also in the culture of tobacco and Indian corn, but I do not consider them adapted for ploughing or driving bullocks; indeed the bullocks do not appear to like them; as watchmen they are vigilant in guarding drays, and preventing the cattle from straying; but they are not employed to watch sheep, as they are not so wakeful as white men, nor can they be so well relied upon in counting in the sheep into the folds: as shepherds, however, they are equal to the best white men. One of those in my service keeps 650 sheep, which is a very large number for our part of the country, which is woody and hilly.

3. Have

NEW SOUTH WALES.

J Lord, Esq.

25 June 1841.

3. Have you sustained many losses of sheep under their charge, as compared with losses from flocks in charge of white men?—I have no exact information as to this point, but I conclude there is no ground for complaint, or I must have heard of it.

4. In speaking of white men, do you refer to convict or to free shepherds?—I refer principally to convict shepherds; I have but three free shepherds; I have found a general disinclination among white men to undertake the employment; the few that I have were formerly prisoners. While convicts they were used to tend sheep, and they are now fit for nothing else; no person would hire them for any other service. I have not one free immigrant shepherd in my service, but my farming operations are principally carried on by free labour.

5. Have you ever heard any repugnance expressed by the Coolies to the occupation of a shepherd?—Never; the sirdar tells them what they are to do, and manages them; they make no objection; it suits them better than any other employment, while white men do not like it; it appears to the white man too much like solitary confinement on a great scale.

6. Is it the practice with you to send out the sheep at sun-rise, and bring them in to fold at sun-set?—It is; they are sent out at sun-rise, and at sun-set they are brought in, and delivered over to the watchmen.

7. Is it the practice of the Coolies to take but one meal a day, and that after sun-set?—I am not certain, but I think their practice is to take out with them in the morning a little toasted rice, which supports them during the day, and that after their return at night they take their principal meal; at first it was necessary to give them their ration daily, as they would eat it all at once; now however it is issued to them the same as to other servants, and they evince every disposition to adopt the European mode of living.

8. Supposing that you had the opportunity, would you employ them in greater numbers?—I would, if I were permitted, at once import 100, and in that case I would retain only as many white men as might be required for farm work, which the Coolies are not so well adapted for. My impression is, that the Coolies would make good stockmen, as they ride well, and walk well.

9. Were the Coolies in your service indented to you, or engaged under any particular agreement?—They were engaged under agreement to Mr. Mackay, and by him transferred to me under the same agreement, which I now produce. The substance of this agreement is, that they are to serve Mr. Mackay, or such other person as he might transfer them to, as free labourers, (such transfer to be with mutual consent of the parties, to be declared before a public officer,) for the period of five years, on a monthly salary of five rupees, or 10*s.*, and clothing and food as follows: clothing; one blanket, two dooties (or wrappers), one chintz jacket, one Lascar's cap, and one wooden bowl yearly. Food: rice 14 chittacks, dholl (pulse) 2 chittacks, ghee (Indian butter) ½ chittack, and salt ¼ chittack, daily; also one brass cup between four, and medical attendance and medicine when required, and to be sent back to Calcutta, free of all expense to themselves, at the expiration of their term of service, should such be their wish. Each man has a copy of this document, and to it is annexed his personal description, and a ticket describing his name, and other particulars, and certifying that that individual contract had been inspected by the superintendent of the Calcutta police, and the contents thereof fully explained to the party named in it.

10. Have you had any difficulty in conforming with the terms of this agreement as to food and clothing?—There was a difficulty at first as to both, in consequence of its having been found almost impossible to procure some of the articles specified; but they readily agreed to accept equivalents, that is, a ration of flour, beef, ginger, and salt, and articles of English clothing instead of their own, according to the scale in the document which I now produce.* (Document put in). This document also contains a statement, showing the comparative cost of maintaining these people and white men.

11. In a pecuniary point of view, what do you conceive is the extent of the advantage of employing Coolies instead of white men?—The paper I have just put in will show, that in the employment of 100 Coolies, as I have before proposed, the advantage would be, that about 1,900*l.* would pay their whole cost for a year, whereas the same number of free white men would cost more than double; besides, too, the Coolies are much more easily managed than white men, whilst their efficiency in such work as they can perform is quite equal.

12. In a flock of 1,000 sheep, what would be the saving per pound on the wool in consequence of employing Coolies instead of free emigrant shepherds?—Assuming that each fleece would weigh 2 ½ lbs., the produce of wool from the 1,000 sheep would be 2,500 lbs.; and calculating that the 1,000 sheep would require the services of three men, the saving on employing two Coolies as shepherds, and only one white man as watchman, instead of three white men, would be the difference between their expenses, which would be about 47*l.*, or about 4 ½ d. per pound on the wool.

13. Could you obtain freemen as shepherds at the present time at an expense of 42*l.* each per annum?—I think I could not; the calculation I have given in was made in 1839, at which time wages were 25*l.* per annum; they are now much higher for shepherds, even as high as 30*l.*; indeed free immigrants will hardly engage in that occupation on any terms; but I find no difficulty in obtaining such men as farm labourers.

14. Supposing you were enabled to introduce a continued succession of Coolies, what arrangements should you make for their employment?—I should employ new comers as shepherds; and those who have been hitherto employed in that occupation I should make watchmen, and so do away altogether the necessity of employing white men about the sheep.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

J. Lord, Esq.

15. What further saving in the pound of wool would this produce?—The additional saving would be about 24 l. per annum on each man, or about 2 d. in the pound of wool, making, with the former saving I have stated, nearly 7 d. per pound in all; and if the free man's wages be calculated at 30 l. per annum, the saving per pound will be as nearly 8 d. as possible.

16. What proportion would this bear to the present average price of wool per pound?—About one half; the price given in Sydney, taking one year with another, being about 1 s. 4 d. per pound. Indeed my impression is, that sheep-farming cannot be profitably carried on at the present high price of labour.

17. Have you ever employed any of the native blacks of this country as shepherds, or in any other capacity on your farm, and what is your general impression as to the practicability of so employing them generally?—I have never employed them as shepherds; I have employed them, however, in washing sheep, in which I found them quite as useful as white men; I should hardly have got through the washing last season without them. As to the practicability of employing them generally, I have not considered it; but judging from their migratory habits, I do not think they could be generally employed in any permanent occupation. I had a boy for two years and a half, who was clothed and fed in the kitchen, but he ultimately returned to his tribe in the bush.

18. Would not the tendency of the employment of Coolies be to diminish the necessity for the services of white men as shepherds and watchmen?—It would.

19. Do you think that the same consequence would follow in regard to the other occupations of white men?—I do not think so; the introduction of Coolies would not interfere with the demand for European mechanics, or persons who have come out as immigrants seeking employment as farm labourers. Indeed I do not think the Coolies would become competitors with Europeans in any occupations except those of shepherding and sheep-watching; in fact, I should consider them as coming only to supply that kind of labour which we look for in vain from European emigration.

20. Have you had much opportunity, from personal observation, of knowing the habits and disposition of the Coolies in your service?—My opportunities of personally observing them have been for about two months in the shearing season every year since they have been with me, and twice or thrice on other occasions for about a week in each year.

21. Can you state whether their inclination is to establish themselves permanently here, or to return to their own country?—I do not know what their general inclination in this respect may be, but some of them have expressed an intention to remain here permanently, and have said, that if they do go back to their own country, it will be only to return here with their wives. If they had their wives I think many of them would remain, who may not otherwise do so.

22. Supposing they had their wives with them, would you be equally willing to engage them?—I should be even more willing to engage them, as they would then be more likely to remain permanently on the farm, and I should not be troubled with changes.

23. Would not the tendency of your proposition be permanently to establish two different races of people in this colony?—If the Coolies did not return, it certainly would have that tendency.

24. If Coolies were generally introduced into the colony, would not the natural course of things be, that great landed proprietors would, as far as possible, surround themselves with them?—I think they would be generally sought after as shepherds, in consequence of the cheapness of their labour, and that some persons might even engage them as house servants.

25. Must they not change their native habits very much to fit them for house servants?—They would naturally change their habits from intercourse with us; in fact they have done so already, in point of food and clothing. I have two at my house near Sydney; one of them employed as a shepherd, and the other in the garden, cutting wood, bringing grass for the cows, fetching water with a bullock-cart, turning the mangle, or in any other general work; these men at first saved money, which they lodged in the savings banks, but they have latterly become so fond of dress that they now spend the whole of their earnings in that way.

26. From what you have seen of these men and others in your employ, do you think them utterly unqualified for all other descriptions of employment than what they now engage in?—I have not tried them in any other way; there is no knowing what they might do; they might be employed in vineyards or gardens, and in other light works, but I think they would generally be confined to some inferior employment, not requiring great skill or strength.

27. Do you consider them generally inferior in capacity to Europeans?—I do.

28. From the cheapness of Coolie labour, do you think it at all to be apprehended that free emigrants coming out to this colony as labourers would become employers of Coolies?—I think they would be apt to employ them whenever they began to become farmers themselves.

29. Do you think it would encourage immigrant labourers more readily to become farmers?—The facility of getting cheap labour would undoubtedly tend that way.

30. Do you think that this would benefit the European labourers?—As the European labourers saved a little money they would likely become farmers, and might employ a few Coolies, and in this way I think the Coolies would benefit the European.

31. Do

31. Do you not think it probable that the character and morals of a European labourer could be improved by his power of obtaining and employing the labour of persons inferior to himself in strength and capacity?—I am not prepared to say what would be the effect upon the European population of the colony, of having Coolies in their employment, but I should think it ridiculous to apprehend any moral danger from it, which could at all affect an Englishman.

32. Have you observed, with regard to the Coolies employed upon your farm, that the Europeans treat them as inferior creatures?—I have observed nothing of the kind, nor have I any apprehension that it is so; but I ought to say that, to prevent anything of the kind, I have made arrangements for keeping them separate; but whenever, in their employments, they do come together, they agree very well.

33. Have you observed any disposition on the part of the whites to domineer over them?—I have not, but I am not sufficiently there to know much on this point; I have given strict injunctions that nothing of the kind should be allowed, and if it did occur I should certainly have heard of it.

34. Have you, as their master, a more easy control over them than over Europeans?—Certainly; they are more easily controlled and managed than Europeans; for they are naturally more docile and tractable.

35. Have they made any saving of money whilst in your service?—They have; I have with me savings bank receipts belonging to three of them, which show that their deposits amount to upwards of 16*l.*, or, on an average, more than 5*l.* each. With respect to the others, I think that in three years and a half they have drawn the wages only of one year (although they regularly get their monthly order), and have therefore, on an average, two years and a half's wages due to them (or notes for that amount unpresented for payment); and I shall allow them savings bank interest on the balances in my hands.

36. Do you think them much influenced by the desire of gain?—They are as much so as any men in the colony; they understand, and look sharply after, their own interests.

37. By that means can you induce them to undertake any task or work that you wish to have performed?—I have not tried that.

38. Should you think, when they become better aware of what are the more profitable kinds of manual labour among white men, that the hope of profit will induce them to apply themselves to them?—I think it might. When they see that they can obtain larger wages they may endeavour to do so; but I think they cannot go beyond a certain limit; at least in the present generation.

39. But as far as they could go, would they not become more and more competitors with the Europeans?—As far as they could go, they certainly would; but I think that would not be so far as to interfere with European labour.

40. What do you consider would be the effect of the extended introduction of Coolie labour upon European emigration?—I think an extensive introduction of Coolie labour would enable sheep, stock, and all other kinds of property to maintain a fair value, and render pastoral establishments more prosperous, and occasion an increase of the land fund, by which means European emigration might be carried on to a greater extent than ever. Wool is our staple export, and is the basis of the prosperity of the colony; but without shepherds wool cannot be produced; and experience proves to me, that from barely hireable immigrants alone shepherds cannot be supplied, and that to avert the complete annihilation of this principal source of the wealth of the colony, which must result from the want of shepherds, recourse must be had to other more immediately available means than European emigration; and it seems to me that it is to the introduction of Indian Coolies we must now look for a plentiful supply of labour of a description at once cheap, and suitable to the nature and exigency of our pastoral wants; I say this from real experience and personal observation, as being the only person in this colony who has fairly tried Coolie labour for a length of time, on an extensive establishment in the interior.

Charles Campbell, Esq. of Sydney, called in, and Examined.

C. Campbell, Esq.

5 July 1841.

1. THE committee understand you are engaged in sheep-farming to a considerable extent?—I have been so since 1835; and my father has been so since the year 1825.

2. What description of labour have you been accustomed to employ in charge of sheep?—Convicts as well as freed and free labourers, but chiefly freed; a proportion of the free are Scotch shepherds, imported by myself.

3. Have you had difficulty of late in obtaining a sufficient supply of labour for that purpose?—Not of late.

4. Have wages and the cost of other allowances much increased?—If I were to express an opinion founded on personal experience, I should say that the wages of farm servants and shepherds have been slightly reduced within the last six months.

5. What is your calculation of the total cost of maintaining a free immigrant shepherd at this time?—During the present year I have hired men at 24*l.*, 25*l.*, and 26*l.* a year, with a single ration; and the other day I engaged a Highland shepherd, who had been nine months in the colony, at 20*l.*, and his two sons, one 13, and the other 12 years of age, at 12*l.* each, allowing the family, on account of the mother, four rations; and computing the extra ration at 15*l.*, the joint wages of these three shepherds will not exceed 60*l.*, or 20*l.* each; but calculating the average wages at 25*l.*, and the cost of the ration at 15*l.*, the expense

NEW SOUTH WALES.

C. Campbell, Esq.

5 July 1841.

pense of each free man would be 40*l.* a year; this however refers only to men employed on stations within the boundaries of location; I would estimate the wages of shepherds generally within the boundaries at from 25*l.* to 28*l.*, and of those without the boundaries (I speak of the southern districts only) at 30*l.* a year.

6. What proportion of your flocks is generally within the boundaries?—About two-thirds at present.

7. Have you sustained many losses in your flocks from shepherds leaving you without due notice, and your being in consequence not prepared to replace them by others?—No, none.

8. Do you keep your flocks in larger numbers than you would wish to do, or would do, if shepherds were more easily obtainable?—No; sometimes I put from 800 to 1,000 dry ewes, wethers, or weaned lambs in a flock; but generally I have two shepherds and one watchman to every 1,000 sheep.

9. If free labour only is to be employed at the present prices in the charge of sheep, can sheep-farming be carried on at a profit?—Not if we are to buy land at 12*s.* an acre; it appears to me that we are trying to effect a natural impossibility, viz. to make land dear where it is extremely plentiful, and labour cheap where, from the nature of things, it must be inadequate to the demand, and consequently dear; I do not think it desirable to reduce the wages of a shepherd, drawing a single ration, below 24*l.* a year, supposing the shepherd to be a full-grown man, because if that man marry, and have to support a wife and one or two young children, he would have to pay 15*l.* for their victuals, and would have only 9*l.* left to buy clothing for himself and family, and to educate his children.

10. Do you consider that you are suffering more at the present time from want of labour, or from want of a market for your surplus stock?—We suffer most from the want of a market, and I do not think that this should be ascribed so much to the want of labour as to the increased price of land combined with the very low price of wool; I do not hesitate to acknowledge, however, that the cessation of assignment has been partly instrumental in preventing persons from purchasing sheep on speculation, although I must add that four years ago, when sheep were at a very high price, ewes bringing so much as 50*s.* a piece, free and freed shepherds obtained within 2*l.* of the rate of wages I am now giving; the chief difficulty that I have to contend with as a flock-master and landholder (not a squatter) is the cheapness of meat; I cannot afford to sell mutton fed on purchased land under 4*d.* a pound.

11. From what class of people do you find shepherds most readily obtained?—From the freed convicts who have been trained to the charge of sheep during their servitude. The English immigrants are not so well qualified as Scotch Highlanders; and indeed we can turn their labour to better account. Men who have been accustomed to occupations of a sedentary character, such, for instance, as cotton-spinners, weavers, tailors, and all similar classes of people, would make better shepherds than agricultural labourers would. There is a strong dislike to the lonely, monotonous, and indolent life of a shepherd among all men who have been accustomed to an active life.

12. What kind of accommodation is provided for shepherds and their families at the establishments and stations?—Slab huts; I allow a hut, containing two rooms, to each family; most of my huts, designed for families, are shingled, and comfortable enough for our mild climate.

13. From your observations upon the probable extent of European emigration, are you of opinion that a sufficient number of shepherds can be obtained from that source?—I should be of that opinion certainly, if the system of introducing immigrants were carried on on proper principles, but not so if the present system were to continue of bringing out chiefly young married couples. Parents with large families of children from 10 to 18 years of age are, in my opinion, the most suitable description of immigrants for this colony, and the most easily obtained at home.

14. Have you formed any estimate of the number of shepherds and watchmen required to attend duly to the sheep in the colony?—I have; and beg to submit it for consideration of the committee, premising that the number actually employed at this moment cannot be far short of 9,000, allowing three men to every 1,000 sheep; my estimate is as follows:—

Sheep	3,000,000	supposed number at present in the colony.
	150,000	given number of casual deaths per annum, at five per cent.
	350,000	supposed to be slaughtered.
	500,000	decrease.
	2,500,000
	800,000	increase, at 80 per cent., supposing one-third of the whole number of sheep to be breeding ewes.
	3,300,000	total next December.
	3,000,000	total last December.
	300,000	actual increase during the year.

For which, say 1,000 additional shepherds, watchmen, and bullock-drivers would be required.

Each new settler would want a hut-keeper, a bullock-driver, a stock-man, and two farm-servants, able to fence, &c. &c. say five in all,

NEW SOUTH WALES.

C. Campbell, Esq.

5 July 1841.

Compute the number of new settlers, i.e. persons either just arrived, or sons of old settlers, or retired officers, professional men, merchants, and shopkeepers, who may, during the current year, establish themselves as farmers or land-holders, at 400; this will give, as the number of additional farm-servants and labourers wanted - - - - - - - - - - - -	2,000
Number of shepherds and watchmen, according to my calculation - - -	1,000
Required in our towns, as servants, labourers, and mechanics - - - -	1,000
To supply the place of such as shall cease to be servants, especially shepherds, and shall become small farmers, &c. - - - - - - - - - -	1,000
Male Adults - - - -	5,000
Their wives, sisters, and daughters - - - - - - - - -	5,000
Total number of adults of both sexes that, in my opinion, will be required annually for the next two years, by the inhabitants of the Central Colony of New South Wales - - - - - - - - - - -	10,000

I believe that immigration, to the extent here assumed, will keep wages at the rates I have mentioned, or something under. I would remark, however, that the wages of shepherds, unless care were taken to send us a peculiar class of emigrants; viz. men about 50 years old, with sons of 10 to 18 years of age, might rise considerably, because the strongest men, particularly farm-servants, will not become shepherds, if they can get any other kind of employment. I feel certain that I have not under-rated the quantity of labour required, because I have taken no account of the accession which our available strength will derive from the young children, who will every year be gaining sufficient strength to qualify them for service, nor have I alluded to the possibility—I ought to say probability—of the married women gradually superseding the other sex in managing dairies, cooking, and hut-keeping, occupations which only the paucity of women has thrown, in our interior, upon men, who are not so well qualified for them, and might be much more advantageously employed otherwise. If, too, as I apprehend will shortly be the case, our sheep farmers within the boundaries reduce the number of sheep kept by each to 2,000 and 4,000, fewer men will be required by that class of colonists, for if, instead of one settler occupying 20,000 and 30,000 acres of land, and the distance between the settlers' houses being, as at present, 8 to 12 miles, they each occupy only 6,000 acres, and their houses and farm-yards be only three miles asunder, native dogs will be gradually destroyed, and the sheep be left for a portion of the day without a shepherd between the boundary fences, or, at all events, watchmen may be dispensed with, which would at once cause a saving of one man to every 1,000 sheep, or one-third of the number of shepherds required. The principal objection now urged to the employment of married shepherds, viz. the protracted absence of the husband from his home, and the consequent defenceless state of the wife all day, would also be removed. My estimate of the number of sheep at present in the colony is founded upon the quantity of wool exported, taking 2¼ lbs. as the average produce of each sheep free from scab.

15. Is there any other source than that of European emigration from which you think the extent of labour which is required could be obtained?—Yes; if we regard a supply of cheap labour abstractedly, we can be supplied to any extent from the countless population of British India; and I presume, that were an experiment on a large scale made by the Government, it would not be found impossible, gradually, to convert the aborigines of this country, a tribe of indolent hunters, into indolent shepherds. I think the introduction of Coolies would benefit large flock-masters for a time; I do not think that, for the present, more than 3,000 or 4,000 would be brought hither, unless sugar and cotton were grown to the north of Port Macquarie; I do not believe that the large sheep establishments can be continued, unless Coolies or convicts be obtainable, or unless the price of pasture land be reduced to 5*s.* an acre.

16. Do you offer that opinion, after having considered the moral and political consequences of such a measure, as well as its immediate effect upon pecuniary interests?—To the introduction of Coolies, or any other race of men without wives and families, I think there are, in a moral point of view, many serious objections; but in a political, I am not aware of any; the relief afforded to the flock-masters, by the introduction of Coolies, would only be a temporary one, and to the landholder such a measure would not be beneficial.

17. What is the average price of sheep at this time?—From 10*s.* to 12*s.*; a sale of 4,500 sheep was lately effected at 13*s.*, but I do not know the proportion of ewes.

Monday, 5 July 1841.

Edward Hamilton, Esq. of Cassilis, Settler, called in, and Examined.

E. Hamilton, Esq.

5 July 1841.

1. THE Committee understand you are engaged in sheep-farming to a considerable extent?—I have been so engaged since my arrival in the colony, about 16 months ago.

2. What description of labour have you been accustomed to employ in charge of sheep?—I have on my establishment free, convict, and freed men, but there are no free men in charge of my sheep.

3. Have

3. Have you had difficulty, of late, in obtaining a sufficient supply of labour for that purpose?—Very great difficulty at certain times of the year; at shearing time, and at the lambing seasons in particular. At these seasons extra hands are required, and the wages asked are so exorbitant that it is almost better to run the risk of loss, through a deficiency of men, than to employ them on their own terms. I know many instances in which wages at the rate of 15 s., and even 20 s. per week, have been paid to shepherds during the shearing season.

4. Have wages, and the cost of other allowances, much increased in consequence?—Except at the seasons before mentioned, the price of labour in the Cassilis district remains tolerably steady at 30 l. a year, but with the very large weekly ration of 10 lb. of flour, 9 lb. of meat, 3 oz. of tea, and 1½ lb. of sugar.

5. What is your calculation of the total cost of maintaining a free immigrant shepherd at this time?—A free shepherd cannot be maintained, at the present time, under 50 l. a year.

6. What proportion of your flocks is generally within the boundaries?—My flocks are all within the boundaries.

7. Have you sustained many losses in your flocks from shepherds leaving you without due notice, and your being, in consequence, not prepared to replace them by others?—I have not; but some of the proprietors in my immediate neighbourhood have; owing to the extreme facility of getting employment, it is difficult to induce men to enter into an engagement to serve for any length of time; few will bind themselves for more than three months, and at the expiration of that time they invariably strike for an increase of wages. I know an instance in which a flock of ewes and lambs were shepherded during the last season, by four different shepherds within a fortnight; the injury done was very great. Though I have lost no sheep through the desertion of the flocks by any of the shepherds, my sheep have materially suffered in condition from the scarcity of labour, and the impossibility of inducing men to enter into a long engagement. The shepherd who is under an engagement to serve but for a short time, is utterly indifferent about the condition of his flock, and the master is not able to exercise any control over him.

8. Do you keep your flocks in larger numbers than you would wish to do, or would do if shepherds were more easily obtainable?—I do, certainly.

9. Are the sheep, generally, suffering from the over-crowded state of the flocks?—They are not thriving so well as they would if they were in smaller flocks.

10. Do you consider the fleece has deteriorated in quality and quantity from these causes?—My experience is yet too limited to enable me to answer that question; but the deterioration of the carcass is very obvious.

11. If free labour only is to be employed, at the present prices, in the charge of sheep, can sheep-farming be carried on at a profit?—I think sheep-farming on a very large scale may be carried on at a profit, notwithstanding the present high price of free labour; on a small scale I certainly think it cannot, so large is the proportion which the expenses bear to the produce; but I do not think that sheep-farming, even on a large scale, will yield the current rate of colonial interest, namely, 10 per cent. on the capital.

12. Do you consider that you are suffering more at the present time from want of labour, or from want of a market for your surplus stock?—I consider that the want of labour is the primary cause of the present depreciation in the value of stock, because it deters people from making purchases; and unless some measures are promptly taken to relieve the present distress, the depreciation will be still greater; but the flock-master is not only suffering from the impossibility of disposing of his surplus breeding stock, but, owing to the scarcity of labour, wethers are, generally speaking, in poor condition, and the price which the butcher can afford to give cannot remunerate the breeder.

13. From what class of people do you find shepherds most readily obtained?—From the emancipist class; I have not a single free shepherd on my establishment; the few free men I employ having all refused to take charge of sheep at any wages.

14. To what cause do you attribute the general dislike to the life of a shepherd, and the continual disposition to change?—The dislike which Englishmen so generally evince to the life of a shepherd, is attributable chiefly to their being accustomed at home to live in villages and to be employed at hard bodily labour, which has given them a distate for the sedentary employments and monotonous life of a shepherd. The common answer of an active able-bodied man, when asked to hire as a shepherd, is, that he will not "crawl" after sheep.

15. What kind of accommodation is provided for shepherds and their families at the establishments and stations?—They have all good slab huts, 20 feet by 12 feet; I have not a bark hut on my establishment; but if I had, I should consider it as comfortable as the residence of any man of that class in England.

16. How many men are generally placed at each station?—Three; two shepherds, and a hut-keeper, who acts also as watchman.

17. How far are the stations generally from each other?—The distance varies from two to eight miles; there is no intercourse allowed between the stations, but I have no doubt it takes place after dark, when the flocks are in the pens; the shepherds are in the habit of meeting on the runs, contrary to express orders, and thereby incurring the risk of mixing the flocks; this habit is one of the greatest evils a flock-master has to contend with, but it is so natural, that I am not surprised at the difficulty of preventing it.

18. From your observations upon the probable extent of European emigration, are you of opinion that a sufficient number of shepherds can be obtained from that source?—Certainly not;

NEW SOUTH WALES.

E. Hamilton, Esq.

5 July 1841.

not; the number of European immigrants who arrive in this colony each year, depe nds entirely on the amount of the land fund; and I see every prospect at present of a diminution rather than an increase of this fund, so that a greater scarcity of labour than what we are now suffering from is much to be apprehended. The principal contributors to the land fund are the flock-masters, and of course they will not purchase without some fair prospect of remuneration. To maintain the land fund at its present amount, something must be done to provide a more adequate supply of shepherds, and I cannot anticipate such a supply from European emigration. I do not think that a twentieth part of the able-bodied men who arrive by any emigrant ship, hire as shepherds; the advantage which the flock-masters derive from European immigrants is therefore small, and always uncertain; and this, as I have before said, is attributable to the general antipathy which British immigrants have to a shepherd's life. Indeed, unless some means are devised of procuring an ample supply of shepherds, independently of those afforded by European emigration, it seems to me that the flock-masters will be ruined, from the combined effects of a still greater depreciation in the value of their flocks, and the increased insubordination of the persons who have charge of them; such a state of things would undoubtedly lead to the abandonment of sheep-farming by every prudent man.

19. What would be the effect upon the colony of the abandonment of sheep-farming, or its general reduction?—A very great diminution of its prosperity, if not utter ruin.

20. Can you suggest no other field of industry in which it would be possible to employ capital at a profit in the colony, so as to produce articles of exchangeable value for imports of external growth or manufacture, and to provide a sufficient substitute for the present export of wool?—None worth mentioning; but if there be, I conceive that it can only be successfully worked in co-operation with sheep-farming; I mean that sheep-farming is the essential condition, if not the only means, of the prosperity of this colony.

21. Does the vital prosperity of the colony then, in your opinion, depend upon its obtaining an adequate supply of sheep-labour at a moderate rate?—It does; in my answer to a previous question I have stated that, in my opinion, every effort of industry must be paralysed if the sheep-farmer be compelled to give up his flocks.

22. Is there any other source than that of European emigration from which you think the extent of labour which is required could be obtained?—I have heard that it is possible to obtain very excellent labourers from India, who would be more likely to make good shepherds than any we can get from the United Kingdom; Coolies have been tried in this colony, and with great success, as I have heard. One great advantage of Coolie labour is, the cheap description of food to which the Coolies are accustomed; they live chiefly on rice; and flour is the most expensive article in the ration furnished to the European.

23. Do you offer that opinion after having considered the moral and political consequences of such a measure, as well as its immediate effect upon pecuniary interests?—I do not think that the moral and political effects of the introduction of Coolie labourers can be otherwise than beneficial to the colony; they are a very orderly well-behaved class of people, and their example might possibly produce some beneficial effect upon the aboriginal natives. I wish to observe that this opinion is given not abstractedly, but with reference to the peculiar circumstances of this colony. If an ample supply of labour could be obtained from European sources, I should certainly deprecate the introduction of Indians; but this is out of the question, and consequently I advocate the importation of Coolies, under the firm conviction that the moral condition of the European labourer will be elevated rather than degraded by it. It is impossible to over-rate the evil influence of a general scarcity of labour; the insolence and insubordination of the lower orders in this colony arise entirely from it; a good character is here of no consequence, as the master is compelled to employ the first comer, without reference to conduct or character; the lower orders are fully aware of this necessity, and avail themselves of it in every way; an utter disregard of the outward decencies of life, as exemplified in habitual drunkenness and the use of brutal language, is one of the many evils which exist to a fearful extent in this colony, and which I attribute to the demand for labour being so much beyond the supply of it. Self-interest is in my opinion the chief motive of good conduct, and under existing circumstances we cannot expect the benefit of its influence. Some persons are averse to the introduction of Coolies, from a fear that the European would feel himself degraded by earning his livelihood in the same field as the Indian; but I think this apprehension quite groundless, and that it arises principally from a disposition to look upon the Indian as a slave; but unless a man's condition depends on his colour, I can see no affinity between the African negro and the Coolie; the latter is industrious at easy labour; he is a trustworthy domestic servant, and excels in various trades, such as tailoring and shoemaking. It should also be borne in mind by those who object to the importation of Coolies, that it must be limited in extent and duration; we require it at the present moment to relieve us from our difficulties, and to enable us to keep up that fund whereby alone we can increase, or rather maintain, the supply of European labour; it will, I presume, be carried on entirely through private resources, which will cease to be applied in that way when the importation is no longer profitable.

24. Do you think that the habits, morals, and condition of the Coolies would be improved by their employment in this colony?—I do not think that the contact of the Coolies with a people who at least profess christianity, can do otherwise than improve their moral condition.

25. What do you consider would be the effect on British emigration of introducing a sufficient supply of labour from any foreign country, to carry on sheep-farming to the extent which the wild pastures of this country, so far as it is yet known, would admit?—I consider that that the demand for European labour would not be diminished by the introduction of Coolies; the quantity of productive land in this colony, which is now out of cultivation owing to the want of labour, must be enormous, and we should always find plenty of farm employment for the able-bodied emigrants from the United Kingdom, whilst the Coolies would be almost exclusively occupied in the charge of sheep.

Tuesday, 6 July 1841.

Stewart Ryrie, Esq. called in; and Examined.

1. HAVE you been long and extensively engaged in sheep-farming?—For the last 14 years, to a considerable extent.

2. In what manner have you, up to this time, provided for the superintendence of your flocks?—Up to the last year, chiefly by assigned convicts.

3. Is their number in your employ now much diminished?—Very much diminished; probably four-fifths reduced; but I cannot state the exact number without reference.

4. Do you suppose that to be the usual case with other persons similarly engaged as flock-masters?—I believe it is; so far as I know, it certainly is.

5. Has the reduction in the number of convicts caused you to experience difficulty in obtaining shepherds?—A good deal, and when obtained it has been at a ruinous expense.

6. What do you estimate the yearly expense of a free immigrant shepherd to be?—Excepting one man and his wife, I have not hitherto employed immigrants; I have been served by ticket-of-leave men, or convicts who have obtained their freedom; I think these latter ask rather lower wages, and are more useful, as they have generally acquired a knowledge of the duties of a shepherd while they have been in servitude; as to the immigrants, independently of the exorbitant wages they expect, they are quite unacquainted with the matter, and for the first few months at least are not of much service.

7. What do you consider the annual average cost of maintaining a man of the class you speak of, wages and rations both included?—I cannot get a man under 25 l. per annum wages, on the average; besides giving him a pair or two of boots, and a ration of meat, flour, tea, sugar, tobacco, salt, and soap, which costs 10 s. a week, without allowing for the expense of carting from Sydney.

8. In what direction and at what distance are your sheep stations?—Chiefly at Maneroo Plains to the southward, about 270 miles from Sydney, and 100 miles and upwards from my own residence at Arnprior.

9. Are the whole of your flocks beyond the boundaries?—Just now I have from 10,000 to 11,000 sheep beyond the boundaries.

10. Have you increased the number of sheep in each flock beyond what you would wish, in consequence of the scarcity of shepherds?—Generally I have not; sometimes, in cases of emergency, I am obliged to have very large flocks, even as many as two thousand together; but the country where I am is rather favourable to this, as it is open, and therefore a large flock is not so subject to the depredations of the native dog as they would be in a close forest.

11. Is not the keeping of so many sheep together very detrimental to them?—It is very much so; for example, after lambing, if there be two ewe flocks of 600 each, with lambs by their sides, in case one shepherd deserts his flock, the two must be united, making 2,400 sheep in charge of one man; and so they must remain, because afterwards it would be hardly possible to separate them, and to put the proper ewes with the proper lambs; and they suffer greatly from going in such numerous flocks.

12. Do you mean that the fleece suffers as well as the sheep?—The sheep suffer in health, and therefore their fleece also suffers, both in quality and in quantity; as, from being in such crowds, the lambs tear off the wool by treading upon the ewes.

13. In your opinion, at the present cost of shepherding, can sheep-farming be carried on with profit?—Scarcely; all expenses are too high; the price of wool is so low that it cannot yield a profit.

14. If there were a good sale for the surplus stock, would there be a profit?—Certainly there might be, as the wool, at the present rates, might pay the expenses perhaps; but hardly that, where all supplies are to be purchased, and carried by land to a considerable distance,

15. Do you think that a fall in the rate of shepherds' wages, would create a better sale for your surplus stock?—It certainly would.

16. Will you explain how you conceive that would happen?—At present, owing to the high price of labour absorbing all the profits; as I have said, persons will not purchase stock, but put their money out at interest upon some other security; if we had labour more reasonable, I think we should find purchasers; indeed there is not a doubt of it.

17. Do you find ticket-of-leave and freed men more willing to become shepherds than the immigrants who are generally brought out?—I employ in preference those who have been shepherds while in assignment; the immigrants generally have no turn for that employment.

18. How many men are generally employed at each station?—Frequently five; never less than three.

19. Have you considered what probability there is, that a sufficient number of emigrants

NEW SOUTH WALES.

S. Ryrie, Esq.

6 July 1841.

will arrive from Europe to furnish as many shepherds as the colony will require?—I have not formed any opinion on the subject; much will depend upon the produce of the land fund.

20. Without an adequate supply of labour at a moderate rate, is there a probability of any extensive purchases of Crown lands being made?—Far from it; I think purchases will be much fewer than heretofore, because, without an adequate supply of labour, there will be no inducement to buy land, which, in that case, it would be impossible to use profitably.

21. Then cheap labour, purchases of Crown land, and immigration, according to your view, can only go hand in hand?—Quite so; I think they are altogether dependent one on the other.

22. Have you turned your thoughts to any expedient for procuring from any other quarter such a supply of labour as is wanted, beyond what the emigration from the United Kingdom can supply?—I must say I have not; but I do not think that sufficiently energetic measures have yet been taken to bring from the United Kingdom that description of labour which we principally require.

23. What measures would you suggest?—That agents should be sent on behalf of Government, or of the colony, to the great manufacturing towns and districts in England and Scotland, where, I am confident, vast numbers might be engaged to come to the colony, and of the very description we require; spinners and weavers make good shepherds; they do not like harder labour; but I have had some, as convicts, who applied themselves to shepherding and did it very well; after a man has been some time at shepherding he grows fond of it.

24. Has there been a great fall in the price of sheep during the last two years?—Between the last two and three years there has been a fall, as I know from experience, of two-thirds in the price of sheep, or above 60 per cent.

25. Is it likely that this will have the effect of inducing flock-masters to desist from increasing their flocks?—It certainly must; this year I myself ordered my overseer not to breed from 2,000 of my ewes, because I did not know how to have the lambs taken care of; he did not attend to my order, and now I am very much at a loss as to how I shall arrange to provide for their care during lambing time; in future years I am determined to diminish my increase, unless circumstances change altogether.

26. Is it, do you think, the high price of labour, or the want of a command of labour even at that price, that has the greatest influence in keeping down the price of sheep?—The want of labour, decidedly; if we could get a sufficient number of shepherds, even at the present high wages, the sheep might find purchasers; but under existing circumstances no man will buy sheep, because he could not know what to do with them after he had bought them.

Tuesday, 6 July 1841.

William Lawson,* sen. Esq. J. P. of Prospect, called in; and Examined.

W. Lawson, sen. Esq.

6 July 1841.

1. AS you have been long and extensively engaged in sheep-farming, the Committee would be glad to learn what description of labour you have hitherto principally employed in charge of your flocks?—At former periods, and until within the last two years, I principally employed convicts; but in consequence of many of them having obtained their freedom since that time, and of not having had an equal number assigned to me to supply their places, I have of course experienced a great diminution in the number of my shepherds.

2. What means have you had recourse to for supplying that deficiency?—Hiring free immigrants; I have also employed men who had obtained tickets-of-leave, or their freedom, while in my service.

3. Do you find the immigrants efficient as shepherds?—At first they know very little, but they learn by degrees; they are not however generally willing to remain, and those who do remain exact a very great advance of wages; to men whom I hired at 22 l. per annum, I have ultimately been compelled to give 30 l. to induce them to remain; and in shearing time I have been obliged to give even 20 s. per week wages; this is exclusive of rations, the cost of which cannot be reckoned at less than from 22 l. to 25 l. per annum, allowing for the expense of carriage; making the entire cost of an ordinary shepherd, from 50 l. to 60 l. per annum.

4. Do you get men enough at those wages?—No, I do not; I have experienced so much difficulty in managing my sheep, that last year I had 10,000 ewes from which I did not breed, nor shall I while things continue as they are; many of my lambs I have not been able to wean; in fact, last year I was a loser of 2,000 l., and I am sure I shall lose as much in this; it is impossible to find buyers for the surplus stock.

5. Are other sheep-farmers labouring under the same difficulties?—As the same causes exist everywhere throughout the colony, I presume other people must be suffering quite as much as myself; in fact, I know they are.

6. Do you mean that you actually were a loser of 2,000 l. last year by your sheep concerns?—I mean to say that; in order to meet the expenses of the management of my flocks, I was compelled, when I balanced my accounts, to apply 2,000 l. in money taken from other sources, to meet the deficiency; it is true I had the increase of a portion of my ewes that year as a set-off against this, but it was, and is, quite unsaleable.

7. To

NEW SOUTH WALES.

W. Lawson, sen. Esq.

6 July 1841.

7. To what cause do you attribute the want of a market for sheep?—Partly to the low price of wool, but principally to the want of sufficient and cheap labour; if shepherds could be hired at 18 l. or 20 l. per annum, besides their rations, more persons would be found to engage in sheep-farming, and there would then be a sale for as many surplus sheep as we had to spare.

8. Do you think wages of 18 l. or 20 l. a year would support a man?—No doubt they would; he has food, lodging, and firing for nothing, and, in fact, nothing to buy for himself except clothing.

9. You speak of the importance of cheap labour; do you not think it of equal importance to have a continual supply of labour such as you may constantly depend upon, and that you should be able to secure the certain services of a man for a period of some duration?—I think it most important to be able always to find men willing to engage when I require them, and for such a period as makes it to my advantage to employ them; a year is not sufficient; it is impossible to estimate the loss and inconvenience occasioned by having men always changing; they stay for the year; after that they will engage perhaps only for a month certain; sometimes for no more than a week; I have latterly engaged men from several parts of England, under indenture to continue in my service for three years.

10. Have you bound them to act as shepherds?—They are engaged to serve as agricultural labourers and shepherds; but I find generally they do not like to be occupied as shepherds.

11. Have you introduced any professed shepherds?—I have not; I have engaged a few who came out as emigrants under the Government bounty, some of whom are now in my service, and they are very useful men, quite competent to take care of sheep.

12. Do you recollect whether, among the convicts, those who had been inhabitants of large towns, such as London, Manchester, and Birmingham, did not make good shepherds?—Very good indeed; but then it must be considered that they could not leave the service unless they absconded, and, therefore, they had time to become familiar with the business; some of those formerly assigned to me, who have since obtained tickets-of-leave or their freedom, had never been brought up to any industrious habits whatever, yet they made the best of shepherds, and some such remain in my service in that capacity even now.

13. Has it ever come under your observation that, owing to the different course of management at home and here, the professed shepherds from England and Scotland object to the occupation here?—Some instances of it have come within my knowledge; in England and Scotland the sheep are inclosed in fields or in a narrower space than here, and therefore do not require so much following and attendance.

14. Has your shearing ever been deferred from the want of labour?—Frequently; indeed we have always suffered more or less from the want of labour; last year there were no men at all to be obtained in the district of Wellington, and my shearing was consequently delayed so long that the grass and other seed began to fall, and there is nothing that injures the worth of wool in the English market more than seeds being in it; good wool, well got up, sold for 1 s. 6 d. to 1 s. 8 d. per lb., while wool of the same quality, but with seeds in it, sold for no more than 1 s. per lb.

15. Have you turned your attention to any means of obtaining a sufficient supply of labour for the charge of sheep?—Within the last year I wrote to my agent in England to obtain 50 men, because I found that without them I could not carry on my concerns; 40 have been sent out, but, owing to a mistake in their agreements, I have not obtained their services; I have only two of them now.

16. Are you disposed to continue the same proceeding?—I must have them or give up my concerns, and therefore I have sent home for a further supply.

17. Does it answer your purpose to bring them out at your own cost?—It does; because they are engaged to me for three years at low wages, so that at the termination of that period, the saving in that respect makes up the cost which I have been at for their passage out.

18. Are your sheep running in larger flocks than is desirable, in consequence of the want of shepherds?—Very much so; I am running them in flocks of 1,500, which is very injurious to them; much smaller flocks are better in all respects, both as regards the condition of the sheep, and the return they make to the owner; I think the staple of my wool has deteriorated of late years, from the over-crowded state of my flocks.

19. Have your agents had much difficulty in engaging men for you in England?—I have not heard that they have; but I was compelled to advance the money for the expenses on the passage out of the men they engaged for me, which amounted on an average to 12 l. 5 s. per man; if I had not been in a situation to pay that advance, the men would not have been sent.

20. Have you thought of any other source for supplying labour?—Labour is so much wanted, that I would engage men of any sort or colour, if they were useful, and could be obtained at moderate wages; I have entered into an engagement to employ 26 who are to be brought over from Chili, I paying 10 l. for the passage of each, and 20 l. wages per annum, with a ration of meat and flour only. I should prefer Englishmen to any others if they could be had, but many of the emigrants from home, instead of working for us, become employers themselves; many who come out in the Government or bounty ships have money; one man I knew who had 500 l. of his own, and who, when he left my service, managed to take away two or three of my servants to work for him.

21. Have you thought of the Hill Coolies?—Yes; I once made a deposit for the purpose of bringing down 60 Coolies, but the agent who went to India for them, could not obtain them, owing to a prohibition of the Government; they would make very good shepherds.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

W. Lawson, sen. Esq.

6 July 1841.

22. Have you considered what would be the effect of Coolie labour upon European emigration; would it affect any other class than shepherds?—I think the probability is that it would; the Coolies cannot do so much hard work as Europeans, but they would be found useful in many ways, as for instance, in dressing vines, planting and curing tobacco, and as house servants; they would also be useful in the maize fields, and in the use of the hoe, which people from England do not like; they are a more docile people than Europeans, and their wages are very low in comparison.

23. Do you think European emigration can continue, unless the sheep-farmers are supported by the introduction of some more available labour?—I do not think it can; at the present high price of wages, land cannot be worth purchasing, for sheep-walks, at 12*s.* an acre.

24. Suppose the sheep were not kept upon purchased lands, but upon land beyond the boundaries, under a squatting license, as it is called, would it answer?—I think not, at the present rate of wages and price of produce.

25. Can you point out any other method of employing capital or labour in this colony, if sheep-farming should fail?—No, I cannot. Wool, I think, is the only article we can export to England in payment for what we import from thence; suspend the export of wool for one year, and it would, in my opinion, ruin the colony altogether.

Wednesday, 7 July 1841.

Terence Aubrey Murray, Esq. called in; and Examined.

T. A. Murray, Esq.

7 July 1841.

1. THE Committee understand that you are engaged in sheep-farming to a considerable extent?—I have been so engaged for the last 12 years, and have numerous flocks in the counties of Argyle and Murray, as well as in the Murrumbidgee and Maneroo districts, beyond the limits of location.

2. What description of labour have you been accustomed to employ in charge of sheep?—Prisoners, or free people, as I could procure them.

3. Have you had any difficulty of late in obtaining a sufficient supply of labour for that purpose?—Yes, considerable difficulty.

4. Have wages, and the cost of other allowances, much increased in consequence?—Yes; the wages of free people are now double what they were when I first settled; at that time, men readily hired for 15*l.* a year, but now it is difficult to engage them by the year on any terms; the wages of those who do hire for that period vary from 25*l.* to 30*l.*, others are generally paid by the week: the allowances of tea, sugar, and tobacco are also double what they originally were.

5. What is your calculation of the cost of maintaining a free shepherd at this time?—I consider that every free shepherd within the limits of location costs his employer about 45*l.* per annum; the average rate of wages may be estimated at 28*l.*, and the rations must be considered worth 17*l.* at least. Beyond the boundaries the expense is much greater: on the banks of the Murray, shepherds cannot be hired at lower rates than 35*l.* or 40*l.* per annum, and even on these wages they will only engage by the week, month or quarter; consequently their employers have no certainty of being enabled to retain their services. The cost of rations and allowances is also much greater beyond than within the limits of location.

6. What proportion of your flocks is generally within the boundaries?—I think, in general, that about two-thirds of my flocks are without the boundaries; and this proportion, I imagine, applies to the colony at large.

7. Have you sustained many losses in your flocks, from shepherds leaving you without due notice, and your being in consequence not prepared to replace them by others?—I cannot say that I have sustained many losses thereby, but I have often been put to considerable inconvenience, and have avoided losses only by going to great expense and trouble in employing an extra number of men.

8. Do you keep your flocks in larger numbers than you would wish to do, or would do if shepherds were more easily obtainable?—Yes; my breeding flocks consist of from 800 to 900, and all the others of at least 1,000 each.

9. Are the sheep generally suffering from the over-crowded state of the flocks?—Yes; I am confident that catarrh, and other diseases which prevail among sheep, have arisen from that cause; the increase of my own flocks falls far short of what it ought to be, through want of persons to attend properly to the lambs at the weaning time.

10. Do you consider the fleece has deteriorated in quality and quantity from these causes?—I cannot say that it has deteriorated in quality, but in quantity it certainly has. In former days, I had in my own flocks about 2¾ lbs. of wool from each sheep; now I scarcely have 2¼ lbs.

11. If free labour only is to be employed at the present prices in the charge of sheep, can sheep-farming be carried on at a profit?—To answer this question would require a nicety of calculation with which I am not at present prepared, and if the interest on capital be taken into consideration, the calculation would be still more difficult; but it seems to me that it would depend altogether on the value of wool in the British market. Under present circumstances, stances, however, it can scarcely be carried on at a profit; a comparative estimate of the value of the wool exported, and of the expense incurred in raising it, will show this: in 1840, the colony produced 7,668,960 lbs. of wool, which, at 1 s. 4 d. per pound, was worth 511,264 l.; for that quantity, 3,408,426 sheep must have been shorn, estimating the average weight of each fleece at 2¼ lbs.; that number, at the rate of 750 in a flock, required 4,544 shepherds, and 2,272 watchmen; of these, two-thirds may be estimated as having been beyond the boundaries, where the rates of wages are higher than within them. The expenses therefore would stand thus:—

4,544 Shepherds, at 50 l. each	227,200	–	–
2,272 Watchmen, at 45 l. each	102,240	–	–
757 Overseers, at 60 l. each	45,420	–	–
Shearing, at 4 s. per score	34,084	–	–
Washing ditto	11,502	–	–
31,954 Bales, at 10 s.	15,977	–	–
Carriage, at 15 s. per bale	23,965	–	–
Depasturing fees, for two-thirds	4,733	–	–
In all £.	465,121	–	–

Besides which, there are several expenses which cannot be calculated, such as building huts, making hurdles, providing farming implements, &c., as well as the interest on the capital sunk.

12. Do you consider that you are suffering at present more from a want of labour than from want of a market for your surplus stock?—A want of labour certainly is the primary cause.

13. Is it your opinion that the want of a market may be traced to the want of labour?—Certainly; it is the want of labour, and not any doubt of the ultimate profit of sheep-farming, that deters persons from investing their capital in that way; the difficulty of procuring labour for this purpose is so great, that those who do buy, try to get men transferred to them with the flocks they purchase; otherwise they can scarcely procure them. I know an instance, in which gentlemen who bought sheep from myself could not, even after the lapse of months, procure men to remove them, and I was ultimately obliged to lend them people for that purpose.

14. From what class of people do you find shepherds most readily obtained?—There is a great disinclination on the part of all classes to engage as shepherds, but I find newly arrived immigrants more disposed to do so than any others.

15. Do the immigrants continue in your service, or are they frequently changing?—I do not find that they are fond of changing their places; but after the expiration of their first engagements, they can only be induced to act again as shepherds by an increase of wages.

16. To what cause do you attribute the general dislike to the life of a shepherd?—I ascribe it to the natural character of the British people, to their fondness for active and energetic life, and by no means to local causes.

17. What kind of accommodation is provided for shepherds and their families at establishments and stations?—I have no married men employed as shepherds, but I think the accommodation provided for those I have seen at other establishments is sufficiently good for people in their station in life; generally speaking, they live as comfortably as any people of their class in any part of the world; indeed I should imagine more so.

18. How many men are generally placed at each station?—Generally three, two shepherds and a watchman, to attend about 1,500 or 2,000 sheep.

19. How far are the stations generally from each other?—They are generally two or three miles apart.

20. From your observations upon the probable extent of European emigration, are you of opinion that a sufficient number of shepherds can be obtained from that source?—From the extent to which European emigration has been carried during the last few years, I think it highly improbable that a sufficient number of shepherds can be supplied thereby; the demand for labour multiplies so rapidly in the colony, that it is difficult to form any calculation of its progressive increase; towns, villages, and buildings are rising everywhere over the face of the country, and the common labour which even they require is more than immigration, at its present rate, can supply; and if it is not carried on to a much greater extent, I am of opinion that sheep-farming must entirely cease.

21. What would be the effect upon the colony of the abandonment of sheep-farming?—The probable, if not certain result would be, the ruin of colonists and colony together; a great number would be obliged to emigrate, and try their fortunes in some other land.

22. Can you suggest no other field of industry in which it would be possible to employ capital at a profit in the colony, so as to produce articles of an exchangeable value for imports of external growth or manufacture, and to provide a sufficient substitute for the present export of wool?—I cannot. I believe the natural capabilities of the colony to be very great, but I cannot imagine that it will or can, for a century yet to come, produce any article which would be likely to conduce so much to the internal wealth of the colony as wool does now; if it ceases to be a wool-growing country, it ceases to be a place of commerce; if it continue a wool-growing country, its prosperity and its commerce will increase, and the

NEW SOUTH WALES.

T. A. Murray, Esq.

7 July 1841.

colonists will have the means of cultivating other articles of export, which will rise into importance in time, and may prove a substitute for wool in ages yet to come, when sheep-farming may necessarily cease.

23. Does the vital prosperity of the colony then, in your opinion, depend on its obtaining an adequate supply of sheep labour, at a moderate rate?—Most certainly.

24. Is there any other source than that of European emigration, from which you think the extent of labour which is required could be obtained?—Yes; from all I can learn it seems that labour of a description very well suited to our wants can be had cheaply and abundantly from India; but, if it were possible, it would be far more desirable to obtain it from the United Kingdom; in the present circumstances of the colony we ought to procure labour from every quarter that would readily afford it; men must attend to their immediate wants in preference to those which are remote; and our present necessities are so urgent, that 20,000 men, if landed within the next three months, would all obtain employment.

25. Do you offer that opinion after having considered the moral and political consequences of such a measure, as well as its immediate effect upon pecuniary interests?—The opinion which I have expressed, respecting the introduction of Coolies, has reference solely to our immediately pressing wants; I would be sorry to see them permanently established among us, as a mixed race would thereby be formed, which might materially affect the future condition of this country; this is the most purely British colony that has ever existed, and I should like it to continue so; but as I see no prospect of having our wants supplied by emigration from the United Kingdom, I imagine that the ruin of the present colonists must be the result, unless we procure labourers from India; the total number of immigrants introduced last year, was about 8,500, of these about 3,600 were labouring men; the remainder were women and children; the increase of sheep in the colony during that year must have been about 639,000; that number required the services of 852 shepherds, 426 watchmen, 160 overseers, 320 draymen, 100 shearers and washers, besides hut-keepers at head stations, hurdle-makers, and hut-builders, &c., in all about 2,000 men, without taking into consideration the numbers required to supply the places of those shepherds, who, during the year, adopted other modes of life; if the number thus estimated be deducted from that of the effective labourers who came that year, few, I apprehend, will be found to have been available for other purposes; the wants of the colonists for those other purposes are well known, and I am confident that 50,000 persons of all descriptions would have been no more than sufficient to supply them; that number would have afforded about 20,000 labourers, who might readily have obtained employment at remunerating rates.

26. Is the present necessity for labour then so great, as to overcome the repugnance you would otherwise feel towards the introduction of labourers of a different race?—The colony at present suffers from a want of labour, which has been accumulating for years, and now presses on it so heavily, that I think no man interested in its immediate or future welfare should for a moment hesitate in using his best endeavours to obtain Coolies, as the supply of labourers from the United Kingdom is wholly inadequate; nor do I suppose that this would at all diminish the amount of emigration from Great Britain and Ireland, but rather serve to increase it; and to increase it, should be an object of paramount consideration with every colonist; the Coolies, I imagine, would be employed merely in pastoral occupations, whilst European immigrants would be required for agricultural purposes, and as mechanics; this division of labour between the two races would be rather in favour of the condition of the Coolies, as they would be kept altogether apart from European labourers; they would thus have their own society, and still persevere in the observance of their own customs.

27. Do you think that the habits, morals, and condition of the Coolies would be improved by their employment in this colony?—Certainly; but I speak in ignorance of their habits, and moral character; I suppose them, however, to be a semi-barbarous race, and I cannot but suppose that they would be in some degree improved by intercourse with a civilised and christian people.

28. Is that supposition consistent with the expectation you have expressed, that they would remain altogether apart from European labourers?—Certainly; for they would still have full opportunity for observing the superior habits of civilised life, and though kept apart from the European labourers, they would be in constant communication with their employers, and it is rather from them that improvement in knowledge, habit, or conduct would be derived, than from the working classes; and besides, they would still be subject to all the milder influences which it might be advisable to exercise in the amelioration of their moral or religious state.

29. What do you consider would be the effect, on British emigration, of introducing a sufficient supply of labourers from any foreign country to carry on sheep-farming to the extent which the wild pastures of this country, so far as it is yet known, would admit?—I think that an influx of capitalists and labourers from the United Kingdom would be the result of such an accession of labour; the advantage of cheap labour for the purposes of sheep-farming ought, it seems to me, to be obvious to every one; it would redeem the colony from the ruin on which it is verging, and place it in a state of the greatest prosperity.

30. Is not the present high rate of wages one great cause of the prevailing unwillingness to invest capital in sheep-farming?—Yes, certainly.

31. Have you formed any estimate of the number of shepherds and watchmen required to attend duly to the sheep now in the colony?—From a calculation which I have made it seems

NEW SOUTH WALES.

T. A. Murray, Esq.

7 July 1841.

seems that there are about 4,639,247 sheep now in the colony; and, at the rate of 750 in each flock, they would require:—

6,185 Shepherds.
3,092 Watchmen.
1,030 Overseers (one to every six flocks).
2,060 Draymen (two to every six flocks).
500 Shearers, &c.
500 Hut and hurdle makers, &c.

13,367

This calculation is based upon the official returns of the wool exported during a certain number of years; by these it appears that the quantity in 1836 was - - - - -	3,611,118	lbs.

1837 - - - - - -	4,273,715	„
1838 - - - - - -	5,428,993	„
1839 - - - - - -	6,597,981	„
1840 - - - - - -	7,668,960	„

From this statement it appears that the progressive increase of every successive year may moderately be estimated at a sixth; therefore, if the quantity exported in 1840 was - - - - -	7,668,960	lbs.

in 1841 it must have been - -	8,947,120	„
and in 1842 it will be - - - -	10,438,306	„

The sheep to produce that are in existence at present, and if we estimate the fleece of each at the average weight of 2¼ lbs., the number I have stated must now be in the colony; the sheep must increase in the same ratio as the wool, and, if one-sixth be added as the increase for 1842, we shall then have 5,412,454, and in like manner 6,314,529 in 1843; by this, if the calculation is extended, it will appear that we shall require 5,000 persons to attend to the increase of sheep alone in those two years; the number of persons required to take charge of the increase of 1839 and 1840 was by no means so great, yet we suffer much from want of labour now, although 1,417 prisoners were assigned, and 4,446 male immigrants arrived in 1839; and 1,556 prisoners were assigned, and 3,637 adult male immigrants arrived in 1840; being a total for those years of 11,056; the colony would of course require a much greater number for the next two years.

32. What proportion does the increase on your own establishment bear to the entire number of your flocks?—I think one-third of the total number may be added on that account.

33. What is the average price of sheep at this time?—I think the average price at present may be considered to be about 10 s., but it is very difficult, almost impossible, to effect sales.

34. What was the average four years ago?—About 25 s., and sales were readily effected.

35. Four years ago, when those high prices prevailed, was it customary to receive immediate payment?—Immediate payment was easily obtained, but now, sheep cannot be sold even on credit.

Thursday, 8 July 1841.

Captain Philip Parker King, R. N. called in, and Examined.

Captain P. P. King, R. N.

8 July 1841.

1. As Commissioner of the Australian Agricultural Company, you have, of course, great experience in the practical business of sheep-farming?—I have had the experience of about 10 years; as a private settler, in the first instance, and latterly as Commissioner of the company.

2. How long have you filled that office?—Rather more than two years.

3. Do you find any increasing difficulty in carrying on the management of the company's flocks, and if so, from what cause does it arise?—Yes, very great difficulty, owing to the scarcity of labour; shepherds are so scarce that the flocks which formerly usually contained only 400 sheep, are now averaging about 800; and wherever the character of the country will admit of it, they contain from 1,000 to 1,100 sheep.

4. Have the wages and expenses of shepherds much increased of late, as well as the difficulty of obtaining them?—Within the last two years shepherds' wages have increased one-third, and the difficulty of obtaining them is so great and increasing, that to provide in any manner for the care of the sheep, the company is compelled to give up agriculture, to a great extent; I should explain, however, that the great difficulty is, once to obtain servants, for after they have engaged themselves to the company, they usually remain; from the nature of the company's establishments and stations it has an advantage over private settlers, as it is very much removed from thoroughfares, and separated from other establishments which might hold out inducements to the men to leave its service; in this espect, therefore, the difficulties are rather less than those of the private settler.

5. What is the yearly cost of each shepherd to the company, supposing him to be a free man?—At Port Stephens a free shepherd's wages is 25 l. a year, and the cost of his rations may be estimated at about 20 l., so that his yearly cost to the company may be stated at 45 l.; on the stations in the interior, however, the wages have recently been increased to 30 l. a year; most of our free servants have families, and in this case the wife receives two-thirds, and each child one half a man's ration, which of course considerably increases the expense of such men.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Captain P. P. King, R. N.

8 July 1841.

6. Do you think that the interests of the company are injured by the practice which you have been forced to adopt, of keeping the sheep in such large flocks?—Very much so; from the crowded state in which, from the want of a sufficient number of shepherds, the flocks are necessarily kept, in order to their being within view of the shepherds, our wethers, which used to average 50 pounds each, do not now exceed 40 pounds. This, however, applies only to the sheep kept in the wooded country; in the open country they do not deteriorate, or lose in weight. With regard to the wool, it is difficult to say whether it has deteriorated or not, from the crowded state of the flocks when feeding, for there are many other causes which may operate to improve or deteriorate its quality; there is no doubt, however, that when flocks are so large, they become delicate in constitution, from the limited pastures to which they must, under these circumstances, be necessarily confined; and the strength and elasticity of fibre, for which the wool of this colony has hitherto been so much celebrated, has in this way lately very much deteriorated.

7. Do you think that, under present circumstances, sheep-farming is remunerative?—Under present circumstances, I should say certainly not; and if sheep-farming only be considered, it is certainly not remunerative even to the company, although in the aggregate of its large concern, the profits of one department counterbalance the losses upon another. Speaking as a private sheep-holder, the returns of a sheep establishment do not meet the expenses, and a great sacrifice has to be made yearly to meet them.

8. What is the practice of the company with regard to the disposal of their surplus stock?—By a yearly public sale, when it can be effected; but at the last sale only one-fourth of the usual number was disposed of. The increase of sheep last year was nearly 20,000, half of which would have been sold if purchasers had been present. I attribute the company not having sold the usual number to an expectation on the part of many that the sheep would be sold at whatever price they would fetch, a large number of ewes having been, about the time of the sale, sold by private individuals, pressed by circumstances, for from 5 s. to 7 s. a head. The price at which a few were sold, namely, 15 s., was much greater than their marketable value.

9. Should you suppose that, if shepherds were more easily obtained, there would be a readier sale?—I have no doubt this circumstance operated to prevent the sale being so large as usual, because I believe there are considerable sums of money in the hands of individuals, who would purchase if they could procure shepherds.

10. Have you noticed among emigrants from the United Kingdom an indisposition or dislike to the occupation of a shepherd?—Very great; and, unless indented to serve as shepherds, the immigrants will not do it. The company have lately imported 100 Irish labourers from the neighbourhood of Cork, indented to serve as agricultural labourers, at wages of 15 l. a year, and rations. On their arrival, upon being desired to take charge of sheep, they generally refused; a few were however prevailed upon, and some ordered to do so, but they either lost large numbers or starved their flocks, so that I was under the necessity of removing them; and notwithstanding that 10 l. a year, in addition to the wages they originally agreed for, was promised to them, if they took proper care of the flocks, not one of that importation of labourers is now in charge of sheep.

11. Are you aware whether the same dislike to the care of sheep exists on the part of emigrants arrived in the colony from other parts of Ireland, or from England and Scotland?—I think the dislike to shepherding prevails equally among all classes of European labourers, whether from Ireland, England, or Scotland.

12. Can you account for such a feeling; is it anything in the nature of the employment itself, or peculiar to this country, which occasions it?—It is so different a mode of life from what they have been accustomed to, that they do not like it.

13. Is it reasonable to expect, that out of the whole number of emigrants from Europe during the next year or two, a sufficient supply of shepherds will be furnished to remove or abate the present distress?—Judging from past experience, I do not think there will be a sufficient supply; generally speaking, every person having sheep would, I think, require to double his present establishment, and would do so, if labour could be obtained at a sufficiently cheap rate.

14. Have you ever taken into consideration the possibility of obtaining from any other source a sufficient number of men qualified to act as shepherds?—I have, and have made representations to the directors of the company on the subject. I have looked principally to Chinese, proposing to employing them as shepherds, under their own countrymen as overseers. I have been in correspondence with a gentleman in China on the subject; but the late disturbances there have put an end to my negotiations. With respect to the Hill Coolies, I originally felt an antipathy to the employment of them, but our want of labour is now so great, that the colonists, I believe, would generally be glad to avail themselves of their services.

15. As you have served on the coasts of South America, you may have been able to form an opinion as to the advantage of engaging any of the inhabitants of Chili?—I do not think it would answer for general service; I have six in my employment now as horse-breakers and muleteers; but I think they would be useless for any other service, unless perhaps stock-keeping. They would also be very expensive, as we should have to incur the expense not only of their introduction, but also of their return at the expiration of three years, which could not amount to less than 50*l.* for each man, besides wages of 25*l.* a year and rations. I have not tried them as shepherds, feeling satisfied, from the wandering mode of life in which they have been brought up, that they would not do justice to the flocks; and, from the independence of their character, that they would not be submissive enough to be employed in the dry, unvarying daily routine of a sheep station. In the employments I now have them engaged, I find them very valuable and useful servants. To derive advantage from the services of any foreigner, it would be, I think, in most cases, absolutely necessary to employ them under the superintendence of their own countrymen, or at least of persons speaking their language.

16. You have stated that you were at first opposed to the introduction of Coolies, but that, under present circumstances, you think the colonists would be glad to employ them; is it meant by this that your objections are so much abated, that you think it would be for the advantage of the colonists to have them, and that you yourself would employ them?—Doubtless there are disadvantages which would attend their introduction. I consider the mixture of blood as a great disadvantage, and their religion to be equally objectionable; but, in the present extreme scarcity of labourers, it would be better to have them than none at all, because I think, from the character I have heard of the Hill Coolies, that they would be likely to make good shepherds, if well selected; there would, perhaps, be great difficulty in distinguishing the good from the bad, so as to make a good selection.

17. Should you contemplate their employment in any other capacity than that of shepherds?—I am not aware that they are fitted for any other employment; but I am very ignorant of their habits.

18. If it should prove to be the case that they are capable of performing other kinds of labour, might they not prove competitors with the emigrants from the United Kingdom; and would not the knowledge that such was the state of things here tend to discourage our own countrymen from coming to this colony?—I think it would tend to reduce the price of labour, and might, in that way, discourage the emigration of our own countrymen; but I have never contemplated the employment of Coolies in any other way than as shepherds.

19. Would there not probably be also a disposition, among the labouring class of Europeans, to engage the services of Coolies, instead of themselves continuing to work for hire?—Only as shepherds and domestic servants.

20. Have you not, in consequence of the terms of the company's charter, had a larger proportion of assigned convict servants within the last two years than has fallen to the share of the settlers generally?—No, certainly not. The assignments that have lately taken place to the company have been to the coal works at Newcastle, in which service I am pledged to the government to employ them. To the agricultural establishment at Port Stephens, during the two last years, we may have had about 20 assignments, but have lost by some of them obtaining tickets of leave, and others becoming free, upwards of 150 convicts. In comparison with other large establishments, the Australian Agricultural Company have not had apparently their fair proportion.

21. If from 10,000 to 12,000 working hands were to arrive in the colony during the next 12 months, do you think that number would exceed the wants of the colonists?—I do not think it would.

22. What proportion of that number, do you think, would be required as shepherds?—I think that one-fourth of that number would find ready employment as shepherds.

23. Had a sufficient number of emigrants from the United Kingdom been brought into the colony during the last three years, to keep up something like a fair proportion between the supply of labour and the demand for it, do you think the difficulty to which you have alluded, of inducing those immigrants to become shepherds, would exist in the same degree?—I do not think the difficulty would have been in the least decreased; the objection to that particular employment would still be the same.

24. Do you not think the objection to become shepherds may, in some degree, be attributed to the facility of obtaining highly lucrative employment in towns, and in the more thickly settled districts?—Yes.

25. Have you had any opportunity of observing the effect of the present high rate of wages upon the moral character and general habits of the working classes?—As far as my experience goes, I should say that their habits of industry and subordination have greatly deteriorated, the facility of obtaining a subsistence enabling them to spend half their time in dissipation. I am speaking here of labourers in or near to large towns; but in agricultural establishments, and at sheep stations, the bad effect of such high wages is not so conspicuous.

26. Do you think that the real hardships of a shepherd's life in New South Wales are greater than those in England, or other parts of Europe?—I think the shepherd's life in Australia is perfectly different from what it is in any other part of the world. The antipathy to it, on the part of those who are shepherds, arises chiefly from its monotonous character, and from their being shut out from communion with their fellows. This feeling, however, is gradually diminished by habit; for I believe that convicts, who have been obliged to serve their time as shepherds, in most cases prefer that mode of life, for they generally engage in the same employment upon obtaining their tickets of leave, and make the best shepherds that the colony at present possesses.

27. Should you not think that, by perseverance in attempting to induce Europeans to take up the occupation of a shepherd, and by endeavouring to improve the social comforts of those who do engage in it, so as in some degree to remove the monotony complained of, the present disinclination might gradually be subdued, even among the free population?—Yes, I think it might among the well-disposed; but I look more to the rising generation for the growth of such a feeling; the readiest and surest means to produce such a feeling would be, to give the shepherds some interest in the flocks committed to their charge.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Captain P. P. King, R. N.

8 July 1841.

28. Has your experience led you to think ill or well of the state of society in countries where there exist superior and inferior races, the latter of which is chiefly employed in labour; and is not the effect of this mixture to cause labour to be regarded as somewhat disreputable, and to generate habits of sloth in the superior class?—Considering the question as one of a general character, I do not think I should be induced to anticipate favourably of such a state of society, nor is it unreasonable to fear that the mixture alluded to may have the result supposed by the question.

29. If the sheep in this colony were to be generally put under the charge of Coolies, can you see any probability of Europeans, or their descendants, ever resuming the occupation of shepherds, so as to admit of the service of Coolies being dispensed with after they have once been introduced?—If Coolies answered the purpose of shepherding, I think the occupation would remain in their hands for a considerable time; other laborious occupations, more suited to European immigrants, and for which the Coolie is unfitted, will readily present themselves; how long this state of things would last, must depend upon the number supplied by European emigration; if the number be small and restricted, the necessity for employing the Coolie must for some time be maintained; but as it may be naturally expected that the increase of emigrating families will, in the course of years, be considerable, I think there can be little doubt that the colony will, after a time, be sufficiently supplied with labour to dispense with the further introduction of labourers from India.

30. Taking the evils and disadvantages probably attendant on such a state of things into the account, would you nevertheless recommend the trial to be made of introducing Coolies into this colony?—I have before stated that I am not an advocate for the introduction of Coolie labour, if it could be avoided, but I see no possibility of meeting the difficulties that now present themselves to the exertions of the colonists in maintaining the prosperity of the colony, by the production of its only staple, fine wool, without availing themselves of every description of labour that can be procured; Coolie labour has been already introduced on a small scale, with success, and I therefore do not hesitate to recommend in the strongest way, the fair trial of the experiment.

Thursday, 8 July 1841.

Major Edmund Lockyer, of Ermington, in the County of Cumberland, and of Lockyers-leigh, in the County of Argyle, called in, and Examined.

Major E. Lockyer.

8 July 1841.

1. As a sheep farmer on an extensive scale, have you experienced much difficulty of late in obtaining a sufficient number of shepherds; and if so, will you have the goodness to state to the committee from what causes this has arisen?—I have had great difficulty; but my principal establishment is situated at Lockyers-leigh, in the county of Argyle, a distance of 100 miles from Sydney, and on this account, perhaps, the difficulty I have experienced in obtaining labour has been greater than it would have been had my establishment been nearer to Sydney, the principal labour mart; as it is, however, when shepherds leave my employ, which is frequently the case immediately on the expiration of the term for which they are respectively engaged, unless induced to remain by a great augmentation of wages, it is next to impossible to supply their places; the average wages which I have been usually in the habit of paying to each of such men employed on my establishment at Lockyers-leigh, are 25*l.* per annum, besides rations, the cost of which I estimate to be at least 20*l.*; one great cause of the present scarcity of labour in my neighbourhood is the abolition of assignment, and the absence of all other means of obtaining servants but from immigrant ships, the labourers by which are generally all engaged immediately on their arrival at Sydney, so that only very few reach the interior; under these circumstances our chief dependence is on the labour of ticket-of-leave holders, and persons becoming free by servitude; but their numbers are very inadequate to our wants.

2. Do you think it possible to carry on sheep-farming upon those terms, permanently, with a prospect of profit, either upon purchased land of your own, or upon Government land held under license beyond the boundaries?—Under the present circumstances of the colony, and at the existing high rate of wages, it is quite impossible to carry on sheep-farming profitably even on my own purchased land; and if I were to depasture my flocks on Government land, it must be at the risk of the land being purchased from me by some one else, after I had expended considerable sums in such improvements as are always absolutely necessary on an establishment of any magnitude; the present low prices of wool, too, and the impossibility of effecting sales of stock, combine to shut out the flock-master from any adequate cash return for his outlay of capital in meeting the necessary expenses of his establishment. I myself have stock to sell, and have even had offers to purchase; but I advised the friends who applied to me, not to purchase, because I knew they could make no advantageous use of the stock.

3. Do you think it probable, from the experience you have had, that European emigration will furnish a sufficient number to make labour as plentiful and cheap as is necessary to carry on sheep-farming with profit?—It is my opinion that it will not; I do not think that one-fourth of the immigrants introduced on bounty are employed as farm labourers or shepherds, having reason to believe that many take small farms on clearing leases, whilst others remain about the town, engaged in various mechanical employments; immigrants generally have a great dislike to engage in any employment which would take them into the interior.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Major E. Lockyer.

8 July 1841.

4. Have you formed any judgment as to the number of labourers, shepherds especially, required to remove the present difficulty and expense of engaging them?—I should say that from 10,000 to 12,000 would not be more than sufficient. Many proprietors have ceased to increase their flocks, from the impossibility of obtaining shepherds; and to show how completely the flock-master is at the mercy of those in charge of his sheep, I may mention that 12 of my shepherds left me a few weeks ago, because I would not increase their wages from 25*l.* to 30*l.* per annum, from which circumstance I have of necessity been obliged to increase the number of sheep in each of my flocks. Previously to this I usually had 400 sheep in each flock; but now I have from 600 to 700, which is a number by far too large, and more than any one shepherd can do justice to. I know by experience that sheep kept in larger flocks than from 300 to 400 do not thrive nearly so well as those kept in flocks of about those numbers, nor is their wool by any means so good; and when breeding flocks in particular are kept in larger numbers than from 300 to 400, the loss is very great indeed.

5. Would the introduction of so large a number be likely to reduce the rate of wages so much as no longer to afford a fair and sufficient remuneration to the labourer?—I should think that, in the present scarcity of labour, it would certainly not reduce the average rate of wages below 25*l.* a year.

6. Have you directed your thoughts to any other source from which such a supply of shepherds as the exigency of the colony requires may be obtained?—I have; being unable to sell my sheep here, I sent 1,000 lately to Valparaiso on speculation, and directed that 20 Chilians should be engaged for me. Other persons have also ordered Chilians to be engaged for them, to the extent, as I have heard, of from 300 to 400. The gentleman who is to bring them, and who has lived 12 or 14 years in Chili, says that he can obtain them at about 20*l.* a year wages and their rations, which are not to include tea or sugar. A very useful class of people could also be introduced from India as shepherds and labourers; from the knowledge which I acquired of these people during a military service of 16 years in India, I feel convinced that they can be obtained in great numbers from Poonah, in the Mahratta territory, near Bombay, which is a pastoral country, and at half the rate of wages usually paid to Europeans; I think these people would prove more useful than the Hill Coolies. A class of Mahrattas might be obtained, also, who would make excellent bricklayers, rough carpenters, brickmakers, masons, house-servants, horse-breakers, farriers, &c.; in fact, there are among them numbers who could be advantageously employed in every description of labour.

7. Are there such associations among the Indian tribes as are composed of robbers and murderers by profession?—Yes, there are; among all the various tribes of India there are associations, the members of which are bound together by secret engagements to commit every species of crime, robbery and murder included; but I do not think there is any risk whatever that people of this description would volunteer to emigrate from their country.

8. Do those associations exist principally among the people in the towns or in the country?—They have such associations everywhere throughout India, from the towns on the coast to the far interior; notwithstanding which, it is my opinion that if there were 30,000 Asiatics introduced into this colony, there would not be so much thieving among them as there would be among a third of that number of Europeans.

9. As the associations are secret, the individuals who compose them cannot be generally known to the police?—The individual members of these associations are not generally known to the police; but I have recently heard accounts of some of these people having been detected by the police in acts of outrage, and made to suffer the penalty of their crimes. The members of these associations are often engaged in trade, and it is customary with them whenever by chance they meet a person in the course of their business whom they have ascertained to possess money, to show him every kindness, and to enter into conversation with him calculated to inveigle him into a situation where he would be completely within their power, and then to rob and perhaps murder him.

10. Would your knowledge of the facts you have stated, and of their general character, cause you to hesitate in employing these persons?—So far from it, that if I could get the same number of Indians that I now have of Europeans, I should be very glad to discharge every European, and have none but Indians in my service; my reason for this is, that the Europeans in my service, knowing I cannot replace them at pleasure, set no bounds to their exactions, and are constantly dissatisfied, though they have never been so well off before. We are also put to great expense by the issue of tea and sugar as part of the European ration, the quantities being a quarter of a pound of tea and two pounds of sugar per week to each individual, an exaction which I think the settlers ought to resist, as the men might just as reasonably insist on tobacco being issued to them as part of their ration. The Indian labourers would be much more contented with considerably less wages, and would be more easily managed, and by a due observance of the terms of their respective agreements and kind treatment, they would soon acquire a competent knowledge of our usages in herding sheep. I am of opinion, also, that there would not be the difficulty which many apprehend in respect to their food, as they will eat both flour and meat, but not so much of the latter as Europeans would. Rice, however, is their common food in India, being cheaper than flour; but I always found them prefer flour or bread, when they could obtain it. They would not require tea, but I should recommend their being allowed a pound of sugar each per week, which the settler could well afford to do, as their wages would not be more than from 12*l.* to 15*l.* a year. These are my only reasons for preferring Indians to Europeans; if the latter were to be had on equally reasonable terms, I should not require Indians, I should prefer Europeans.

11. Do you suppose that any of the Hill Coolies are engaged in the associations you have mentioned?—No doubt of it; there are persons of all classes engaged in them.

12. Have you ever made the experiment of employing the aborigines of this country; and if so, to what extent, and with what success?—I have made every endeavour to induce them to undertake some steady occupation, and have employed one as a constable, but I never could induce any of them to remain with me for any length of time.

13. Was that individual in the receipt of regular wages as a constable?—No, he was not; but he was always supplied by me with whatever he wanted. On the occasion of the murder of Mr. Roach, an overseer of the late Mr. Futter, this aboriginal was the means of the murderers being detected; and on another occasion, he and another native captured five armed bushrangers. I used frequently to employ the aborigines in washing sheep, but I was obliged to desist in consequence of the bad treatment they received from my European servants.

14. Did you ever place that one man, or any of them, in this condition: that if they went away when invited by their countrymen, they would lose the wages which they would earn by remaining at work?—Never; they knew, however, that when so employed they might have had wages if they pleased, but they were so much under the influence of their tribe, that none of them dared to accept of them.

Tuesday, 13 July 1841.

George Cox, of Winbourn, Penrith, Esq. called in, and Examined.

George Cox, Esq.

13 July 1841.

1. THE Committee understand you are engaged in sheep-farming to a considerable extent?—I am; having about 7,000 sheep.

2. What description of labour have you been accustomed to employ in charge of sheep?—Formerly I employed prisoners, but since the discontinuance of assignment, I have employed ticket-of-leave men, and freed convicts, with a few immigrants and their wives.

3. Have you had difficulty of late in obtaining a sufficient supply of labour for that purpose?—I have frequently experienced much difficulty in obtaining labour.

4. Have wages, and the cost of other allowances, much increased in consequence?—Fully 100 per cent.

5. What is your calculation of the total cost of maintaining a free immigrant shepherd at this time?—From 45*l.* to 50*l.* per annum, including rations.

6. What proportion of your flocks is generally within the boundaries?—All my flocks, but one, are within the boundaries.

7. Have you sustained many losses in your flocks from shepherds leaving you without due notice, and your being, in consequence, not prepared to replace them by others?—Only by being compelled, on such occasions, to give even a higher rate of wages to others to supply their places than that already stated.

8. Do you keep your flocks in larger numbers than you would wish to do, or would do, if shepherds were more easily obtainable?—I keep them in larger numbers than formerly, but not so large as materially to injure them.

9. Are the sheep generally suffering from the over-crowded state of the flocks?—I believe they are, in many instances.

10. Do you consider the fleece has deteriorated in quality and quantity from these causes?—I should say it has not, judging from the condition of my own wool.

11. If free labour only is to be employed, at the present prices, in the charge of sheep, can sheep-farming be carried on at a profit?—Looking to the prices of sheep and wool at this time, I should say, that at the present rate of wages, sheep-farming does not pay above five per cent. on the capital employed in it.

12. Do you consider that you are suffering more at the present time from want of labour, or from want of a market for your surplus stock?—I am myself suffering at present more from the latter than the former cause.

13. Is it your opinion that the want of a market may be traced to the want of labour?—The high rate of labour causes us to feel most severely the greatly depreciated state of our stock market; no doubt the want of a market for breeding stock, particularly sheep, arises principally from the difficulty of obtaining shepherds; therefore I may say, that the want of labour is in a great measure the cause of the great depreciation in the value of breeding stock; besides, if there were more mouths to eat it, butcher's meat would be higher also.

14. From what class of people do you find shepherds most readily obtained?—From ticket-of-leave men, and freed convicts.

15. Do

15. Do the immigrants continue in your service, or are they frequently changing?—Immigrant labour has been so high, that I have not until lately, and then from compulsion, employed much of it; I cannot therefore speak positively to this question.

16. To what cause do you attribute the general dislike to the life of a shepherd, and the continual disposition to change?—I cannot say that shepherds in my service have been more prone to change than other labourers; most freed prisoners like a change, which is attributable, perhaps, more to the desire to show they now can change, than to any other feeling.

17. What kind of accommodation is provided for shepherds and their families at the establishments and stations?—Those with me have each a slab or bark hut, containing two rooms.

18. How many men are generally placed at each station?—Three; two shepherds and a yard-cleaner; but if one of the shepherds be a married man, his wife performs the latter duty.

19. How far are the stations generally from each other?—From two to ten miles, according to the quality of the pasturage.

20. From your observations upon the probable extent of European emigration, are you of opinion that a sufficient number of shepherds can be obtained from that source?—Most certainly not; as, were it not for the freed prisoners, I should think more than half the sheep in the colony would be without shepherds.

21. What would be the effect upon the colony of the abandonment of sheep-farming, or its general reduction?—This is a question of too much importance for me to venture any positive opinion on; but I certainly think its effect would be most ruinous; and yet a continued want of labour must lead to it sooner or later.

22. Can you suggest no other field of industry in which it would be possible to employ capital at a profit in the colony, so as to produce articles of exchangeable value for imports of external growth or manufacture, and provide a sufficient substitute for the present export of wool?—I do not myself know of any other resource that we have, which would compensate us for the loss of our wool and mutton; but being almost colonial myself, I am not a competent judge of what our climate can produce; that has not yet been tried.

23. Does the vital prosperity of the colony, in your opinion, depend upon its obtaining an adequate supply of sheep labour at a moderate rate?—Much of our prosperity certainly depends upon our procuring a sufficient supply of shepherds; if this could be obtained, it would tend also to reduce the cost of all other descriptions of labour.

24. Is there any other source than that of European emigration from which you think the extent of labour which is required could be obtained?—I can only answer this question by repeating what I have heard others say, who know more of the people of other countries than I do, which is, that Coolie labour would be cheap.

25. Do you offer that opinion after having considered the moral and political consequences of such a measure, as well as its immediate effect upon pecuniary interests?—I should infinitely prefer our own countrymen, in a religious point of view particularly; but, as the old adage says, necessity has no law; and seeing no other means at present of obtaining a sufficient supply of labour than that open to us by the introduction of Coolies, I do recommend its adoption forthwith.

26. Is the present necessity for labour, then, so great as to overcome the repugnance you would otherwise feel to the introduction of labourers of a different race?—I do think it is, and I fear it is likely to become even more so.

27. Do you think that the habits, morals, and condition of the Coolies would be improved by their employment in this colony?—What their habits or morals are I do not know; but I certainly think their condition would be improved by it, as I have always understood they live badly in their own country.

28. What do you consider would be the effect on British emigration of introducing a sufficient supply of labour from any foreign country to carry on sheep-farming to the extent which the wild pastures of this country, so far as it is yet known, would admit?—I should think we could find abundant employment for all the British emigrants that are likely to come to our shores, at remunerating wages, but certainly not at such high rates as the scarcity of labour now enables them easily to obtain.

29. Is not the present high rate of wages one great cause of the prevailing unwillingness to invest capital in sheep farming?—I think it is a principal one.

30. Do you not think that, independently of the high rate of wages, the difficulty of obtaining any shepherds whatever, occasions the great repugnance which now exists to the employment of fresh capital in sheep-farming?—I think there are two causes which occasion it; one is, that many people do certainly find great difficulty in getting shepherds; and the other is, that sheep are now at so low a price, that people are afraid to purchase them, fearing that a continued scarcity of labour will make capital vested in sheep even less lucrative.

31. Do you find that the native youths of British descent frequently become shepherds?—I do not recollect more than one instance of it; the life is too tame—too monotonous for them; they do not like it; they prefer being stock-keepers.

NEW OUTH WALES.

John Mackay, Esq.

14 July 1841.

Wednesday, 14 July 1841.

John Mackay, Esq. late of Bengal, Indigo Planter and Merchant, now of Sydney, re-called, and further Examined.

1. In the event of the present restrictions on the emigration of Indian labourers being removed, and of their being extensively introduced into this colony, are there any precautions you would recommend in selecting them in their own country?—I would strongly urge that the selection of all the emigrants from India should be confided to one agent at each of the presidencies of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, and to no more; and that these agents should, if necessary, be placed in communication with an agent here, appointed under the sanction of this Government; my reasons for this are, first, that I think it the only method of ensuring the best selection of Coolies; secondly, that it will also ensure their being sent to us in the proper season; and thirdly, that it will show the people and government in India that the abuses which did formerly exist in sending Coolies from that country will be avoided so far as respects New South Wales.

2. Can you state what those abuses were, or those chiefly complained of in India and elsewhere?—When the demand for Coolies became general and urgent in the Mauritius some years ago, all parties employed their own agents to select them, in consequence of which, and of the vast numbers daily required, many low unprincipled hirelings, such as crimps, &c. were so employed, who, instead of going into the country, where alone the proper description of people could be obtained, engaged all the idle vagabonds about Calcutta, including thieves and robbers eluding justice; but this was not all; many people of higher caste, and numbers who were not labourers, were seduced in various ways, and packed off on board ship before they knew what they were about, or where they were going; very similar abuses were prevalent in our own country not many years ago, in enlisting men for the army or navy; latterly, however, the Bengal government established very proper regulations for the suppression of these abuses, but it could not prevent from embarking men of bad character, who were desirous of leaving their own country only to elude justice; and in some instances, too, the crimps I have spoken of got hold of young men of good connexions, and others, and seduced them into drunkenness and the perpetration of various outrages, in order to induce them to quit the country.

3. How do you think the appointment of only one agent at each presidency would guard against those abuses?—The respectability of the party I consider in itself as no small guarantee in that country; and the employment of only one agent would also prevent competition, which I look upon as the only source of such abuses. I should observe, too, that the Government regulations formerly existing, and which would now no doubt be renewed, provide that all must pass the examination of a medical officer belonging to the Government service, to ascertain that no person embarks who is either deformed, or under the influence of any local or chronic disease; and that after such examination they must all appear before the proper police officer, in order that it shall be seen that they all understand the nature of their engagements, and that they quit the country of their own free will. The medical officer is authorised to receive a fee of one rupee for each person examined.

4. How are the agents to be paid, and how could respectable persons be obtained to fill the situation?—The highest rate of commission was 30 rupees for each Coolie embarked, which is ample remuneration, provided the whole go through one hand or firm.

5. By whom is the agent to be nominated?—I think the government here should appoint a competent individual to act as agent for Coolie immigration in Sydney, in conjunction with whom there should also be a committee of the most respectable and intelligent colonists, who should be in correspondence with the agents in India, who should also be approved by this government, and that these agents should not be changed except with the sanction of this government, and under the recommendation of the committee; the agent here should be paid by a small fee on each Coolie introduced, and his duty should be to carry into effect the resolutions of the committee; no Coolies should be introduced except those ordered through the agent and committee, for settlers whose applications have been approved by them.

6. Are there any other precautions which you would recommend to be used in bringing Coolies to Sydney?—I think the captains of the ships bringing them should, besides their passage-money, be allowed a premium on every man pronounced by a Government medical officer here to have arrived in good health. I do not mention any regulation as to food, accommodation, &c., as these are matters which will be looked into by the agents in India, where the Government regulations provide for a sufficient quantity of sound food being put on board, under the superintendence of an officer of the Customs department; but a sufficient supply of suitable clothing should be stipulated for by the agent here, to whom and the local committee all these preliminary arrangements should be wholly entrusted.

7. Do you think Coolies should be introduced indiscriminately on the application of all parties desirous of employing them, or would you recommend any restrictions in this respect?—As I conclude the Coolies will come only for a limited period, say five years, and that few, if any, will settle permanently in the colony, I think the parties applying for their introduction should be required to show to the satisfaction of the agent and committee here, not only that they really have the means of employing them after their arrival, but also of defraying the expense of their passage back to India, should they desire to return there after the expiration of the terms of their several agreements; and, with respect to applicants resident resident in the country, they should also be required to come under engagement to pay the earnings of each individual Coolie monthly into the savings' bank, either in person or by an agent; this latter regulation I should consider of great importance, as it would not only secure to the Coolie the regular payment of his wages, and tend to establish in him habits of saving, but would prove to the government of India, not only that the Coolies will be better treated here than in their own country, but also, that whenever they return to India they are likely to take with them ample means for their comfortable subsistence during the remainder of their lives; and, from the more civilized habits which they will have acquired during their sojourn here, be better able to appreciate the value of their improved condition. I would not recommend that Coolies should be employed in any part of the colony where they would be more than one day's journey from a magistrate, to whom, if oppressed or in any way aggrieved, they would soon find their way; and from the facility with which many of them make themselves understood, I feel sure they would soon be able to make their case known; no Coolies should be brought from India excepting under indenture or agreement to persons whose applications have been previously approved, as before suggested, and none should be allowed to be brought on speculation; this would prevent the many needless disputes between the Coolies and their employers which would otherwise arise, and from which both parties would be sure to suffer considerably; neither should any transfer of indenture be allowed, even with the sanction of the Coolie himself, unless with the approval of the nearest magistrate. In sending Coolies from India, they should be embarked at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, in the months of November, December, and January only; as, if much later embarked, the passage here would occupy double the time, and its commencement would be, in all probability, in adverse, stormy, and unhealthy weather.

Wednesday, 14 July 1841.

Robert Scott, Esq. of Glendon, called in, and Examined.

1. You have been engaged and are still engaged in sheep-farming?—Yes, very extensively, in the Darlington district, on the Hunter's River; it is about 18 years since I bought my first flock from Mr. Macarthur.

2. In what way have you hitherto been supplied with shepherds?—In the first instance I employed convict shepherds, but latterly the greater part of my servants have been free men.

3. Have you been able of late to engage as many shepherds as you required?—On the contrary, I have experienced very great difficulty in engaging shepherds, and have been obliged to take any description of men I could get, many of whom have been wholly ignorant of shepherding; these observations apply to every description of labourers.

4. Have wages and other expenses greatly increased?—Very greatly.

5. Can you state the yearly expense at present of a free immigrant employed as a shepherd?—I should think it cannot be under 50*l.*, including rations and all other expenses; the wages would be about 30*l.*

6. Do you keep your sheep at this time in larger flocks than formerly, and than you yourself would wish, if labour were more attainable?—Yes, in much larger flocks than they used to be or ought now to be kept in; formerly I employed four men to every 1,000 sheep, three of them as shepherds, and one as watchman, besides the superintendents; but now the same number of men have charge of from 1,500 to 1,800 sheep, and even 2,000.

7. Do you think that the sheep are injured by going in such large flocks?—I have not the slightest doubt of it; there are no fat sheep at all now, except such as are placed in small flocks, and at choice stations; the sheep are more harassed in large flocks, and they have greater distances to travel for their food, as the homesteads are trodden and eaten bare for a long way round.

8. Is it in the quantity of their wool, or in its quality, or in their general condition, that the sheep are injured?—I do not think it is the quality of the wool that is injured; that I think remains as fine as it used to be, or better; but the quantity both of wool and mutton is certainly much diminished, although so far as respects my own flocks, I have taken the greatest pains to keep up both, by a constant supply of fresh rams, without any regard to expense, and never using any until by actual weighing at shearing time, their wool is found to come up to a given standard; indeed I have observed that my flocks have been deteriorating in weight for some years, although I keep a stud flock expressly for their improvement.

9. If free labour only is to be employed at the present cost, and at the present returns for wool and stock, can sheep-farming be carried on at a profit?—It cannot be carried on profitably anywhere, except perhaps on the interior stations beyond the boundaries, where the cost of land is nothing more than the fee for a squatting licence, and the assessment, and in those open countries where sheep may be kept in flocks of 1,000 each; but to attempt to carry on sheep-farming on purchased land would be certain ruin.

10. Have you observed that the pasturage is also injured by sheep going together in such large numbers?—I have no doubt that it greatly injures the pasturage, especially where the flocks are folded; I am aware that in England folding is considered beneficial, but here I know it to be positively injurious.

11. Are you at the present time able to dispose of your surplus stock to advantage?—I am not; I cannot sell even my fat stock at anything like reasonable prices.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Robert Scott, Esq.

14 July 1841.

12. Is the want of a market, in your opinion, attributable to the scarcity of labour, or to what other cause do you assign it?—In a great degree it certainly is attributable to the scarcity of labour, inasmuch as that sheep-farming, owing to this scarcity of labour, is at present decidedly a losing concern, and therefore persons will not now engage in it, thereby rendering our surplus stock unsaleable, and the prices of fat stock are kept low by the excessive competition of needy persons forced to sell during the present period of general distress; none can now enter into sheep-farming except such as, having money, take advantage of the market and the general distress, and purchase stock for a fourth part of its full value, speculating upon a rise hereafter, and treating it rather as a mercantile transaction than a regular and permanent branch of business; but such depreciation in the value of stock, consequent on the present scarcity of labour, cannot otherwise than ruin the proprietors of purchased land, who may be considered as representing the true and best interests of the colony.

13. When free immigrants engage as shepherds, is it their general disposition to continue in the same employ, or do they frequently change?—I think it is their disposition generally not to remain long with one master; I do not assert this to be characteristic peculiarly of shepherds; it is, I think, the disposition of servants generally in this colony; and I am sorry to say that I think one cause of this disposition to change arises out of the conduct of the masters themselves, who very frequently endeavour to obtain the services of their neighbours' servants, by bribing them with offers of higher wages, and taking them without a character; such is the extreme scarcity of labour.

14. Do they appear generally to prefer the life of a shepherd to other kinds of employment?—So far as my observation has gone, I should say they do not, particularly the newly arrived immigrants, who seem to have an unconquerable dread of the bush, black fellows, &c., as is clearly proven by the fact of our being obliged to give as high wages to a shepherd to perform a duty which either a boy or a weakly man could perform equally well, as to a hard-working agricultural labourer; indeed, so great is the difficulty of inducing newly arrived immigrants to engage in the business on any terms, that I now never attempt to hire them from the ships.

15. To what causes do you attribute that dislike among the free immigrants?—The solitude of a shepherd's life is, in the first place, contrary to those habits of unrestricted intercourse with their fellows in which the generality of immigrants have been brought up; and, in the next place, the loitering and listless nature of its duties is altogether opposed to the energetic character of the British people, accustomed as they usually are to active employments; besides these causes which operate to deter them from engaging as shepherds, the newly arrived immigrants are, as I have said before, full of imaginary fears of the bush, black fellows, snakes, &c.

16. Are the shepherds employed by you chiefly married or single men; and what is the nature of the accommodation for them at the stations?—I cannot at this moment tell the proportions of married and single shepherds in my service, but I have both; I think the married men are the steadiest, that is, they are not so much inclined to wander from service to service as the single men are. As to their accommodation I am peculiarly situated in that respect, having a large extent of land of my own, on which, ever since I foresaw the approaching termination of the assignment system, I have exerted myself to build good substantial double cottages, of which I have now from 20 to 30, having two rooms in each, and fit for the accommodation of the 50 families for whom I have sent to England on the bounty system; at the stations beyond the boundaries, where the occupier of Government land has not an hour's certain tenure, no man in his senses would go to the expense of building good or permanent cottages, and the consequence is, that the shepherds, and even their masters, live in a state of great discomfort.

17. Should you imagine, judging from past experience, that a sufficient supply of shepherds can be relied on from Europe?—Certainly not; and every year the demand and supply are becoming more disproportionate.

18. What do you consider will be the consequences on the general prosperity of the colony if immediate measures be not taken to obtain an adequate supply of labour at reasonable wages?—Inevitable ruin; for we cannot, as it is, raise even the necessaries of life, or convert others into a state fit for the market. This is distinctly shown by our immense imports of flour, salt meat, butter, cheese, hams, &c. &c. &c. to the value, I should think, of not less than 200,000*l.* yearly; and these are articles all of which ought to be, and indeed could be raised in the colony, if we had a sufficient supply of labour.

19. Can you suggest any source from which the present deficiency of shepherds you have described may possibly be supplied?—I have long been endeavouring to get labourers from the agricultural districts of India; from among the Hill Coolies, Mahrattas, and the people of Madras.

20. What number of Coolies do you suppose will suffice to supply that deficiency?—Taking the total number of sheep at present in the colony at four millions, and allowing three Indians to every 1,000 sheep, the number at present required would be 12,000; an addition of 2,400 would be wanted the following year, and an annually increasing number in proportion to the increase of the sheep; that is, if the whole of the sheep were to be tended by Indians; but this would not be the case, as many Europeans, from choice or inability to perform more laborious or arduous duties, would continue to be shepherds.

21. Do you contemplate the permanent employment of Indians as shepherds in this colony?—Certainly I do not desire that, but on the contrary, whenever a sufficient number of European labourers could be obtained at a moderate rate of wages, I would altogether dispense dispense with the services of the Coolies; and I would form a fund from the beginning to return them to their native country, which I am led to believe they would all have a strong desire to do.

22. Will you explain to the committee what regulations you would propose in order to obtain the introduction of Indian shepherds to secure their proper treatment whilst in this colony, and to enable them to return to India at the expiration of any given period?—I would propose that the Coolies should be introduced into this colony only through the intervention of the Governments of India and New South Wales; that in this country there should be a committee appointed by the Government, through whom all applications for Indian labourers should be made, and through whom they should be introduced under a form of indenture approved of by both governments; that these indentures should pass through the police authorities in India, in order that the Indians should fully understand their contracts, and that no improper castes or people should be engaged; that the people should be examined by a medical officer in India, in order to ascertain their bodily and mental health before sending them; that there should be but one authorized agent in each presidency to hire the Indians; that no private agents should be employed at all; that upon the arrival of the Indians in this colony, their indentures should pass through the committee, and be countersigned by them, and that none but such should be legal; that upon the indenture being delivered to the master here, he should deposit a given sum to enable the Indian to return to his native country on the expiration of the term of his service, if he should so desire; that the Indians so introduced should be subject to the laws of the colony in the same manner as European servants; and that the indentures should be of the description referred to in the New South Wales Act.

23. Do you know that there are, throughout India, associations of professional thieves and murderers?—I do, and the precautions of having only one highly responsible agent to engage the people in India, and of requiring the indentures to pass through the police authorities there, have been suggested with a view of providing against the introduction of any members of such castes here, and they would be found, I think, quite sufficient to guard against any danger which might otherwise be apprehended on that head; in proof of which I may mention, that out of 43 Indians introduced by Mr. Mackay, only one man was suspected to be of that description, and he is considered the cleverest man amongst them, but his association having been broken by his removal here, he is now reformed and behaves very well. I ought to mention here that the men introduced by Mr. Mackay, all underwent the inspection of the police and medical authorities at Calcutta.

24. Are you aware whether any means have been adopted at the Isle of France to prevent the introduction of persons of bad character from India?—I believe none, and it is in consequence of the evils reported to have resulted there, from the introduction of Indians of bad character, that we insist upon so many precautions being taken before engaging any to be introduced here.

25. How do you propose that the agents at the Indian presidencies should be appointed and paid?—I would propose that those agents should be appointed by the Indian government, with the approval of the government of this colony; or if that were found to involve too much delay, they might be appointed in any other way which promised to secure the services of men of high character; they could be paid by a commission of 30 rupees for each approved man they sent to us, which sum is the highest commission ever paid on such a transaction.

26. Do you conceive that the payment by a commission per head would be the best mode to secure a proper selection of persons by the agent?—I know of no better mode, provided the agent be of the highest respectability.

27. You have spoken of the existence in India of associations of bad characters; what do you believe to be the character of the class of Indians whom you propose to introduce into this colony for shepherds?—All that I have heard of them, from persons well acquainted with the agricultural population of India, has been extremely in their favour; they are said to be a quiet, tractable, and harmless race of people.

28. Do you consider them to be inferior to Europeans physically, or in general capacity?—They are clearly inferior to Europeans, both as respects their physical and mental capacity; that is, they are unequal to such employments as require great personal strength or endurance, or demand the exercise of the higher intellectual powers.

29. Do you contemplate the adoption of any means by which their moral character and intellectual capacity may be improved during their residence in this colony?—The mere associating them with a superior race of people would in itself tend to elevate their intellectual capacity; and as to their moral conduct, I believe it will be found to bear favourable contrast with their brother labourers with a white skin; moreover, association with Europeans will tend to remove their prejudices, and consequently render them more susceptible of future improvement.

30. Would the indenture, to which you have alluded in a former part of your evidence, be of the same description as that prescribed by the New South Wales Act for English labourers emigrating to this colony?—The indenture which I should propose would be the same as that appointed by the New South Wales Act, modified to meet circumstances; in short, I would recommend that they should be engaged in every respect upon terms similar to those on which we engage British free labourers, with the addition of a stipulation that they should be returned to India on the expiration of the period for which they were engaged.

31. Should you consider the introduction of Indian shepherds so desirable, were it not for the cheap rate at which their labour may be obtained?—Their cheapness is certainly a very great inducement to employ them, as well as their docility and fitness for the occupation.

32. Would you continue to employ Indian shepherds, supposing that you could obtain Europeans at the same rate of wages?—Certainly not, if I could obtain a sufficient number of European labourers of a suitable description; but I think that impossible at present.

33. Do you propose to introduce any Indians, except under indentures?—Certainly not; I propose to bring none but such as shall be indented to the persons who apply for them; I would by every possible means prevent their being imported upon speculation.

34. Is it a part of your plan that the expense of the passage should be defrayed out of the land revenue?—No; my plan is, on the contrary, that every expense, both in India and here, present and future, should fall upon the individual to whom the Indian is indented, which in itself I think will be sufficient security that not more than is absolutely necessary will be introduced.

35. Do you suppose that the introduction of Indians as shepherds will lead to an increase of the land revenue?—Cheap, abundant, and efficient labour, from whatever source derived, will bring renewed prosperity to the colony at large, and no doubt investments will be made in land, which cannot be done with any view to sheep farming at the present prices of land and wool in a country where the usual calculation is three acres to the maintenance of one sheep, which would, at 12*s.* per acre, give an annual rent of 3*s.* 7*d.* per sheep; more than the net value of any fleece.

36. Would not the creation of capital in the colony lead to the purchase of land, and thus increase the land revenue, and the means of introducing European labourers?—Yes; I think it a natural result that some portion of the capital gained would be employed in the purchase of land, and the creation of capital would to that amount increase the fund available for the introduction of European immigrants.

37. Are you aware of any article of export, besides that of wool, which can be advantageously produced in this colony at the present time?—No; I am not aware of any article of export that we could produce at present in the colony, with any prospect of being able to enter into successful competition with other countries producing the same commodity; indeed we do not raise the very necessaries of life in sufficient quantities for our own consumption; but had we labour, we could not only do this, and so reduce a large amount of our imports, but also produce many exports for which the climate and soil are well adapted; such as silk, many dyes and drugs, vegetable oils, flax, timber, salt, meat, tannin, &c.

38. Do you not consider it probable that European immigrants, who are brought out by means of the land fund, may themselves become employers of Coolie labour?—As the European immigrants acquire wealth and farm establishments for themselves, there is every probability that they will employ Coolies indiscriminately with other labourers; connected with this subject, I may mention, that numbers of Coolies, who were indented to the planters at the Mauritius, are now, after the expiration of their indentures, employed at a very high rate of wages, as high, I have heard, as five dollars a week; in fact, the Coolies are quite as well aware of the value of their labour as Europeans are, and can make equally good bargains for themselves.

Thursday, 15 July 1841.

James Denham Pinnock, Esq. Agent for Immigration, called in, and Examined.

J. D. Pinnock, Esq.

15 July 1841.

1. THE committee are desirous of obtaining from you a statement of the progress of immigration, from the date of the returns which you furnished last year, to the present time?—Government immigration ceased previously to the date of the report from the last committee, and all the immigrants who have arrived since that time, have been imported on bounty: I hand in a return on this subject in continuation of that furnished by me to the committee of last year; and also one showing the number of outstanding absolute and conditional permissions to import immigrants on bounty, which have been granted by his Excellency the Governor, up to the 30th June 1841. (Returns put in.)

2. Have you observed, during the past year, an equal demand for labour of various kinds and an undiminished facility of obtaining employment at the same rate of wages as before.—The demand is as great and the wages as high as ever; I produce a table of the average rates of wages given at present. (Table put in.)

3. Has the cessation of Government emigration caused any relaxation in the careful selection of emigrants for whom the bounty is claimed?—No; I do not find that there is any disposition to introduce persons of an inferior description since the Government system has been discontinued.

4. Has the bounty been refused on behalf of any for whom it was claimed during the past year?—Yes, it has been refused on many; whenever the parties on whom it is claimed are not in strict accordance with the regulations, whether as regards age, health, or any other adequate cause, the regulations are enforced, without, however, seeking occasions to throw captious difficulties in the way; they are in fact fairly construed.

5. Do you think the proportion of those who deserved to be rejected has exceeded one in 100?—I should say not.

6. Have there been instances in which the Governor has not confirmed the recommendation.

dation of the Board, when it has been in favour of the bounty being paid?—None; and on the other hand, when their recommendation has been to withhold the bounty, it has in every instance been approved by his Excellency, although frequently appealed against.

7. Can you state whether the amount of bounty withheld in such cases has been so great as to operate as a check to persons engaged in bringing out emigrants?—Certainly not; there seems to be a general disposition on the part of the importers to adhere to the regulations; they are of course liable, in their turn, to be imposed upon by intending emigrants, but I do not think that any importer wilfully attempts to evade the regulations.

8. Do you see any reason to apprehend that persons, not really of the class of labourers, are brought out as such in the bounty ships?—I have no doubt that we may have been occasionally imposed upon, but there is no system which would be entirely free from this risk.

9. Have any instances been detected of attempts to introduce parties of that description under the bounty system?—Yes; there have been some few instances in which the bounty has been improperly paid, and others in which it has been improperly claimed; in the former, the amount has been received back from the importer, and in the latter altogether withheld.

10. Have you detected similar attempts at delusion in the Government ships?—Such instances have occurred.

11. Was the passage-money recovered back in such instances?—It was not; there is no remedy in such cases in Government ships.

12. These cases, however, bear so small a proportion to the general number, that they probably constitute the exception rather than the rule?—Decidedly so, under both systems.

13. Do you consider the gratuities which are now granted to different officers and overseers under the bounty system, amount to so much as 1 l. 10 s. per head for each immigrant landed?—No; I make the amount to be about 18 s. 9½ d., according to the calculation, viz.:—

	s.	d.
Surgeon	10	6
Master	3	–
First Mate	1	6
Second ditto	1	–
Third ditto	1	–
There is also granted to the schoolmaster, 5 l.; to the hospital assistant, 3 l.; and 2 l. to every overseer over each 50 passengers; these sums will, in an average bounty ship bringing 250 passengers, amount to 18 l.; and divided amongst that number give, per head, about	1	6
The surgeon is also allowed a gratuity of 10 s. 6 d. per head for infants under one year of age and for those born on board, and for whom bounty is not paid; these generally average about three per cent., say seven in a ship of 250 immigrants; divide therefore 73 s. 6 d. among that number, and it will give per head an additional	–	3½
And, as before stated, a total per head of	18	9½

14. Has the system of gratuities answered?—Decidedly; it has been found of great advantage.

15 Have any instances occurred of the gratuity being withheld?—Yes; in consequence of misconduct on the part of an officer of one of the ships, the Immigration Board was directed to inquire into the case; and the Governor, on their report, ordered the gratuity to be withheld.

16. Do you think the bounty system has improved, or otherwise, as regards the health, comfort, or respectability of the immigrants, since you gave your evidence last year?—Generally speaking, I think it has improved; we are getting a better class of immigrants every year; the immigrants by the last ship, the "Earl Grey," are as fine a body of people as I have ever seen.

17. Do you think that the recent regulations, requiring the previous approval of the local emigration agents in England, will tend to throw any obstacle in the way of the bounty system?—I think it very probable that such will be the case.

18. Will the principle of granting certificates interfere in any way with the check which has been imposed here for the purpose of preventing the importation of improper persons contrary to the regulations?—It will entirely supersede it, because we cannot refuse to grant bounty claimed on account of those on whose behalf is produced the commissioner's certificate.

19. Have you any suggestion to offer for the improvement of the bounty system?—No.

20. Are you of opinion that there is a probability of an adequate number of immigrants being brought out under the bounty system?—I do not think that any system will supply the number required to meet the rapid increase in the demand for labour in the colony.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

J. D. Pinnock, Esq.

15 July 1841.

21. Do you imagine that the number of emigrants likely to be brought out under the bounty system will absorb the funds which it is probable may be at the disposal of the Government to appropriate to this purpose?—I should say that any number of eligible immigrants could be procured under that system, and that the limit must be determined only by the amount of disposable funds.

22. Do you consider that the parties who have received promises of bounty will avail themselves of them to the full extent?—No; many of those promises will soon expire, and others will not be acted on; but I calculate that about 15,000 persons will be imported on bounty during the present year; about 6,000 have already arrived, and I think 9,000 more may be expected; one half, perhaps, will arrive at Port Phillip.

23. Are you aware of its having been publicly stated that a great and increasing proportion of the emigrants from the United Kingdom are Roman Catholics?—I have certainly heard such a statement made, but it is incorrect.

24. Are there documents in your possession from which the accuracy of such statement can be ascertained?—There are.

25. Can you furnish a return showing what the proportion has been from 1838 to the present time?—I can.

26. The committee will be glad to receive that return?—I will immediately prepare it.

27. Are you aware whether any considerable number of the immigrants avail themselves of the accommodation on board ship, which, under the late regulations, the owners are bound to allow them for 10 days after their arrival?—Nearly all.

28. Is there still a prevalence of those scenes of distress and impropriety which were said heretofore to have occured, in consequence of their being compelled to leave the vessel almost immediately after their arrival, and in many cases when they had no place on shore in which they could obtain shelter or accommodation?—Most decidedly not; unless brought on themselves by refusing a fair rate of wages prior to the expiration of the 10 days, in which case they are compelled to leave the ship.

29. Can you suggest any mode in which such disorders can be prevented, which would be preferable to the mode proposed in the last report of this committee, and since adopted, of allowing them the option of remaining on board, if they pleased, during a time within which, in the generality of cases, they might meet with employment?—I can suggest no method in substitution for that which compels the importers to maintain them on board ship for 10 clear days after their arrival, unless the old system adopted in reference to government immigrants be applied to bounty immigrants; viz. that of receiving them into the immigrant barracks. I cannot, however, refrain from expressing my conviction that such a measure would be fraught with the evils which I formerly alluded to as existing when that system was in operation; I must, in repeating this opinion, disclaim the most remote idea of being actuated by any feelings of harshness against friendless immigrants arriving in the colony, or a desire to prevent them from obtaining a fair rate of remuneration for their services—the competition of masters to obtain them will always prevent such an attempt; but neither do I wish to encourge immigrants, brought out at the cost of the colonists, in combining to keep up too high a rate of wages; such was the result when they were received into the barracks; and as I am satisfied that no person need be out of employ at the expiration of the 10 days, provided he will accept fair wages, I feel it my duty on these grounds, and not from motives of mere economy, to recommend its continuance. I may observe, however, that there is certainly some inconvenience attached to the necessity of proceeding on board ship to engage labourers; but I think that that may be easily and economically obviated by an immigration office and yard being provided near the shipping wharfs, and in a more central situation, as recommended by me to the committee on a former occasion; such an arrangement would soon create a regular labour market, and remove the inconvenience before alluded to. I would also recommend that bounty immigrant ships should be prohibited from breaking bulk, and thereby greatly incommoding their immigrants by filling the 'tween-decks with lumber, &c., until the expiration of the 10 days; and also that they should be compelled, if possible, to be moored alongside some wharf or other place convenient of access.

CIRCULAR.

REPLIES to the following Circular Letter on the subject of the Aborigines, addressed to Gentlemen residing too remote from Sydney to expect the favour of their personal Attendance upon the Committee.

No. 41–4.

Sir, Council-office, Sydney, 12 June 1841.

HIS Excellency the Governor, in his opening address to the Legislative Council on the 8th instant, having suggested the possibility of having recourse to the services of the aboriginal natives of this colony, with a view, in some measure, to supply the prevailing want of labourers in all agricultural and pastoral operations, the committee which has been re-appointed by the Legislative Council, to consider and report upon the subject of immigration, are desirous of obtaining such information as to the practical success which has attended the employment of the aboriginal natives, as may enable them to decide how far the same may be feasible upon a more extended scale.

I am

I am therefore directed to request, that you will have the goodness to reply, at your earliest convenience, to the following questions, for the information of the Committee, and to enable them to report their opinion to the Governor and Council upon this highly important subject; your replies to be written on this sheet (with the addition of more sheets, if necessary) and returned under cover to me.

I have, &c.

(signed) Wm. Macpherson,
Clerk of Councils.

1. Have you been in the habit of employing any of the native blacks upon your establishment?
2. If such be the case, please to state what numbers you have generally had so engaged, whetherthey have continued in constant employ; what has been the nature of their occupation; and how you have been satisfied with their assiduity?
3. Have they been accustomed to receive wages, or other remuneration for their labour; and if so, of what kind, and to what amount?
4. From your experience of their disposition and capacity, what opinion have you been able to form of their usefulness; and also as to the possibility of attaching them regularly to the establishments of settlers, in the capacity of hired servants, whether as shepherds or farm-labourers.
5. Can you offer any suggestion as to the means by which they may be more readily induced to engage in the above, or in any other useful occupations?
6. Please to state the amount of labour which you have known any of them to accomplish, by the day, week, or month; what you consider their average services as compared with those of Europeans; and in what manner they may be most readily induced to exert themselves?
7. What do you consider to be their prevailing character and disposition as labourers; and what are their numbers, so far as you can form an estimate, in your immediate neighbourhood; describing the limits to which your calculation extends?

EXTRACT of a Letter from the Rev. Joseph Docker to His Excellency Sir George Gipps, dated the 31st December 1840.

31 December 1840.

IN consequence of the unfortunate occurrences which took place at the stations of Messrs. Mackay and Chisholm, both near neighbours of mine, and of rumours of murders and depredations elsewhere committed by the blacks, it has lately been extremely difficult, I may say almost impossible, to procure free labour here at any price. At different times I have applied to my agents both at Yass and Melbourne to hire and send me men, but without success. Although unrestricted as to wages, their answer has been, that labourers cannot on any terms be induced to come. Under these circumstances, I determined to employ the aboriginal natives as shepherds and watchmen. I cultivated a more intimate friendship with them in September last; I gradually employed them; found them to be excellent shepherds, faithful and honest; and I now have the pleasure to report that they have the sole charge of my sheep, consisting of between 6,000 and 7,000, young and old; thus engaged, 14 men receive regular supplies of food and clothing, and eight or ten more are occasionally employed and fed.

Henry Bingham, Esq. Commissioner of Crown Lands, Police Station, Tumut River.

H. Bingham. Esq.

24 June 1841.

24 June 1841.

1. I HAVE one native aboriginal policeman, and when not on duty with me in the bush, he will do anything he can that I may require. My public duty does not admit of my attending to any other pursuits, or I have no doubt I could attach others to me.
2. I have frequently had the natives to cut bark, and grind wheat, though not wanting it, in order that they might do something for any food or presents I might give them, and they have performed the work cheerfully.
3. The remuneration the native blacks most desire, is a very liberal allowance of fresh meat and tobacco.
4. I consider the aboriginal natives are a very shrewd, cunning, and intelligent people, and a people of great observation and quick powers of imitation; but there are great difficulties in the way of attaching them to the establishments of most settlers, as otherwise they would make most able, excellent, and superior shepherds and stock-keepers. The assigned servants have generally a great dislike to them, and are jealous of seeing them employed, and threaten them, and the natives, finding themselves uncomfortable, will not, of course, remain at the stations; the treatment that they have been in the habit of receiving from this class of men, and from the parties who ought to have known better, until recently checked by the establishment of the border police, has been one great and baneful source of all the hostilities and aggressions committed on the whites; the spirit of revenge lies deep and long in their breasts, and the innocent suffer at times for the guilty; and I would further remark on this point, that the unfortunate promiscuous intercourse that has taken place so much in this colony between the settlers' assigned servants, and the native aboriginal women, until recent measures have partially checked the same, has much increased the dislike of the aboriginal natives to the whites; and it is melancholy to dwell on the fact that infanticide is frequent among them, as the native aboriginal men cannot bear to see the half-caste children, and the gins destroy them in the wild bush.

5. I have remarked that where the assigned servants are kept from much intercourse with the blacks, the latter will more readily engage, if required, in such pursuits as shepherding and stock-keeping, provided there is a kind and humane person at the head of the establishment; I should consider that a large increase of married immigrants in the interior beyond the limits, would be one great means of attaching the blacks to the stations; and the exercise of a more liberal and generous spirit among the wealthy stockholders beyond the limits, by permitting their superintendents to give them fresh beef occasionally, instead of directing their stock-keepers uncourteously to drive them off their runs. on the fatile grounds that they frighten the cattle, would tend much to the same great end; the parties themselves would, if they understood their own interests, save most considerably by the line of conduct I have pointed out; as if the blacks are kindly requested to traverse any particular direction of a cattle run, when hunting, they will do so, if on friendly terms; they have no desire to disturb the cattle, but it is an excellent and good excuse for indolent stockmen, who in some cases see their master or superintendent but seldom.

6. I have known some of the aborigines of both sexes (particularly the gins) who, during the day, performed as much work about a house or farm as any European house servant; I have seen them milk cows, drive a team, &c.; but I consider that, as shepherds or stockmen, they would be most useful; I do not think them adapted either by climate or temperament for direct hard manual labour.

7. I consider that they do not fancy the simple occupation of an agricultural labourer; it is inimical to their disposition and temper; bnt as shepherds they could still range the forests, and as stockmen they could do the same. The number of blacks in the Murrumbidgee district may be estimated at from 1,500 to 2,000.

Graham D. Hunter, Esq. Commissioner of Crown Lands.

District of Bligh,
Commissioner of Crown Lands' Office, 26 June 1841.

G. D. Hunter, Esq.

26 June 1841.

Sir,

In answer to your circular regarding the Aborigines of this colony, I beg to say that I have always found them to be of an indolent, lazy, and careless disposition; I am aware of some instances in this district where a black is found to do the work of a European, but these are exceptions to the generality of them. I consider the work done by a native black, compared with that of a European, to be about one-third; the native blacks are never paid in money for what they may do for the settler, but in rations, such as tea, sugar, tobacco, flour, and meat. I am perfectly certain that no settler would risk his flocks in the hands of a native black. The female blacks used at one time to herd sheep, and they did it very well, but that was from their being taken from the blacks to whom they belonged, and made slaves of, which often led to bloodshed, but which has been entirely put a stop to within the last two years. A native black will for a few days work well for you; he will then tell you, that he must go to the bush and look for his brother black fellows; if you are angry with him or harsh, he will leave your place, and that clandestinely.

I have, &c.

Commissioner of Crown Lands.

Wm. Ryrie, Esq.

1. I have frequently.

2. Various numbers; never more than a dozen or 15 at one time, and only for three or four days continuance; they have been employed in cutting bark, washing sheep, and gathering potatoes when the crop was lifted; when there was any person to overlook them, they finished the work they engaged to perform, but with a good deal of urging.

3. They have always received food in return for their labour; also tomahawks when cutting bark, every day they were employed they had a large mess of soup made from beef, with vegetables in it, and a portion of bread for each, ready for them when they returned from work; two or three of the women undertook the cooking of the food, and in the evening, before returning from their camp, they received a further reward of one pound of flour, and a few ounces of sugar each.

4. The adults are all able to work, but are not all alike disposed to do so; many of them on arriving at a station are anxious to get employment during their stay, while others would not perform the most trifling piece of work for any remuneration, preferring to go hunting to joining the others in any sort of labour; some would willingly remain at the stations which they have become attached to, and make themselves useful were they allowed to do so by the rest of the tribe; I consider that their wandering habits which appear to be guided by those who possess most influence in the tribe, completely prevent their being voluntarily attached to any establishment in any capacity.

5. As

NEW SOUTH WALES.

Wm. Ryrie, Esq.

5. As they have never remained more than a few days at a time upon my station, and even then shifted their camps to different parts of it during their stay, I am unable to state any means by which they might be induced to remain permanently in any capacity on an establishment; but as some have expressed a great desire to ride on horseback, a few might be made useful as stock-keepers.

6. The principal work they have done for me has been cutting bark, of which I did not keep any account. The only opportunities I have had of comparing their services with those of Europeans, were during sheep-washing, at which they assisted well during the first hour, but subsequently flagged in their exertions, and frequently came out of the water to warm themselves at a fire, complaining of the coldness of the water, which was unfelt by the Europeans; they would have taken more than double the time to wash the sheep than the Europeans, if they alone were employed. The method I have invariably pursued to induce them to work, and found to be of most avail, is to give the promised reward to those only who will work, and on no account to give anything to the idlers.

7. They have no steady habits of labour, and whatever they undertake is performed by fits and starts, requiring to be urged pretty often to go through with their job, particularly if it should be of three or four hours' continuance, as any trifling occurrence that takes place will divert their attention. I can form no estimate of their numbers in this neighbourhood, as they merely pay flying visits, and are generally accompanied by natives from other tribes. I am consequently unwilling to hazard even a guess concerning the number of the tribe which belongs to the Yarra Yarra.

James Walker, Esq. J. P. Wallerowang.

James Walker, Esq.

8 July 1841.

1. I have, both here and at my out-stations on the Castlereagh River.

2. I have had a native of the country on the Castlereagh River living with me here for upwards of two years; he has assisted in milking cows, riding after cattle or horses, and accompanies me on any journeys I have occasion to make to my stations; there are usually four or five at my breeding herd station on that river; they milk the cows, bring them home in the evening, &c., and generally remain on the spot, performing many services which it would be almost impossible now to get white people to do.

3. Those who have been employed about the stations get milk, flour, meat, and occasionally tobacco, tea, and sugar; generally speaking, they get all the food they require while they remain; their services are very valuable, looking up stray cattle, and breaking in heifers to milk, &c.; to the young man (about 18 years of age) who has lived with me two years, I give all the clothes he requires, which are of the same quality as are used by free mechanics; he gets his food with the other servants in the kitchen, and I have branded two of my best three year old heifers for him; I allow him 10 l. a year as wages.

4. Their services are most valuable and highly useful; their capacity is equal to the care of any kind of stock; their dispositions are good, but they are susceptible of fits of passion and sullenness, which, however, soon wear off; they seem fickle, and sometimes appear to act from motives or impulses, which it is not easy to account for satisfactorily, from any analogy our own feelings or sympathies enable us to apply; kindness and justness in all dealings with them will attach them to the service of a settler; they would, however, I think, occasionally break their engagements at first, from their imperfect knowledge of the nature of a mutual contract, though after a time, when they become acquainted with their advantages, and are aware that they are protected by authority, and considered as being hired and entitled to receive rations and wages in the same manner as white men, they will in all probability remain, and be regular at light work, particularly riding amongst stock, and in many cases they will follow a flock of sheep.

5. I would suggest that the terms on which they are hired should be registered, and their wages or live stock accounted for to some authorised individual or body; they would themselves either dissipate or be cheated of their earnings: in some cases the white people of the lower classes would view and treat them with jealousy, as being competitors with them in the labour market; I cannot say I think any plan to ameliorate their hard fate and make them useful to the settler could be devised, that would not be surrounded with many difficulties for a time, from the very different relative positions in which we have heretofore stood towards each other; those who have been longest in contact with the white population, are the least useful, whilst they have adopted our vices.

6. I can only state generally, that the quantity of labour they perform when at work is small, indeed they have never come under my notice as labourers for more than an hour or two at a time in harvest; hard work is not suited to their disposition; they prefer riding, driving cattle, going out on journeys, &c.

7. They like uncontrolled liberty and freedom; amongst themselves they appear to have few restraints; they are acute, intelligent, and shrewd, and well disposed; in short, it is impossible that Europeans, taking possession of a country, and living amongst the aboriginal inhabitants of it, could maintain a better understanding with them than for many years past has subsisted in this part, and also on the Castlereagh River, since stock was first taken out there; we have abridged all their natural sources of existence, and they appear satisfied to receive our food in exchange for services occasionally rendered us; in this immediate neighbourhood, that is, the country from the northern borders of Argyle, by the Abercrombie River to Bathurst Plains (not including the Bathurst tribe), and from thence to Capiti, I suppose there are not above 40 or 50 of both sexes and all ages; their number I think has diminished since I first came to this part in 1823; though they are occasionally seen intoxicated and resort too frequently to the neighbourhoods of public-houses, they have not abandoned their natural mode of procuring food, but still continue to place their chief dependence for a supply in hunting.

Edwin Rouse, Esq.

1. Yes.

2. I have employed six native blacks occasionally to assist my stockmen in the care both of horses and cattle, and also to assist my bullock-drivers, and have invariably been satisfied with their conduct.

3. I have allowed them a sufficiency of clothing, food, and tobacco.

4. From my experience of the disposition and propensities of the aboriginal natives of this district, I am led to believe that the present generation will be of very little service, either as shepherds or farm-labourers; there is, however, a possibility of attaching them regularly to the establishments of settlers in the capacity of hired servants.

5. The suggestion I have to offer is, that every aboriginal native who may be disposed to hire or engage, for any time or period, should be considered beyond the control or authority of elders and chiefs of the district or districts to which he or she may belong, otherwise, whatever kindness may be evinced towards them, or however attached they may become to any family or establishment, they will, so long as their native rulers are allowed to exercise an unjust influence over them, be valueless to the community, and every effort to render them a permanent benefit will be fruitless.

6. The amount of labour they perform, and their average services as compared with Europeans, I must leave others to determine who have seen them work; I believe they will be most likely to exert themselves in assisting at sheep-washing, bullock-driving, and stock-keeping.

7. My opinion of their prevailing character and disposition as labourers is, that they are indolent and prone to wander; their numbers seem to be fast decreasing, as I cannot muster above four or five who really belong to the immediate neighbourhood in which I reside.

G. B. Boulton, Esq. Native Dog Creek.

G. B. Boulton, Esq.

1. I have.

2. I have never had more than three, and never succeeded in keeping them on the establishment for a longer period than three weeks at any one time. I have never been able to get them to do more than assist in washing sheep or cutting bark; for two or three hours they work very well, but after that they are of little or no use.

3. When employed cutting bark they are paid in rations, but during the shearing I pay them 6*s*. per week, and allow them 12 pounds of flour, 15 pounds of meat, six ounces of tea, four pounds of sugar, and half a pound of colonial tobacco per week.

4. They are very useful in tracking lost sheep, cattle, and horses; also, as I before stated, in cutting bark and assisting in washing sheep. I do not think it possible to attach them regularly to establishments, as, generally speaking, they seldom remain longer than a week or ten days in one place; I have repeatedly tried to engage them as shepherds, and offered 25*l*. per annum and rations to them, but have not been able to get one to stay with me. As labourers they would not, in my opinion, be worth their rations, they are so excessively indolent.

5. I believe the settlers have tried every means to induce them to work, but with very little success. I do not see the slightest possibility of inducing the adults to engage in any useful occupation; but I have every reason to believe, that if schools were established for the education of the aboriginal native children, they would in a few years, in some measure, supply the demand for labourers, and be of great benefit to the colony.

6. I have never known one of them to do a day's work; I consider an European's labour per day to be equal to what it would take four natives to do; they are not at all adapted for hard work, and the only way they could become of any real benefit to the settler would be in following sheep, if they could be induced to give up their wandering habits.

7. As I before stated, they are too indolent to become of any real use as labourers. I need only add, they are too indolent to grind wheat when it is given them. I only know of two instances of their staying for any length of time on an establishment, and these men at times take to the bush and remain away for a month or six weeks; no dependence can be placed on their staying.

As none of the questions relate to the aboriginal native children, I avail myself of this opportunity of stating my opinion, that if some means could be adopted by the Government for the education of the aboriginal native children, they would in a few years, in some measure, supply the demand for labourers; I would therefore recommend that schools should be be established in the different districts for the education and conversion of these unfortunate children, whence, after remaining for a time until they are in some measure weaned from their former habits, they should be removed to schools down the country, which would prevent any of the tribes having influence over them; I am well convinced, if rewards were given to those natives who would give up their children to be educated that they would willingly do so, and by this means more would be accomplished in twelve months towards the conversion of these unfortunate people to Christianity than has hitherto been done since the mission was first established. The progress made by the children now under the care of Mr. Watson will fully bear me out in this assertion, as they know and understand a great deal more of the contents of the Bible than most European children do of the same age. The Government having now 15 per cent. of the land fund set apart by authority, to be expended on the aboriginal natives, I am sure they could not expend it better than by establishing schools for the education of these children: as a proof of what little can be done with the adults, I need only mention the little success that has attended the very great exertions made by the mission at Wellington Valley.

1. Yes.

Mr. B. Barber.

16 July 1841.

2. Various numbers, as they occasionally visit the station; one boy, about 14 years old, has been in my service for two years attending cattle, and in very few instance has lost any; he has also been on the road with the team, and was very useful in tracking bullocks when they were lost, or driving cattle or sheep up or down the country; others have also been engaged and performed this duty faithfully; and some have been entrusted with flocks of sheep, but their stay never exceeded a few weeks; in one instance I had a black for three months to attend a flock of sheep, and he did it as well as a white man.

3. We pay them with articles of food and clothing, which seem to satisfy them best, as they do not know the value of money; if they stay for a month or two, they are satisfied with these articles, and a blanket when they leave, which must be promised beforehand as a reward for their good conduct, and on no account withheld from them.

4. In some things they are truly useful; for instance, in cutting bark, and assisting in washing and shearing sheep. To attach them to a place would be impossible, although they frequent those stations most where they are best fed; if they could be induced to leave their tribes and to indent themselves to kind and humane masters in distant parts of the colony, they would make faithful servants. The only way this could be effected, would be to persuade them to volunteer their services, and to obtain permission from the other blacks, otherwise it would cause discontent, and perhaps bloodshed; they are best adapted for shepherds and stockmen, as they are averse to hard labour.

5. The only means that I can suggest, would be for the settlers to feed them well; also to endeavour to reconcile those white people who are averse to them, as the nearer they are allied to the whites, the nearer they approach to civilization; also to distribute them to the settlers so that each may have his home; and the settlers not to encourage each others blacks if they leave the stations; they may be induced to stay at a station, simply by giving them a brass plate, and they ever afterwards designate the giver as their master.

6. I have had one black in my service for three months, attending a flock of sheep; during that time his services were equally valuable as those of an European at sheep-washing; I consider two blacks equal to one white man in minding sheep, for which they are best adapted, and if they could be induced to do so their services would be equally valuable as those of Europeans; by promising them a blanket or a brass plate, and by treating them kindly, they become attached to their masters, and while they will stay they can always be made useful in some way.

7. They are not disposed to continue at any kind of labour for more than a few hours in a day. To induce them to stay at one kind of labour would be impossible. There are three distinct tribes in this neighbourhood, the Hume or Uradgerry, the Weiro or Ovens, and the Unangan or Lower Hume, consisting of about 200 in each tribe. The Hume blacks are the most civilized, and approach the huts without fear. We are in the centre of these tribes, and they extend over a country of about 1,000 square miles.

To conclude, it is much to be wished that a person were appointed who would endeavour to organize a system in each district, to protect the blacks from oppression; a person in the character of a missionary or catechist would be the most desirable, as he could instruct the whites, and endeavour to cultivate their morals, as well as those of their sable brethren, as it is certain there is a deficiency in morals among the whites as well as the blacks; under such circumstances we might hope to see the blacks make themselves useful, but at present they have an example of nothing but vice before them, from our own countrymen, who are in a sad state of moral discipline, religion appearing to be entirely forgotten among them; and I fear little can be done for the blacks until the whites themselves become better men.

J. J. Phelps, Esq. Wellington.

16 July 1841.

1. Yes.

2. The greatest number at any time engaged on my establishment has been 14 males, who have continued for three and four months at a time; they were principally engaged in sheep-washing, at which work I found them as efficient as white men.

3. At sheep-washing, I allow them 1 s. per day, and as much rations as they and their wives, &c., if any, can consume. I have known them to earn 3 l. in two months, besides being amply supplied with food.

4. Owing to their independent spirit, and love of a wandering life, acquired before their knowledge of white people, I fear the difficulty of turning the present generation to permanent useful purposes would be great, as I have known them to leave their work in the most hurried time, and go off into the bush to attend meetings of their tribes, &c.

5. I fear there would be little use in attempting it with the present race of adults, for the reasons above stated, but I am of opinion that the younger ones, if properly trained to agricultural pursuits, &c., at some public institution, could in time be made useful members of society, as I know from experience, that after associating for any time with whites, when young, their ideas and native habits become quite changed.

6. One shilling per day is the highest wages I have known them to get; in many instances their services are fully equal to those of Europeans, though the contrary is the case with the majority of them; kind treatment, and placing them, as much as possible, on an equality with yourself, most readily induce them to exert themselves, as they look down with the greatest disdain on convicts, perfectly understanding the cause of their inferior condition; they are also well aware of the great disadvantage they labour under in a court of justice, and, in case of dispute, of the difficulty of recovering wages due to them, owing to their evidence not being admissible.

7. They are too unsteady a race to engage in any permanent employment, but when they give their mind to it they are good labourers; I calculate their number from Wellington, along the Macquarrie to Mount Harris, to be about 1,000, besides women and children.

J. W. D. Passmore, Esq. Molong Nyrang.

J. W. D. Passmore, Esq.

1. Yes; in 1838, I had about 15 natives employed in sheep-washing; since then, two have, at different periods, been employed in taking care of horses, say for three or four months at each time; and one for a short time as shepherd.

2. This is answered in part by my reply to Question 1; in answer to the latter part, I cannot say I was satisfied with the manner the work was performed.

3. Yes; the usual ration given to my free hired servants has always been allowed to the natives when at work, and in addition, tobacco, blankets, and slops; in many cases making the labour of each cost 10 s. extra per week.

4. I consider that although they may be for a time usefully employed in some light occupation, which, from its novelty, conveys to their minds pleasure, rather than the means of gaining a livelihood, such as riding after stock, horses particularly; yet, speaking of the present generation, it is impossible to count upon their remaining permanently at any establishment, for so soon as the novelty in their improved condition wears off, they invariably resume the roving life they have been accustomed to, returning only at uncertain intervals, when hunger, or the caprice of the moment, may direct them.

5. I have already stated that I consider it impossible to work any useful reform in the adult native; some good might be effected among the rising generation, by the formation, in the interior, of an establishment, similar in its working to that proposed by Mr. Robert Owen for the benefit of the lower orders of the mother country; such an establishment would require a clergyman, and several strictly moral married artizans, for the purpose of teaching the natives their various trades. The profits arising from the sale of the various articles produced at the establishment should be equitably divided among those who assisted in bringing the articles into a marketable condition. Small grants of land might be offered as premiums to the natives for good conduct; they should be encouraged to take an interest in agriculture, and having thus made the native feel the comforts of a home, and that he has some property at stake, I think he would soon lose his taste for a precarious living in the bush. Religion could, in the meanwhile, be gradually instilled into their minds, but force or restraint of any kind should be avoided as much as possible. It would be absolutely necessary to forbid the white population from approaching within a certain number of miles of the proposed establishment, as it is, I believe, but too well authenticated, that while the natives are slow enough in acquiring the useful qualities of the convict population with which they are surrounded, they show great aptness in picking up all their vices.

6. With regard to the first part of this question, it will be seen by my replies to questions 1 and 2, that I cannot satisfactorily answer the point; comparing their work with that of Europeans, I should say one of the latter was fully equal to ten of the aborigines. The plan I adopt to induce them to exert themselves is, never to give them even their rations until until the work for which they have contracted is completed, otherwise they would invariably sleep and smoke their time away instead of working.

7. They are indolent and cunning; the former inherent, but much of the latter acquired from mixing with the convicts. It is difficult to form an estimate of their numbers; perhaps there may be about 200; I speak of the tribes of Molong, Borea, and Billibong.

William Roadknight, Esq. South Geelong.

W. Roadknight, Esq.

19 July 1841.

1. I have been in the habit of employing the black natives upon my establishment, from June 1836, up to the present time; they assisted me in 1836 to build a bridge over the Maraboul River; this was the first bridge erected at Port Phillip.

2. During the years 1837, 1838, and part of 1839, I had them employed in numbers varying from three to twenty; three lads have continued to be employed on my establishment up to the present time, with an occasional absence of a few days, when they generally inform me of their intention; in 1839 I did not find them so well disposed or willing to work; in 1838 I had them employed as shepherds; one man continued that duty for three months in succession; others were employed assisting to clear land for cultivation and fencing. I employed them at this early period, not with any view to profit, but to conciliate them, being convinced, from my experience in Van Diemen's Land, that if not brought to habits of usefulness they would ultimately be exterminated. I have been perfectly satisfied with the assiduity of many of them; perhaps there is as much difference in them as among white people.

3. I have made it a rule not to give them money, from an idea that it would be improperly used by them in their present condition; those who have only worked occasionally with me, I have remunerated with flour, rice, and sugar, and those who continued at their work, with clothing, blankets, knives, and tomahawks; the lads who have so long remained with, and who, I believe, are attached to me, I supply with food and clothing regularly; their clothing may cost about 5*l.* per annum, and their food, varying little from that of Europeans, about 20*l.* per annum. In this manner I have expended, from 1836 to the present time, three and a half tons of flour, 100 pairs of blankets, besides clothing, knives, tomahawks, rice, sugar, &c.

4. Generally speaking, I think them well disposed, and in point of capacity not inferior to Europeans. Of their usefulness there can be no doubt; under judicious management, I am of opinion they might be induced to attach themselves to settlers; their tastes for occupation vary much in the same manner as white people's.

5. There will doubtless be much difficulty in accomplishing this most desirable object, yet I am not inclined to consider it impracticable; very much will depend upon the persons under whose management this important measure may be attempted. In the first place I beg to suggest the propriety of making a small reserve of land for each tribe; and I am induced to believe that if a small hut and piece of this land, with blankets, mattresses, cooking utensils, and implements for the cultivation of potatoes and other vegetables, (nothing being allowed to be removed from the establishment,) were allotted to each family, with a moderate supply of provisions, judiciously issued, many would be induced to locate themselves; thus a village could be formed where their labour would be useful and available to the white population: some would in a short time be induced to hire themselves (under the guidance of the person placed in charge of the village or settlement,) to the settlers, in different occupations. In no case should two tribes be encouraged to meet; they have always some injury, fancied or real, to revenge, and bloodshed is commonly the result of such meetings. This I consider to be one great cause of the failure of all the attempts hitherto made for their civilization.

6. As stock-keepers, and even shepherds, when they can be induced to remain, their labour is little inferior to that of the generality of our uninstructed European servants. At laborious employment, such as cutting timber with a cross-cut saw or an axe, I have known some of them perform in one day as much labour as Europeans of the description I have named, but on an average, the labour of a native is perhaps not more than one half that of a European. To induce them to exert themselves, I have found it necessary to provide a hut and blankets for them, with a regular, though not over abundant, supply of food, at the three usual meal times.

7. I consider them perfectly honest towards their employers; I do not consider them generally industrious, though I know of some exceptions; I have found them quite tractable under kind and humane treatment, accompanied by a proper degree of firmness, and I can bear testimony to their gratitude. I have not, at this moment, an opportunity of forming a correct estimate of their numbers; that portion of the county of Grant, commencing at the Wairaby River, and extending 30 miles west of Geelong township, may probably contain about 140 men, women, and children; and I beg to add that it is of these tribes only I am enabled to speak.

20 July 1841.

John Rae, Esq.

20 July 1841.

1. I have been constantly in the habit of employing the native blacks upon the different establishments under my superintendence.

2. I have had, generally, one or two who remained a great portion of their time on the station; I have always found them most useful, and willing to do anything in their power that I required them to do. I have frequently employed them in searching after stray cattle or horses, and have been much pleased with the way in which they did their business, and the care they took of their horses; they are particularly fond of riding, and it is my opinion, if properly trained, they would make most excellent and careful stock-keepers; in such pursuits I have found them shrewd and intelligent. I have frequently had seven natives, stripping bark for rooffing huts, &c. and have always found them most willing to get me any quantity I required.

3. The remuneration for their labour, in a great measure, depends on the distance from a township or store; when near either they soon learn the value of money, and expect, and ask, for some trifling sum; in the Mannas country, money is of no value to them, and I usually pay them with some article of clothing, or a blanket, tomahawk, &c., according to the quantity of work they do; I always give them rations when at work, and have their meals cooked for them; they have no care beyond the present, and I have known them make away with a week's rations in one day: I have had one or two on regular rations, but finding it impossible to make them use anything like economy, I have discontinued giving rations to them.

4. From my knowledge of their disposition and love of change, I think it next to an impossibility to employ them as shepherds, or labourers, in sufficient numbers to enable the settlers to feel the benefit of their labour.

5. It has frequently come under my observation, that when a native black has been retained on a station for any length of time, the tribe to which he belongs use every means in their power to induce him to leave, and in the event of not doing so, I have known instances in which the life of the party was in danger until he did leave; I cannot assign a reason for this. It also appears to me, that there is a very bad feeling towards the blacks prevailing in the minds of the assigned servants and labourers generally; the blacks are often badly treated by this class of persons, who get them to do some work under promise of a reward, and when the reward is earned they drive them away without giving it. Such treatment the blacks do not forget, and the character of laziness they have acquired is, I think, in a great measure, to be attributed to their unwillingness to be a second time imposed upon; they never forget a promise made to them, and if broken, they will never again trust that person. I have frequently seen the natives remain contentedly and work well, when away from their own part of the country and not under the control of their own tribe.

6. It is impossible to form an estimate of their services as compared with Europeans, the usual work of each being so very different; however, in any work they have been accustomed to, I think their services would be of value. In stripping bark, I consider one native can do as much as two Europeans; they generally stripped for me 10 sheets each per day; I have known them strip so many as 15 sheets per day. The sheets average generally six feet long and four feet wide. As stockmen, I consider an intelligent black to be very little inferior to a European. By exciting some degree of emulation amongst them, I have found them exert themselves exceedingly.

7. As farm labourers or shepherds, I do not think they could be induced to remain. Their love of change is so great, that no reward could induce them to remain a single day longer than it suited their own convenience. As stockmen, I think they could be readily induced to remain for some time; but they are so wedded to their wandering life, that I think, when the novelty of that pursuit was worn off, they would leave. The tribes that usually frequent this part of the district amount to about 45 men, women and children. My calculation extends 21 miles south to the Hume River, about 60 miles north towards the Bugong Mountains, west about 16 miles towards Mr. Osborn's station, and east about 20 miles towards the head of the Hume River.

T. A. Murray, Esq.

1. I have occasionally employed them for a day or two, but have never been able to establish them permanently on my farm; they in general show a determined dislike to settled habits of any kind.

2. I have never been able to employ more than one or two at a time, unless when bark was to be stripped, when they engaged in greater numbers, that pursuit being more consonant with their usual habits of hunting.

3. They in general receive either clothes or rations, rather than wages, as remuneration for their labour; generally speaking, I do not think the amount adequate to their services. I have myself been more successful in employing them than my neighbours, chiefly because I have made it a rule that they should receive allowances proportionate to the value of the work performed.

4. I have

NEW SOUTH WALES.

T. A. Murray, Esq.

4. I have seen a great deal of them in every way, and consider it impossible to make them useful labourers; their love of independence is too great, and habits of wandering too strong to admit of it.

5. I can offer no suggestions on the subject, being convinced that the attempt would be useless; besides, I question whether their condition would be improved by the change.

6. The greatest amount of work I have ever known performed by a black was not more than one-third of what a white man would have done in the same space of time.

7. As labourers, I consider them to have shown no character, as they have been but little employed; in general, perhaps, they are idle; their numbers in my part of the country are limited, and are not more than one to ten square miles. This calculation extends to the Queanbeyan district; in some parts of the colony they are more, and in others far less numerous; generally speaking, I think it impossible to render them useful as labourers; they are aware of the great superiority of civilized life, and consider themselves, to use their own term, stupid in comparison with white men; but they are so wedded to their own habits, supporting themselves with so much ease by the chase, that it can scarcely be expected they should adopt ours.

P. P. King, Esq. Captain R. N. and Commissioner for Managing the Affairs of the Australian Agricultural Company.

21 July 1841.

P. P. King, Esq.

21 July 1841.

1. Several native blacks have been employed by the Australian Agricultural Company, but the Company is so situated that the conduct of the natives resident within its influence cannot be fairly comparable with that of those resident in other parts of the colony; one principal reason for this is the absence of public-houses, around which, wherever they are, the natives congregate, and by the prostitution of their wives, find ready means to purchase drink; another is, there being no individual in the immediate neighbourhood of the Company's establishment to interfere with the protection and kindness shown to the natives by the Company's servants; under these circumstances the Company possess an influence over them that is perhaps known in no other part of the colony. I allude more particularly to the natives of the Gloucester and Manning, for those of Stroud and Carrington, being nearer to the public-houses of the William's River and Raymond Terrace, are less useful and more inclined to leave any service or work in which they may be engaged. Throughout the establishment the greatest care is taken to prevent any aggression on the part of the Company's servants towards the blacks; this is well known and valued by them; in consequence of this, the occasions of ill-treatment are very rare; all serious cases are brought before the police magistrate, whilst for slighter aggressions, punishment is given by stoppage of indulgence or gratuities, as the case may deserve.

2. The number engaged or employed varies very much; very few can be considered as permanently employed; three or four have herded flocks, with little or no cessation, for six and eight years; and a few have acted as constables, and some as domestic servants; they are fond of being employed as stockmen, but they do not like the trammels of constant attendance; when disposed to absent themselves, they go off without in the least considering our convenience, or apprising us of their intention; their absence is frequently long, and when they return they resume their employment, if permitted, quite as if nothing had happened.

3. We have recently engaged two blacks as stockmen, at eight pounds a year, with slops and rations; how long they will stop with us remains to be seen; it is an experiment worth trying, but I have little expectation of its success. The remuneration generally to blacks is rations and clothes, and occasional jobs are paid for by tobacco and flour, sugar, and tea.

4. I can form no favourable opinion of their usefulness, principally on account of their volatility and dislike of being expected to be regular in their attendance; and if no dependence can be placed in them, they cannot be very useful; I am of opinion, that it will be unavailing to attempt to attach them to the establishments of settlers, except in very rare cases; however well disposed individual blacks may be, the other blacks will prevent them remaining long in any one place.

5. Every inducement has been held out to them to engage in useful occupations for a continuance, but generally without success.

6. I cannot offer a satisfactory reply to this question; I do not think any act of labour is performed by them, unless it be pulling in a boat, which, at Port Stephens, I have known them to do for many hours, frequently from 20 to 30 miles a day; as messengers also, they are very active, and will easily travel 20 miles a day. I do not think they would undertake any work of a laborious character, such as digging, carrying weights, &c.; if they did, they would soon get tired and sneak off.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

P. P. King, Esq.

7. The numbers are difficult to trace, but judging from a muster of natives last Christmas when the Company gave their usual feast at each of their stations, the numbers are not under the following statement:—

— Stroud - - - -		100
— Gloucester - - - -		130
Say - - - -		310

There is a considerable extent of country between the Australian Agricultural Company's east boundary and the sea coast, from which few of the natives visit the Company's establishments; probably the number may be 150 or more, certainly not less. Their character as labourers may be summed up in a few words: whilst at work they are willing and cheerful; but if idly disposed, no inducement can prevent their slyly walking off. They are impatient of control, and require to be coaxed to do anything; if payment is promised and given before the work is completed, they will do no more. On the whole, if they were inclined to work, they would, for pastoral services, be more useful to the settler; but from their general character, I conceive them to be in a great measure very useless. As the questions do not relate to their character and disposition, otherwise than as pastoral and agricultural labourers, I shall leave the subject without further remark.

John Peter, Esq. Yass.

21 July 1841.

John Peter, Esq.
21 July 1841.

1. I have.

2. I have sometimes had as many as 20 employed at one time, and generally have about seven; of these there are only six on whom I can depend; two of them have been employed regularly as shepherds for the last 12 months; another for a shorter period; the fourth is a boy, who has been with me for upwards of two years; the remaining two are young gins, whom my wife has taken under her care; one of them has been with me upwards of two years, the other not quite so long; none of the six show any inclination to join the tribe in their excursions, more particularly the gins, who, notwithstanding the frequent threats of the tribe, testify the utmost reluctance to join them; I have found them useful principally in washing sheep, stripping bark, reaping, and shepherding; I may likewise mention that there are others who would stop with me, if I could find any occupation for them other than shepherding, which many dislike; in every case in which I have employed the blacks, I have been well satisfied with their assiduity.

3. I have never been in the habit of giving them wages, or any other remuneration but their rations, and a little woollen clothing during the cold weather.

4. From the experience I have had amongst them, I am of opinion that they might be made useful, and attach themselves to stations, only for the inroads which other tribes are constantly making, which keep them in a constant state of alarm, and seem to me the principal cause of their wandering habits; until this is put a stop to, and so long as they are permitted to fight their own battles, and kill those who are domesticated--which is a frequent occurrence—they can never be got in any numbers as shepherds.

5. By kind treatment on the part of the settlers, who should take care that those they employ are kept as much as possible separate from the European servants, who look upon them with jealousy, and treat them harshly; and by teaching them to apply to the commissioner of the district for redress of any depredation committed by other tribes, and by severely punishing those who take the law into their own hands, the natives would no longer have the same inducement to wander about.

6. I have known some of them to strip 40 sheets of bark in a day, reap three acres of wheat per week, and assist in fencing, &c., and in all cases in which I have employed them, I have found them very little inferior to the assigned servants; and by occasionally giving them a few articles of clothing, they will exert themselves to the utmost.

7. As labourers they are rather slothful, but when employed for any length of time, this gradually wears off, as it is only the natural result of their previous habits; from the point where the Port Phillip road crosses the Murrumbidgee, for 50 miles down and 20 back, the aboriginal population does not much exceed 100, of whom not more than 45 are males above the age of puberty.

1. Yes.

2. I have had four native youths employed at different periods; one remained one year, assisting among cattle, and then deserted; another remained for a period of three years and then left, returning occasionally, as best suited his own inclinations; the third remained about four years, at different employments, then joined his tribe; he also returned when asked to assist in collecting cattle, or in any light employment, but he will not remain more than six or eight weeks at one time; the fourth has been in my employment about 10 years, never leaving me during that time, except for a night or so, when his tribe happened to be in the neighbourhood; he is usually employed as shepherd, or stockman's assistant; the services of those spoken of have not been of much value to me; there has been a great want of diligence and activity shown; their services could not be depended on for one day; if put to laborious employment, they are constantly idle, even when most required to act.

3. The principal remuneration they receive is clothes and food; with the exception of one or two, they know not the value of money; and unless supplied with clothes when applied for, they become dissatisfied, sulky, and lazy, and will refuse to work; the generality of them require more remuneration than their services are worth.

4. I am of opinion that it is impossible to attach them to an establishment so as to make certain of a continuance of their services; they will not adhere to any agreement if it interfere with their habits of wandering when they wish; judging from my experience, now 16 years, of their manner, habits, and customs, I should say that they are such as preclude the possibility of making them useful; lads from six to ten years, are the only ones that possibly can be persuaded to stay, but upon arriving at the age of manhood, even they will join their tribe; as stockmen and shepherds only will they answer.

5. I have offered every inducement to the men to give up their children to me, but they have no control over them, and it rests with the child itself; and in very few instances can they be persuaded to leave their parents; the only suggestion I can offer is, to get the children from the parents, and teach them to work from their infancy.

6. I have not known an instance of a black fellow performing laborious work for even one day; one European would do as much laborious work in one day as four black fellows; nothing would induce the married men to work at any thing but cutting bark or sheep-washing, and at the latter work, they cannot remain in the water more that half the time a European can, if the day is at all cold; food and clothing is the only inducement for the young men to stay.

7. They are too lazy and idle, and when asked to perform work which requires manual exertion, they will immediately leave your establishment; the number in this district, known as the Murrumbidgee district, I conceive to be about 400.

Thomas B. Wilson, Esq. J. P. Braidwood.

T. B. Wilson, Esq.

21 July 1841.

1. Ever since I became a settler in the interior (upwards of five years ago) I have been in the habit of employing the aboriginal natives; more so, perhaps, than any other landed proprietor in this neighbourhood.

2. I have had occasionally upwards of 50 men, women, and children, on the farm; from 12 to 20 at work; none of them ever continued in constant employment; it is in vain to expect that any of them will do so; the aborigines have chiefly been employed by me in clearing land, and in this way they have rendered me some benefit; but I was obliged to be constantly with them, as so soon as I left working so did they; they have also been of service during sheep-washing, and, very rarely, during harvest; they are occasionally very useful as stockmen.

3. All the aborigines employed by me have always had rations issued to them in the same manner and proportion as issued to my hired and assigned servants; the chief usually came to the stores and witnessed the issuing of the rations, according to the fixed scale; they were also supplied with slop clothing, tea, sugar, and tobacco; but I never gave them any money, being aware that they would put it to an improper use.

4. I have gained some knowledge of the disposition and capacity of the aboriginal natives of New Holland, from an uninterrupted friendly intercourse with them (viz. on the north, west, south, and east coasts,) for upwards of 20 years, as is known to several honourable members of council, and the conclusion I have come to is, that the present race of the aborigines will never be generally useful, and that it is impossible to attach even the most civilised of them regularly to any establishment, however well regulated, in any capacity whatsoever; they may be, as they have been, occasionally useful as stockmen and messengers, but they are totally useless as farm servants or shepherds; any attempt to employ them, especially in the latter capacity, would only end in vexatious disappointment.

5. On this subject a fine-spun theory might easily be formed, but as no good practical result would follow, I decline entering on the question, which I consider a problem, not yet, and never likely to be, satisfactorily solved.

6. I cannot accurately answer this question; but I may state in general terms, that the amount of daily labour of the aborigines falls far short of that of the European. I may here observe that in answer to Q. 2, I have stated that none of the natives have continued in constant employment; I shall state one exception, an aboriginal native (son of the chief of the district) remained with me upwards of two years; he was latterly employed in the kitchen and to wait at table, in which latter capacity he acted when his Lordship the Bishop of Australia did me the honour of a visit; I certainly thought that he was civilised, but after having obtained possession of a new suit of clothes, &c., he left the place about midnight, and the next time I saw Mundilly, he was (perhaps more becomingly) dressed as a savage chief; he evidently preferred a precarious existence, perfectly uncontrolled, to every comfort in a state of thraldom.

7. An invincible antipathy to any regular and continued labour, however moderate, I consider to be one of the principal features in the character of the aborigines; and that in consequence they are not, and never will be, of any real use to the settler. In this district the aborigines are rapidly diminishing; the births, from sufficiently obvious causes, bearing a very small proportion to the deaths; and I am of opinion that in a very few years the aboriginal race will entirely disappear. The present native population of this district does not, I am certain, exceed 50, although I believe upwards of 200 blankets are yet supplied; in these times of reform and economy this is deserving of attention. Although this subject could easily be swelled to many pages, I shall conclude by observing, that from the days of Bennelong to the present time, the manners of the aborigines have not changed, nor are they likely to change, and that the committee therefore, in devising means for obtaining colonial labour, ought to leave the aboriginal inhabitants of New Holland altogether out of the question.

Hugh Murray, Esq.

1. I have.

2. I have frequently employed five or six of the youths on my establishment at light work, such as driving bullocks, planting potatoes, and shepherding; they do their work well, but do not generally remain constant at it; in a few instances they have shepherded for me for three or four months, without a fault, and in these instances I have found that they did not leave from their own inclination, but were compelled to do so by their tribe.

3. I have always given them food, clothes, or tobacco, for their labour; they expect to be so remunerated.

4. I consider that they have sufficient capacity to render themselves useful to the settler in almost every branch of a pastoral establishment; but so great is the attachment of each to his tribe, and of the tribe to its locality and habits, that I do not think it possible to attach them regularly to it in their present state; their civilisation to a great extent must first be effected.

5. I am of opinion that youth only could be worked upon to advantage, avoiding coercive measures; I cannot suggest any more feasible means for their civilisation than that of institutions, in which industry may be made the ground-work of it, extensively spread throughout the colony, and conducted by practical men, under the inspection of the commissioner of the district. I do not think it out of place to remark here, that I consider the establishment of protectors to the aborigines, to be unattended with the slightest beneficial result either to the natives or the colony, and therefore a useless and extravagant waste of money, which has caused great dissatisfaction in every district I am acquainted with.

6. They are invariably so unsteady at laborious work, that I cannot judge of the amount they might perform; at light work, such as I have described, I have often known them perform as much as a European; a promised reward of food or clothes is the only means I have ever used to induce them to exert themselves.

7. I consider them apt to learn, and clever at work; trustworthy when property is put into their charge, submissive, and easily taught obedience and respect; but, on the whole, naturally inclined to indolence. I estimate the number in my immediate neighbourhood, Lake Colac, to be about 35; in a circumference of 20 miles from that point I consider there are about 300.

2. I have had four lads at different times; they were employed only in bringing in horses from the run, and on errands: they remained a few weeks and then returned to their tribes. I have frequently employed the natives in stripping bark, in assisting to drive sheep, and as guides; they were very soon tired of even this light and desultory employment.

3. Food and tobacco while employed, and occasionally clothes.

4. I have known only one aboriginal native permanently employed, he was a shepherd, and did his duty steadily and judiciously for more than a year. I believe them to be quite capable of acting as shepherds, bullock-drivers, or assistant stockmen; but I do not think that the adults will ever generally become domiciled as servants in any employment.

5. I conceive that we must first learn their language more perfectly, or teach them ours, before we can hope to effect any great change in their habits. I would further suggest, that the orphan male children (whom the tribes readily give up) should be interchangeably removed 200 miles from their tribes, and apprenticed to settlers; also, any other boys, not orphans, whom their parents would consent to part with.

7. The tribe inhabiting the country in which my stations are placed, are called the Jajowrongs. I do not know their numbers. I have not seen more than 15 adult males, but believe them to be much more numerous. I do not believe that (even with the best management) a sufficient number of aboriginal natives will ever be trained as shepherds or farm labourers to make any sensible impression on the demand for labour.

2. Two or three at a time as shepherds; they stop sometimes a week, and sometimes a month.

3. Clothes, blankets, and food.

4. The plan of attempting to attach the aboriginal natives to the establishments of settlers as labourers, without some previous preparatory moral instruction, is fraught with so many and serious considerations, affecting the collective interests of the natives, as to render any experiment of this kind entirely unadvisable. By this plan I know not what provision could be made for the aged and infirm. Very few settlers, it is presumed, could be induced to incur the burden of supporting the women and children, whose usefulness must be very limited; nor could the settlers give that personal attention to the peculiar habits and wants of these people, which would be necessary to secure their orderly behaviour and promote their comfort. However well inclined towards the aborigines might be the disposition of the settlers, their necessary intercourse with the prisoners and other servants employed on large establishments, would subject them to the most dangerous moral influence, and augment, to a fearful extent, the occasion of those miseries which have already, in so many instances terminated in loathsome diseases, conflict, and death. Under the present state of things, no one but a personal observer is capable of forming an opinion of the increase and increasing miseries of these people, arising from their intercourse with the white population. One of these calamitous results which I will mention for the sake of illustration, is the increase of prostitution, and the aggravated misery by which it is followed. The motive of avarice, or the desire of European property, added to the dictates of depraved passions, are inducements to the commission of this crime; it is become a kind of traffic, carried on at the expense of degradation, suffering, and destruction of life; it is followed, not only by the misery and sometimes death of the unhappy victims of this intercourse, but its bitter effects are suffered by their offspring, while numbers of half-caste infants are murdered as soon as they are born. To this source of evil might be added many others, which tend to lessen their numbers, debase their morals, lead to violence and outrage, and create a barrier to the spread of knowledge and civilisation. Were it determined by any coercive measure to compel the blacks to remain at stations contrary to their inclinations, their condition would be aggravated by the annexation of slavery. But such a measure is wholly inapplicable to the condition of the blacks, inasmuch as it furnishes no motive to the aborigine sufficiently powerful to induce him to forget the habits and pursuits of savage life. To promise him a grant of land at the end of three years' settled servitude with one individual would have no influence, for he considers the land to be his own; indeed every family has its separate portion. To work, in order to his being fed and clothed, is a tax much too great; and as his inclination is a much more powerful principle than his judgment, the motives for wandering are strengthened by the price required for its relinquishment. This course of remark applies not only to this particular mode of civilising, but to every other which offers motives of no higher import.

5 & 6. To suggest means for the amelioration of the wretched condition of the aborigines of this country, at once appropriate and efficient, it is indispensable that the true cause of their calamities be ascertained; for if the remedy proposed be applied only to circumstances which are obviously the effects of a cause, the insidious operation of which is not duly estimated, disappointment must necessarily ensue; a careful consideration of this perplexing subject will, it is presumed, lead but to one conclusion, viz. that the vagrant and indolent habits existing amongst these people, as well as the distressing privations, civil and social, which they endure, are traceable to no other cause than their fallen and sinful condition, a condition which involves no radical distinction between them and other communities, save that which presents the relative changes resulting from the elevating influence of moral instruction, and consequent christianisation. It is submitted, then, that the most advisable, nay, the only certain means of bettering their condition, is to make them acquainted with our holy religion, by introducing amongst them such ministers of the Gospel as are influenced by the constraining love of God, who, while they engage in the undertaking after the apostolic example, "counting not their own lives dear to them," strive to convince them in life and manner how they ought to labour, and thereby support themselves. In introducing amongst them even this plan, regard must be had to their relative and civil circumstances; it must be remembered that the numerous tribes are in every respect distinct, that the country occupied by each tribe has, amongst them, well-defined limits; that there are almost endless variations in the dialects peculiar to the several tribes; that they are very jealous of their hereditary interests, are often involved in fierce contentions, and are little disposed to confide in those who profess equal concern for the welfare of every tribe; hence the establishment of missions to separate tribes is likely to operate most successfully in insuring the entire confidence of the people, lessening the difficulty of attaining an adequate acquaintance with their language, manners, and customs, as well as ascertaining and obviating the causes of those frequent collisions which occur both amongst themselves and the colonists. The Right honourable Lord John Russell, in a late despatch to his Excellency Sir George Gipps, on the treatment of aborigines of New Holland, states (when speaking of the difficulty in making reserves of land for the natives), that "there are two sources of mischief," which "mar the most benevolent designs of this nature; the one arising from the inaptitude of the natives to change their desultory habits, and learn those of settled industry; the other from

NEW SOUTH WALES.

A. Thomson, Esq.

from the constant inroads of Europeans, to rob, corrupt, and destroy them." But these two sources of mischief are so far from being obstacles in making reserves, that they may be urged as very powerful reasons why such portions of land should be appropriated for their use. For, notwithstanding the erratic habits of the natives, their strong inclination to indolence, and natural dislike to acquire a knowledge of and to engage in arts of civilised life, yet the transition from their present circumstances to that in which they would be placed on reserves, would be scarcely felt, especially so when contrasted with the change they must undergo if they are attached in small parties to settlers, when they would be cut off from their endearing attachments, and deprived to a very considerable extent of social intercourse. In regard to the inroads of Europeans, I see no means of preventing these, unless such reserves are made, or the natives themselves banished from the land of their birth. His Lordship in the despatch just referred to, states also, "it is but too clear that the only effectual remedy for this lamentable evil is an organised force, adequate to keep both parties in check, and confine each to the limits which the Government shall assign. But this remedy is so expensive, and requires so much vigilance, so much temper in every soldier and constable, and the territory to be traversed is so large, that it is after all imperfect." To remove these difficulties, and to meet the emergency of every case, I would recommend the following simple plan, and I venture to predict, that if 15 per cent. of the land fund were appropriated for the use of the natives, (being guided in my calculations by the last year's revenue,) that the temporal and spiritual wants of every native within the territorial limits of Australia Felix, would be amply supplied, so far as human agency is necessary.

1st. That a reserve of land be made for each important tribe, a part of which ought to be hunting ground.

2d. That a missionary be appointed to each station, to take the spiritual charge of the natives, and to have the general management.

3d. That a respectable person be appointed to take charge of the temporal department, who should also instruct the natives in agricultural and other operations.

4th. That the establishments be connected with, and under the control of, one of the missionary societies in England. This would secure piety in the principal agents; and the whole would be conducted on the most economical principles.

5th. That abstracts of the accounts, and reports of the progress of the natives, &c. be made to Government twice a year.

In pursuing the work in this manner, it might be advisable to restrain the tribes to th limits of their own territory, and prohibit their resorting to the stations of settlers without permission; this, I apprehend, might at first be very easily accomplished by the extension of a vigilant and active police, who should occasionally visit the stations until the natives were acquainted with the regulations. In every instance of aggression they should be brought to justice, and slightly punished, whether these aggressions be perpetrated on the persons and properties of the colonists, or on their own people, even though they be in the execution of their own barbarous and savage customs. I perfectly agree with the opinion expressed in Captain Grey's report on this subject, for the reasons there assigned, and that they ought also to be amenable to British laws, and be allowed to give evidence in court, both when natives only are concerned, and when aggressions are made upon them by Europeans. That civilisation would proceed in a ration proportionate to the moral influence of Christian instruction, is demonstrable by the universal concurrence of all historical testimony, whether reference be made to the invariable triumphs of the Gospel, or the universal failure of all mere civilising schemes. Under discreet management, therefore, and by the blessing of Almighty God, it might be hoped, in process of time, that such would be the proficiency of the natives in industrious pursuits, that proper persons in want of labourers might be allowed to hire them on just and equitable terms.

In reply to your letter of the 23d ultimo, in which you request me to communicate to you for the information of the committee of the legislative council appointed to consider the subject of immigration generally, whether the aboriginal natives formerly employed by me are still in my service, I have the honour to state, that in the month of March last, having had occasion to visit Melbourne, I received a letter when there acquainting me that the blacks were committing outrages, and that several heads of the sheep under their charge had been discovered near some water-holes; on my return to the Ovens they had all fled, from a consciousness, I suppose, of their misbehaviour, and an apprehension of my displeasure, and I have not seen a black since. This circumstance, however discouraging it may be to the expectation of their being rendered permanently useful, does not alter the opinion I had formed of a great many of them, were a few of the worst characters weeded out, and summarily punished on the spot when detected in the act of committing offences, by solitary confinement or otherwise; and could the great body of the different tribes be kept at a distance, and not permitted to mix with the well-behaved, I still think a certain number of them might be safely and usefully employed as shepherds; but to keep all right, it would be requisite that a judicious overseer should constantly live among, and be himself one of them. At the time I expressed my opinion to His Excellency, the Governor, I felt justified in describing them as good shepherds and honest men, for, with their assistance, under the guidance of one white man, I had from a flock of 1,200 ewes, an increase of not less than 96 per cent; and what induced me to believe them to be honest was, that when I left my tent in the midst of them, at the distance of three miles from my head station, I never found that anything had been stolen; I also felt at all times secure from danger; they were always glad to see me; I never carried fire-arms. There are other traits in their character, which exhibit them in a very favourable light, which prove that when well treated, they have a regard for the safety of their master's property. I recollect on one occasion, when alarmed by a report that on the following day they were to have a hostile visit from some of their white neighbours, they brought each man his flock (6,000 and upwards) within sight of my hut, and then went away, saying, " we will return in two or three days, when cooler (white man's wrath) is all gone." This they did, and I again employed them, although I suffered much from the mixtures of the different flocks.

You wish to know how I remunerated them; I gave them as much as they could eat; to each shepherd, a ration of beef or mutton, and that of the best quality, for there are epicures even among the blacks, viz.: 4 lbs. per diem or 28 lbs. per week, also 8 lbs. of the best Sydney flour, ¼ lb. tea, 1 ½ lb. sugar, and 3 or 4 figs of the best tobacco—" baal (not) colonial." To several I gave blankets, but the number I do not recollect. Having replied to the queries contained in your letter, which I received this evening, I must defer answering the circular to a future day, although from my imperfect knowledge of the aboriginal character, and brief experience of the bush life, I fear I shall not be able to furnish much information that will be found to be practically useful.

1. I am occasionally in the habit of employing the native blacks.

2. I seldom employ more than from five to ten, male and female; they seldom can be induced to remain more than from two to six days at a time, and work irregularly, and only for a few hours a day; the men strip bark for roofing, &c., lop the boughs of trees injurious from their shade, bring in fire-wood, grind wheat, weed cultivated ground, dig potatoes, and look for stray horses or cattle; the women do the same work with the exception of stripping bark and lopping trees. They work quickly, but not steadily, and never can be induced to remain long in one place.

3. I have been accustomed to pay them for their services in wheat, potatoes, garden-stuff, sugar, and other food, in proportion to the work they do.

4. I do not know how the adults can be induced to relinquish their wandering habits, which must be the first step towards rendering them useful; but if seminaries were established for the purpose of civilising and educating the children, I think most of their parents would be induced to leave them to the care of Europeans, on being convinced that they would be fed and not ill used; coercive measures would probably be necessary at first, in order to induce the children to remain. Those seminaries ought to have a certain quantity of land attached to them, for cultivation, and depasturing some sheep and a few quiet cattle; a master to instruct the boys, and a matron for the females and younger children, with assistants, according to the number of blacks kept at the establishment, would also be necessary; they might be taught to read and write, and accustomed by degrees, to labour, and look after sheep and cattle.

5. If kept in these seminaries for four to six years, and accustomed to the use of European food and clothing, I think they might eventually become useful members of society.

6. Their services are so desultory, that it is impossible to state the amount of their labour, or give an estimate of the proportion it bears to that of Europeans. The rewards which will induce them most readily to work, are warm articles of clothing, especially blankets, and food, as flour, rice, sugar, fresh meat of any kind, particularly mutton; they are also very partial to the small axes usually called tomahawks, as well as to clasp-knives, pipes, and tobacco.

7. They work quickly, but not steadily; there are seldom more than 20 at my station at once, and generally not more than half that number; and I think not more than 100 to 150 who visit me at various times; their country is the upper part of Goulburn River and its tributaries; they however travel down to Melbourne, a distance of 60 miles, being on friendly terms with the Yarra tribe.

H. Oakes, Esq. Commissioner of Crown Lands.

1. Occasionally, as guides in travelling.

2. From 10 to 20. While they remained with me I have been satisfied with their conduct, but I have known them commit robbery and murder immediately afterwards.

3. They have always looked for payment at the end of my journey, which I have invariably given them, in food, tobacco, and clothes, giving to each man a suit and a blanket.

4. When they have fallen into the hands of Europeans at an early age, they have frequently become good stock-keepers and shepherds, as well as tolerable house servants; they have been usually well fed and clothed by their masters. It has not been customary to give them wages, though I have known them highly gratified by the receipt of money.

5. If such natives as I have above referred to, could be prevailed upon to go amongst the wild tribes, which I think they might be, by means of rewards, I am of opinion that numbers of all ages would come in, which might lead to the civilisation of some few of them; I very much desire an opportuuity of making this experiment.

6. I have had no opportunity of judging, but if anything could induce them to work, tomahawks, small axes, and clothes would; by means of tomahawks and axes they would be enabled to procure a living without resorting to robbery.

7. I cannot yet form any correct opinion of their numbers; those I have seen of the wild tribes are lively, intelligent, and contented, so long as they are well fed and encouraged in idleness, but the moment they are required to work, however easy of performance the task may be, they take their departure.

VOTES and PROCEEDINGS of the Legislative Council, Wednesday, 25 August 1841.

Present: his Excellency the Governor and Ten Members. Absent: his Honor the Chief Justice; his Excellency the Commander of the Forces; the Auditor-general; and James Macarthur, Esq.

Report of the Committee upon Immigration, and Mr. Jones' proposed resolutions relative thereto, considered in committee; and the following resolutions severally moved and adopted.

1. Resolved, That this council having had under consideration the report presented on the 13th of August instant, by the committee appointed to inquire into, and report on the subject of immigration, concurs in, and adopts, the opinions therein expressed.

2. Resolved, That as in the opinion of this council, the continued influx of eligible immigrants, will, in proportion to their number, increase the demand for land, enhance its value, and replenish the fund applicable to the encouragement of immigration, no temporary deficiency in its amount (the reverse of which is happily the case at present) should be allowed to interrupt the requisite supply of labour; and this council therefore guarantees to the utmost of its ability, a speedy re-imbursement of such sums as the government may find it necessary to advance, in anticipation, towards promoting an object of such vital importance.

Copy of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Honourable E. E. Villiers to James Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 7 May 1842.

With reference to your letter of the 20th ultimo, enclosing a copy of the report of the Committee of Legislative Council of New South Wales on immigration, we have the honour to state for Lord Stanley's information, that we have duly perused and considered the contents of this document.

We do not find that there are at the present moment any practical questions on which it is necessary that we should submit any remarks to Lord Stanley with reference to this report. We will merely state in general terms, that, with regard to the mode in which emigrants should be sent out by the aid of public funds, we entirely agree with the council in thinking that the sole object to be arrived at is the promotion of that method, or of that combination of methods, which may be found most conducive on the whole to the welfare of the emigrants and of the colony.

In regard to the kind of persons who may be with benefit admitted into the number of free emigrants, we shall not fail to bear in mind, on any future occasion in which we may have to act upon the subject, the additional information supplied by the Committee of council in their present report.

Upon the important question of encouraging the immigration of Hill Coolies, it has been very gratifying to us to observe the firm, and, as we believe, the sound conclusion of the Committee, notwithstanding the force of the temporary motives that might have been felt to expend upon this object some part of the public funds available for obtaining a supply of labour.

With reference to the nature and the extent of our superintendence of the emigration upon bounty, we have had much pleasure in perceiving that our course of action has accorded with the opinions expressed by the Committee. A right was reserved to our Board, of ascertaining that persons going out by the aid of public funds were not induced to emigrate by misrepresentation, and we made use of the power to prevent the circulation on behalf of any one colony of tracts or advertisements containing passages in disparagement of others; but we in no case caused the institution of inquiries among individual emigrants in the nature of those which the Committee of council justly point out, would be so little suited to practical purposes, and might be attended with so much inconvenience. We have also never interfered with applicants for a free passage upon the ground of personal unfitness under the colonial regulations, but we think it desirable that the certificates of the character of the emigrants, and to the correctness of the statements which they make respecting themselves, should continue to be examined at this office; first, because we have means of examining into their authenticity, which could not be possessed by a board sitting in the colony; and next, because experience has proved that our inspection is useful in detecting forgeries; no evils, on the other hand, so far as we are aware, have resulted from these documents being submitted to us. Amongst the 18,000 emigrants who left the United Kingdom last year under our general supervision, whilst there are several cases in which we have the satisfaction of believing that we interposed with advantage to the passengers, and to the place for which they were destined, we are not aware of one instance in which a complaint was preferred of our having interfered unduly, or with harshness; nor can we call to mind any case in which it could be alleged that the interference was to the detriment of the colony to which the emigrants were going.

We have only to add, with reference to the concluding passage of the Committee's report, that the question of the religious creed of intending emigrants is one which is never raised at our Board; and that we fear that the ports of the United Kingdom which the Committee indicate as desirable ports of embarkation, would not be found well suited to the filling up and despatching of large emigrant ships. But as the question does not at the present time arise in a practical form, it would probably be superfluous that we should enter into any detailed explanation on the subject in this communication.

We ought not perhaps to conclude, without drawing attention to the circumstance that, in his despatch enclosing the report, Sir George Gipps again adverts to the question of the repayment of the advances made from New South Wales to the colonies of New Zealand and South Australia; and also expresses his hope that that in the event of any actual deficiency, he may be allowed to look for relief to the military chest.

In answer to Sir George Gipps' request for information on the sales effected by this Board, we have the honour to state that the former inquiry to which Sir George Gipps refers, was not forwarded to our Board. The agent of the colony in London has been cognisant of any sales that were made, and returns of them were sent to Mr. Latrobe, at Port Phillip, in which district the lands sold have been almost exclusively situated. We now beg to transmit, for the Governor's information, a return of all sales from the beginning. The public has not shown much disposition to effect purchases in this country, of colonial lands; but at any time at which further sales may take place, we shall not fail to take measures for duly apprising the Colonial government.

We have, &c.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 30 August 1841.

WITH reference to my letter of the 24th of February last,* in which I informed you that as soon as the Lieutenant-Governor of Van Diemen's Land should have reported that the local government had a sum of 10,000*l.* to appropriate to the service of emigration, his Lordship would be prepared to recommend to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury that such an amount should be intrusted to you to be devoted to that colony, I am now directed by his Lordship to convey to you, with the concurrence of the Board of Treasury, his authority for taking the necessary measures for such emigration accordingly.

Lord John Russell has further intimated to Sir John Franklin, that Her Majesty's Government propose, should the land revenue admit of it, to devote in future years 30,000*l.* per annum to the purpose of emigration to that colony, under your superintendence.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Franklin to Lord John Russell, dated Government House, Van Diemen's Land, 6 August 1841.

No. 2.
Extract Despatch from Sir John Franklin to Lord John Russell, 6 August 1841.

A NEW department has been formed, for the purposes of carrying out the views of Her Majesty's Government in the very important matter of providing a supply of labour for this colony.

I beg to assure your Lordship that my most anxious endeavours will be employed in giving force to the instructions and suggestions I have had the honour to receive on various occasions from your Lordship.

For the present, the sum of 1,200*l.* has been voted for defraying the expenses of this department, as you will perceive by a reference to the estimates.

I have appointed Lieutenant Davies, R. N., a gentleman of great practical knowledge; who, from having been a settler in the island since the year 1826, has acquired much useful information, which will be of advantage to himself and the colonists generally, in the performance of his duties of immigration agent. I have appointed Mr. Robert Officer to be the health officer, who was for many years in the Colonial Medical Establishment, but resigned last year, and proceeded to settle at Port Phillip, but subsequently returned to this colony.

These officers will, however, at present receive a reduced salary of 300*l.* for the agent, and 150*l.* for the health officer, to be increased as the influx of immigrants shall involve a greater amount of labour and responsibility.

Encl. 1, in No. 2.

THERE are, however, two or three points of general interest to the colony upon which I am desirous of making a few observations; of these, the first in importance are, the measures now in course of being carried into effect to promote immigration. At an early date, this community may reasonably expect to receive a considerable accession to its numbers, consisting chiefly of individuals and families selected in England for the service of the respective settlers, who have availed themselves of the facilities afforded to them by the Government. The colony has happily passed through that period when the public means were not more than adequate to the ordinary expenditure, and when, even had its condition condition in that respect been otherwise, the application of the resources of the territory in aid of immigration would have been attended with the effect of increasing the population, not of Van Diemen's Land, but of the new Australian colonies. But there is at present even a return of the tide, showing that labourers may now be brought in with a reasonable prospect of permanent advantage. I have also to congratulate you upon the fact, that the funds now in the treasury available for this service are sufficiently ample. There will not be any difficulty in providing for the charges occasioned by the arrival of successive vessels with immigrants. To conduct the duties connected with immigration in a satisfactory manner, I contemplate the appointment of an agent, and also of a health officer. VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

There has been experienced of late, as you are all aware, a considerable contraction of the money-market, no doubt referable, in some degree, to the outlay occasioned by importations of meat from the coast of New Holland, but still more to the large absorption of capital resulting from the sales of land at Port Phillip. The diminished demand for our wheat in the new colonies at present may also have had some effect. But that this country has advanced, notwithstanding, is convincingly shown by the amount of the ordinary revenue for the first quarter of the present year, and by the results of our commerce and agriculture, as will be more fully explained to you in my minute on finance.

Assignment, you are aware, having ceased with respect to all convicts who arrived subsequently to June 1840, a course of probation, founded upon the separate system, has been introduced in its stead, by direction of the Right honourable the Secretary of State. Tasman's Peninsula and the unsettled districts will be the seat of this new form of convict discipline in its earliest stages; the men subjected to which will, however, ultimately increase the general supply of labourers in the occupied portions of the colony.

EXTRACT from Financial Minute for 1842.

Council Chamber, 19 June 1841.

ON laying on the table for your consideration an estimate of the expenditure proposed for the service of the year 1842, I have much pleasure in communicating to you that the revenue has improved, and continues to improve, in a most satisfactory manner. Encl. 2, in No. 2.

By referring to the probable amount of revenue estimated for the year 1840, you will find that it was computed at 106,050*l.* from the ordinary, and 14,650*l.* from the extraordinary sources.

The actual amounts were, however, for the former, 120,510*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.*; and for the latter, 59,733*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, making the receipts above the estimate nearly 60,000*l.*

Up to the present period of the current year, the revenue has been as prosperous; and, if it continue at the rate already realized in the first five months, it will amount to upwards of 200,000*l.*

Such an increase could not of course have been obtained, had there not been a proportionate increase in the trade, commerce and agriculture of this colony; which I have the satisfaction of informing you is as follows:—

		Inwards.	Outwards.
Vessels,	1839	452	456
„	1840	492	506
Tonnage,	1839	79,283	77,556
„	1840	85,081	86,701
Imports,	1839		£.746,887
„	1840		988,356
Exports,	1839		£.875,165
„	1840		867,007

The vessels belonging to the ports of Hobart and Launceston were, in 1839, 123; tonnage 10,833: in 1840, 141; tonnage 12,491.

In agriculture, the number of acres in crop were, in 1839, 100,348; in 1840, 124,103.

The number of horses has increased from 1839 to 1840 from 9,868 to 11,850; of horned cattle, from 75,915 to 92,101; of sheep, from 868,590 to 1,089,987.

Under such circumstances, I feel no doubt that the estimate which I now place before you, of the probable amount of revenue of 1842, will be realized, which is taken at 154,205*l.* from ordinary and extraordinary sources.

You will observe, that it is calculated there will be a balance available for the service of the year 1843, of nearly 60,000*l.* But I confidently hope and believe that that sum will be absorbed by immigration.

Nevertheless, I cannot conceal from you that this amount has only been obtained by my having sacrificed many present wants for public works in every district, to the higher and more important object of importing labour.

Indeed, I am sure I may confidently appeal to your own experience in support of my opinion, that the public wants, with respect to buildings and bridges throughout the colony, are not likely to be sufficiently provided for by any surplus revenues which may be available for those purposes, so long as the existing necessity continues for providing adequate funds to carry on immigration.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 8 March 1842.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the enclosed extract of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Van Diemen's Land, in which, in forwarding the estimates of revenue and expenditure for the present year, he adverts to the means available for the purposes of emigration; and with reference to the letters addressed to you on the 24th February 1841 and the 30th August last, Lord Stanley would wish to be informed as far as possible of the number of emigrants who may have gone out to the colony under the system of bounty first projected by the local government, and also of the number whom it may now be practicable or advisable to send with reference to the probable demand for labour, and the means of the colony to defray the cost of conveying the emigrants.

No. 4.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 6 May 1842.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 6 May 1842.

IN obedience to Lord Stanley's directions contained in your letter of the 8th March, we have the honour to submit the following report of the numbers of persons who have gone or are going to Van Diemen's Land, under the system of bounty at first projected by the colonial government, and on the number of emigrants it would appear practicable or desirable to send, with reference to the probable demand for labour, and the means of the colony to defray the cost of their introduction.

The practice of sending out emigrants to Van Diemen's Land on bounty commenced in this country about April 1841, and has therefore been in operation a twelvemonth. The number sent, up to the 30th April 1842, has been 353. Of this number 191 were the labourers, servants or artisans actually named in the bounty orders, and 162 consisted of their wives and families, the total being as above stated, 353. The additional number of labourers for whom certificates have been approved at this office, but who have not yet actually gone, amounts to 120, or, including their families, 209. The amount payable on the arrival of the 353 who are gone will be about 5,420*l.*; and assuming the same rate of cost per head for the 209 whose certificates are passed, and who, therefore, may be considered about to start, the charge for them will be 3,208*l.*, making a total charge of 8,628*l.* for bounty emigrants actually gone, or immediately expected to go.

With regard to the future, it is not possible to state on any certain grounds what numbers may go on bounty. On the arrival of Lord John Russell's despatch, dated the 24th February 1841, it is probable that the issue of bounty orders will cease; but we have not the means of knowing, on the one hand, whether the lists that have yet reached us include all that may have been issued to the end of the system; nor, on the other hand, is it by any means to be assumed that all that are issued will be executed; on the contrary, only a small proportion of the orders have hitherto been acted upon. Private proprietors in the colony, or their agents in this country, have not to any considerable extent been disposed to take the trouble or risks connected with the undertaking; but the use of the orders might nevertheless at any time become more general, without our being able at this moment to foresee it. The period for which they will continue in force does not appear to be limited.

Having thus explained that no positive inference can be drawn from the past, as to the numbers that may be expected to go, we will merely state that the whole number of labourers and servants for whom orders have been notified to this office is 1,403, and that 311 having been already selected, the remaining number number not yet acted upon is 1,092. Supposing that they were accompanied by their wives and children in the same proportion as the number of 311 labourers whose certificates have already passed this office, the gross number of emigrants who might be conveyed to the colony under orders registered here, but not acted upon, would be 1,973; or supposing that, under a suggestion which it will be our duty to bring under Lord Stanley's notice in a separate letter, the equality of the sexes were insisted upon in this as in all other descriptions of emigration to Australia, the entire number of souls in proportion to the labourers taken out would be still larger. But, as we have already said, no conclusion can be drawn from the numbers who may be sent as to the numbers that will actually go; all that can be said is, that if the emigration on bounty should not proceed more rapidly than hitherto, there seems no reason to suppose that the number of persons will in any event exceed about 500 in the course of the present year.

Having submitted these remarks upon the number of emigrants on bounty, we proceed to Lord Stanley's inquiry on the amount of funds available for a further emigration to Van Diemen's Land. From the Lieutenant-Governor's address to the Council, of the 19th June last, it appears that there would be a balance available for the service of the year 1843 of nearly 60,000*l.*, unless it should be absorbed by immigration. In other words, whether in 1842 or 1843, 60,000*l.* would appear to be disposable, if required, for immigration purposes; but we have shown that the cost of the bounty emigrants, for whom certificates have actually been passed, would not exceed 8,628*l.* The further charge that may accrue under this head remains indefinite, for the reasons we have explained; but, without attempting to make any precise calculations in figures, where there are not sufficient data for the purpose, we may perhaps be permitted rather to observe that, looking to the gratifying nature of the general accounts of the prosperity of the colony, and to the large amount of the excess of revenue named by the Lieutenant-Governor, in the address above referred to, we apprehend there could be no risk, in a financial point of view, in sending out as many ships as would perhaps at any rate be deemed prudent, as regards the demand for labour, in the first year of the renewal of emigration to Van Diemen's Land. We should presume that six ships would probably be as many as would be thought right for this purpose: they might be estimated to convey a body of from 1,600 to 1,700 persons, and assuming the bounty emigration at between 300 and 500 persons, would probably create a total of upwards of 2,000 persons of all ages. The number of ships could be increased, if later advices should appear to render it expedient. The total cost of six ships, at the usual average, might be expected not greatly to exceed 20,000*l.* Two vessels have already been despatched by us this year; and we are in treaty for a third, under the general authority we hold to carry on an emigration of this kind to Van Diemen's Land; and should Lord Stanley approve of the views we have just thrown out, we would propose to make arrangements for sending three more ships.

We have, &c.

Sir, Westminster, 6 May 1842.

No. 5.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 6 May 1842.

IN reference to our other letter of this day's date, transmitting, by Lord Stanley's desire, some information on the progress of emigration to Van Diemen's Land on bounty, there is one point in the statistics, connected with that emigration, which we feel it necessary to bring under his Lordship's notice.

The original scheme of this emigration, as it was propounded in the colony, contemplated a mutual engagement between the importing proprietor and the labourer who went out, consisting of an obligation on the part of the former to employ the labourer, and on the part of the latter to render his services to the proprietor for a limited time, to the exclusion of other employers. The use of an indenture, and of a contract between the two parties, being essential to the scheme, the chief object attended to in each bounty order was the description of the particular labourer or servant for whom the colonial proprietor applied, and no notice was taken of the question, whether or not he should be accompanied by a family.

Not finding any direct mention of this subject in any of the official papers which had come home, we communicated with Mr. Dowling, a gentleman who had been appointed by several proprietors agents to execute many of the orders; and we found that he had himself raised the question in the colony, and received from the Colonial Secretary a letter, of which he furnished us with a copy, stating that there would be no objection to pay for the families of the servants named in the various orders for bounty. We did not hesitate, upon this evidence, to pass the certificates of such eligible families as were tendered to us, though the orders had not expressly named more than the labourer who constituted the head of the family. But notwithstanding the extent to which we took it upon ourselves to deviate in this particular from the exact letter of the orders, we find that amongst the persons who have gone out up to the end of last month, the number of adult males was 280, and of adult females, only 106.

Adverting to the formidable evils which have always been ascribed to the disproportion of the sexes in New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, and considering the general desire which has been expressed to avoid increasing that disproportion through any free emigration carried on with the aid of public funds, we feel bound to submit the subject to Lord Stanley, and to apply for authority to make a further modification in the rules under which the bounty emigration to Van Diemen's Land is now in progress. The change which we made, and which we have above explained, that we knew to be no more than in accordance with the meaning of the colonial government, only rendered the carrying out of families permissive, but did not make it imperative. Seeing the extent to which, if the practice continues on that footing, there will be an excess of single men, we would request permission to acquaint all parties who may henceforward be acting in execution of bounty orders from Van Diemen's Land, that they must make selections subject to the same regulations for securing an equality of the sexes which prevail in the selection of emigrants under this Board, and which also form the rule of proceeding in the emigration on bounty to New South Wales.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 18 May 1842.

I HAVE laid before Lord Stanley your letter of the 6th instant, in which you propose to make the following modification in the rules under which the bounty emigration to Van Diemen's Land is now in progress; viz. that parties executing bounty orders from that colony shall make their selections agreeable to the same regulations for securing an equality of the sexes which prevail in the selection of emigrants under your board, and which also form the rule of proceeding in the emigration on bounty to New South Wales.

Despatch from Sir John Franklin to Lord John Russell, 3 December 1841.

(No. 166.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Franklin to Lord John Russell.

Van Diemen's Land, Government House,
3 December 1841.

My Lord,

UPON the receipt of your Lordship's despatch (No. 176) of the 24th February last, which reached me on the 31st August, I lost no time in bringing the important matter which formed the subject of it fully before the Legislative Council, in order to obtain that assistance from the members which their local experience qualified them to render. I informed them that Her Majesty's Government had been pleased to disallow the contract for three years, which formed one element in the bounty system adopted in this colony; and that so soon as existing engagements are satisfied, that system will be wholly discontinued.

For Lord John Russell's Despatch, 24 Feb. 1841, vide Correspondence, Emigration, Australia, ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 26 February 1841, No. 81, page 57.

I directed the immediate formation of a Committee of the whole Council, for the purpose of considering the question, and of collecting evidence upon the following points:—

1. The present rate of wages for different classes of labourers.
2. The classes of immigrants now in demand, or most in demand.
3. The number of immigrants of each class that might now with propriety be sent for, to arrive within the next two years.

I further requested the committee to consider:—

4. The sums of money they would be prepared to vote.
5. The measures which appeared best calculated to secure the introduction of useful immigrants; and
6. The measures best calculated for the effectual protection of the immigrants themselves.

I have now the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, the result of their labours, consisting of a large mass of evidence, derived from wealthy landed proprietors, settlers, merchants, small farmers, emigrants and others; of some concise and perspicuous tables, compiled by Mr. Davies, the immigration agent, and of the report of the committee; from which documents your Lordship will, I think, be of opinion, that the duties intrusted to the committee have been discharged in an able and laborious manner, and that a very clear perception of the wants of the colony, as regards the introduction of free labour, has been elicited.

I would draw your Lordship's attention to one observation contained in this report, in which I fully concur, namely, that the condition of Van Diemen's Land, as regarded in connexion with the immigration question, is wholly different from that of any other of the Australian colonies, and requires arrangements equally distinct. The present state of this colony does not require, nor indeed could it bear, a large and indiscriminate influx of labourers. Our moral are greater than our physical wants, and it can only be by a careful and judicious selection of labour that we can expect to improve the condition of this community.

I do not deny that the present rate of wages is too high to yield remunerating prices to the employer for his produce. It is for this reason that I am anxious, while I would, by a moderate amount of immigration, gradually reduce the high rate of wages, at the same time offer to the intending immigrant a true picture of the improvement in his condition which he may reasonably expect by a removal hither, without giving rise to extravagant hopes, that can never be realized. And I would also carefully guard against the injustice that might be committed towards those labourers who have already, at some sacrifice, repaired to this colony, by a too sudden reduction in the scale of wages.

Your Lordship will find it clearly shown, in the accompanying report, that there is at present a fair opening for a certain number of thorough-bred farming men, of good steady character, and that, while the introduction of such men would materially benefit the colony in general, and the settler in particular, the consequent fall in wages would not be sufficiently marked, either to injure the labourers already established here, or to form any just cause of complaint or disappointment to the future immigrant, although the improved style of farming might more easily remunerate the landholder.

The average rate of such wages appears to be at present, for female servants, from 16*l.* to 25*l.*; common labourers, 20*l.*; first class farm servants, 25*l.* to 30*l.*; overseers, 40*l.* to 80*l.* per annum; all with rations.

It is gratifying to me to perceive, from your Lordship's despatch, already quoted, that no difficulty will arise in fulfilling the existing engagements with various parties. Those engagements include about (1,300) thirteen hundred persons, already sent for with their families, the expense of whose conveyance hither has been estimated at about 36,000*l.* Besides these, it is recommended by the committee of the council, that 500 thorough-bred farming men be sent out, at a probable expense of 14,000*l.*; and from 400 to 500 female domestic servants of good character, at a probable expense of 10,000*l.*

With respect to the measures which appear best calculated to secure the introduction of useful immigrants, your Lordship will perceive, that this committee recommend the bounty system with contracts, which system they think should be carried on gradually for years.

They are however of opinion, that for the present the 500 farming men above mentioned might be safely sent out under the general system. The committee have taken this opportunity of pointing out the means of obviating the slight objections which have been urged against the bounty system with contracts, and the weighty considerations which induce them to prefer that system.

The great difficulty, however, which has been found to arise in immigration, and one which has frustrated in a greater or less degree every attempt to establish a respectable and useful peasantry in these colonies, has been the want of care, not only in the selection of the immigrants themselves, but in the circumstances connected with their accommodation on the passage. I beg therefore to urge upon your Lordship's attention the recommendation of the committee, that immigrants, especially those of the superior class already alluded to, should be permitted to come in the regular traders in small numbers, as free steerage passengers, and never in any vessel freighted exclusively for immigrants.

By adopting this method the immigrants will be most effectually protected, for it will, to a certain extent, ensure their being introduced into the colony gradually, and avoid the inconvenience of suddenly glutting the labour market, an occurrence which is sure to attend, if only temporarily, the arrival of large cargoes of immigrants, and thereby to create discontent and other evils.

In addition to your Lordship's despatch, instructing me to pay to the surgeons of vessels bringing out emigrants on bounty a gratuity of 8*s.* a head, I have received copy of a correspondence between your Lordship's department and the Commissioners of Land and Emigration, by which I perceive it is your Lordship's intention that the pay of the captains and officers of emigrant ships should in all cases be that of the bounty system in New South Wales.

In conclusion, I have to request your Lordship's patient attention to the report of the committee, the principal topics of which I have only glanced at in this despatch, as well as to the large and important body of evidence attached thereto, and to inform your Lordship that the Legislative Council are prepared to vote the sum of 60,000*l.* for the objects which I have now had the honour of detailing to your Lordship.

I have, &c.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

REPORT of the COMMITTEE of the whole COUNCIL upon IMMIGRATION; presented 8th November 1841; with MINUTES of EVIDENCE, &c. &c.

MINUTE of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor to the Legislative Council.

Gentlemen, Council Chamber, 10 September 1841.

Encl. in No. 7.

I HAVE now to address you on a subject which it has repeatedly been my duty on former occasions to bring under your attention,—I allude to the measure of encouraging the immigration of free labourers, by devoting to it a portion of the public funds. There can be no difference of opinion as to the importance of this question. It is one of deep interest to the colonists generally; it is one also of deep interest to those who may be disposed to settle settle here, and whose welfare ought to be anxiously consulted. It is, therefore, with the utmost confidence in your cordial co-operation that I now request you to give me that assistance which your local experience so well qualifies you to render, in arriving at such conclusions as may be of use to guide those intrusted with the executive arrangements in discharging their duties with advantage.

You will perceive, from the despatches and other documents which I have laid upon the table, that Her Majesty's Government has been pleased to disallow the contracts for three years, which formed one element in the bounty system adopted in this colony, and that, so soon as existing engagements are satisfied, that system itself will be wholly discontinued; it being the intention that immigrants shall be sent out under the direction of the Land and Emigration Commissioners, after information shall have been received in England of a certain amount, namely, 10,000*l.*, having been appropriated by you to that service.

I now request that you will, on Monday next, form yourselves into a committee, for the purpose of considering the whole question, and that his Honor the Chief Justice will be so good as to preside.

I would add, that, without prescribing any particular line or manner of investigation, the points upon which I am the most desirous of obtaining information are the following:—

1st. The present rates of wages for different classes of labourers.

2d. The classes of immigrants now in demand, or most in demand.

3d. The number of immigrants of each class that might now with propriety be sent for, to arrive within the next two years.

4th. The sums of money which you will be prepared to vote.

5th. The measures which appear to you best calculated to secure the introduction of useful immigrants.

6th. The measures best calculated for the effectual protection of the immigrants themselves.

Read in the Legislative Council, this 10th day of September 1841.

(signed) W. E. Nairn, Clerk of the Council.

The Committee of the whole Council, which by your Excellency, in a Minute read in this Chamber, on the 10th ultimo, was authorized to examine into and consider the question of Public Immigration, have agreed to the following REPORT.

In discharging the important trust confided to them, the committee have felt it to be due not more to the present community than to intending immigrants, not to confine their inquiries to the means now available within the colony for the advantageous employment of labourers, but to extend them to what are likely to be its resources for the same purpose in future years.

There can be no doubt that the wages of what is sometimes called productive labour are, at present, too high to yield the employer a fair share of profit, the consequences of which have been not merely inconvenience, but even a general restraint upon the energies of the country. The best seasons for ploughing and sowing are sometimes lost. The crop is often not got in in the best style, and the number of acres less than that intended. The wheat land is imperfectly worked. Attempts at the best husbandry are discouraged. The average produce of grain is less than it might be; or, in other words, the cost of production is increased, and the market narrowed by the minimum remunerating price being in consequence too high. Hence the influx of capital is checked, the clearing of new land and fencing prevented, and irrigation delayed. It is not wonderful, therefore, that when the settler looks upon the natural capabilities of his estate, and reflects upon what it might be made, and what it could produce had he only labour and a market at command, the impression has been daily growing upon his mind, that in an extensive immigration is to be found a remedy for almost every inconvenience, and the grand source of the future prosperity of the colony.

The committee of the council fully enter into this feeling; and there is nothing which could give them greater or more sincere pleasure than to see in full operation a system by which the wealth and stability of the colony might be firmly established through the plantation of an industrious and thriving, and therefore well-conditioned peasantry. But their inquiries have convinced them, that to accomplish this object are needed not merely a liberal expenditure, which the present state of the land revenue readily admits of, but what, under existing circumstances, it may be more difficult to command, a prudent forbearance in its application. There are obviously consequences inseparable, in the existing condition of the colony, from an inconsiderate precipitation of immigrants upon its territory, which no friend to its true interests could endure to contemplate. None are more disposed than the committee to value highly the convict discipline of the territory. Nevertheless, after assigning to it its utmost degree of influence, they still deem it a proposition incapable of being refuted (and which, in the present question, can never safely be lost sight of), that the extraordinary security of life and property here enjoyed, against every apparent probability, is, in no trifling trifling degree, attributable to the ease with which industry can secure the necessaries and even the comforts of life. Since deficiency of employment and low wages, wherever they exist, are universally recognized as a pregnant source of crime, it appears to the committee to be any thing but a forced conclusion, that, on the contrary, in a liberal remuneration of labour and plenty of employment, wherever found, may in like manner be recognized a condition most unfavourable to crime; and that, did but pauperism once enter in and find a place in our community, it might soon be followed by the conversion into alarm of our present security, and into anxiety for mere protection of our present aspirations after improvement.

Neither is this the only point of view in which the committee deem themselves bound to regard the probable consequences of a precipitate immigration. There are two classes of persons whose claims to attention in this inquiry are equal. The interests of the employers of labour are obviously not the only interests to be consulted where public funds are about to be appropriated. The working classes themselves must be had in view; both those already settled in the colony, and those whom we may induce to settle. To the former it, at the least, is due that his labour shall not be unfairly depreciated by bringing in upon him too many competitors; and of the latter it may be asserted, that he, as well as his employer, is entitled to expect from immigration an improvement of his circumstances. If his condition be not ameliorated by it, he must have left his native country in vain, and be disappointed in hopes which he was justified in cherishing. Whenever, therefore, immigration is proposed to be conducted with the aid of public funds, it appears to be an inevitable obligation, that the Government shall not lend to it any countenance beyond the point at which it may still be expected to realize the reasonable hopes of those who peril upon it their own prospects, and the bread of their children.

That such suggestions as the committee have thus thrown out are not uncalled for by the present condition of the colony may be easily rendered evident.

The anxiety which exists for additional population has gained strength from the very active measures to promote an almost unlimited influx of labourers which have been taken in New South Wales; where, however, it should be remembered, the effect of what might be regarded in relation to this colony as an excessive immigration, could be corrected by forming new establishments, and taking in new extents of available territory. Besides, the tending of sheep in the Australian colonies requires but little training, and hence the invitations to immigrants from New South Wales, where shepherds are chiefly in demand, may be addressed to almost every class of labourers in the mother country; and accordingly, in their report of the 27th July last, the committee of the legislative council of that colony go to the length of recommending that even persons of sedentary habits, resident in the manufacturing districts, should thenceforth be eligible for the bounty. Such an example could not be safely followed by this colony. In the first place, the committee would observe, that there does not appear to be any great demand for shepherds; and in the second, that the colony already produces sufficient grain for its own consumption, besides a surplus, under ordinary circumstances, adequate to meet the present demand in the Australian markets, where, but for its superior quality, it could scarcely compete with the wheats of America and India, which can be exported at a lower quotation. Hence the committee conclude, that if, whilst the settlers have yet in a measure the advantage of assigned labour, they cannot exclude the American and Indian growers from the Australian markets, neither could they do so, however much the number of free common labourers of the same inferior or mixed descriptions might be increased, without a very great reduction of wages, which, for the reasons already stated, could not but be productive of greater evil than advantage; for the present wages of common labourers are very little if at all higher than is necessary to their comfortable maintenance. It is almost certain, therefore, that the advantage of a constant export of wheat would be purchased, if by the introduction of an inferior class of labourers, at too great a sacrifice; namely, by such a reduction of the rewards of industry as could scarcely fail to be followed by an increase of crime, and a proportionate diminution of that security of person and property, which, after all, is the great incentive to improvement. The committee do not deem it to be necessary again to advert to the injustice which would also be done to the labourers themselves. The measure would, in all probability, be alike destructive to all parties.

But whilst the committee feel it to be a duty to reiterate their conviction, that no considerable immigration of inferior labourers could be conducted with advantage, it appears to the members to be equally certain, that there is a class of labourers whose gradual introduction to a large extent would be productive of the very best results: they allude to thorough-bred farming men from the best cultivated counties, where the new husbandry is followed; men, too, who, from their previous character, may be depended upon, not only to do their own work, but to set a good example. With the assistance of such immigrants, that improved, and therefore more economical, system of cultivation, for the means of introducing which so many settlers are naturally anxious, might be carried on with spirit, and the average productiveness of the lands under tillage be progressively enhanced. The increased return would be the best reduction of wages, and the wheat would remunerate the grower, though sold at prices which would open the Australian markets at all seasons, and exclude the more distant wheat-growers of India and America; whilst, under an extended system of turnip-husbandry, the colony would, at the same time, be enabled to supply itself with well-fed meat in the winter season.

A market for our own grain being thus secured, not precarious as at present, but constant in its demand, the clearing and fencing and draining and irrigation of available lands would be encouraged; and hence it is that the committee conclude that immigrants of the highly useful class which they have described would, so far from injuriously competing with the mixed labourers now in the colony, actually promote their employment, a consideration which derives much additional importance from the circumstance, that large numbers of men from the probation gangs may, within two or three years, be expected to be applicants for employment as ticket-of-leave labourers.

Having made these prelimjnary observations, the committee would now proceed to a more particular consideration of the points to which their attention has been more especially directed by your Excellency.

The first of these involves the question—What are the present rates of wages for different classes of labourers? They appear from the evideuce taken by the committee to be as follows:—

Common labourers - - - - -	20 l. per annum,	with rations.
First class farm servants - - - -	25 l. to 30 l. ditto,
Overseers - - - - - - -	40 l. to 80 l. ditto,
Female servants - - - - - -	16 l. to 25 l. ditto,

The second question is—What are the classes of immigrants now in demand, or most in demand? These appear to the committee to be thorough-bred farm servants and domestics; especially well-conducted females. [For further information, vide the accompanying Return, compiled from the applications already sent to England under the bounty system, marked (B.)]

The third question relates to the number of immigrants of each class that might now with propriety be sent for, to arrive within the next two years.

The committee think that the number already applied for under the bounty should be secured, with an addition of 500 thorough-bred farm servants. The importation of additional female domestics is a subject of so great moment, that the committee are desirous of referring to it especially, in a subsequent part of their report.

The next question relates to the sums of money which the council will be prepared to vote in aid of immigration.

The committee estimate the probable expense of the 1,300 persons already sent for, with their families, at about 36,000 l.; whilst 14,000 l. would probably defray the expense of the 500 thorough-bred farming men. The committee would therefore be prepared to vote 50,000 l. in furtherance of this service.

The fifth question requires the committee to indicate the measures which appear to them best calculated to secure the introduction of useful immigrants.

The committee have no hesitation in recommending the bounty system with contracts as the best calculated to ensure a well-conducted and profitable immigration; which they think should be a measure gradual in its operation, and continued for years in a greater or less stream, according to the demand for labour. But, in the outset, they conceive that the 500 thorough-bred farming men might be safely sent out under the general system, together with labourers of different classes equal in number to those who may have been omitted to be engaged by the private agents employed by the settlers here, so as to ensure within about 18 months the appropriation of the whole 50,000 l. without further instructions from this country. The Commissioners of Land and Immigration have had forwarded to them the addresses of these agents, and would therefore be able easily to ascertain the number of instances in which the instructions forwarded to them may not have been fulfilled, and so to take measures for supplying the deficiency. But, before any communication be made to Her Majesty's Government on the subject, the committee think that it is worthy of consideration, whether the result of the notice published in the last Gazette should not be ascertained, as affording a further criterion by which the actual wants of the community may be estimated.

The committee would avail themselves of this opportunity of observing, that the objections which have been urged by the Commissioners of Land and Immigration to the bounty system with contracts, appear to be applicable rather to the abuse of the measure than to the measure itself. The mutual dissatisfaction of the parties, upon which the Commissioners have so strongly insisted, will probably be found, in the majority of cases, to have arisen from the master having in the first instance obtained terms too favourable to himself; but that the settlers of this colony are not generally disposed to fall into so erroneous a proceeding may be ascertained by a reference to the accompanying Return (D.), prepared by the immigration agent, showing the rates of wages at which the immigrants who have already arrived were engaged. Besides, it might be stipulated, as a means of providing against unequal contracts, that the immigration agent in this colony should have authority in such cases to raise the rate of wages where too low; and, on the application of the servant, to release him from the agreement, should the master refuse to pay the new rate, in order that equity might be done between the parties.

The considerations which induce the committee to prefer the bounty system may be stated as follows:—

1st. Because the laws of supply and demand apply to the labour market as much as they do to markets for produce. Interference of any kind is, therefore, an evil in itself, and only proper to be had recourse to because of the extreme distance between Great Britain and this colony, and the expense of the voyage. These are alike the grounds upon which in the present case the interposition of Government can be justified, and the measure of the extent to which it can be properly carried, and which is not exceeded so long as it does not itself undertake the importation of labourers, but simply assists those employed by bearing the whole or a part of the expense; using only such precautionary measures as may be necessary to guard against abuse, of which measures the most effective appears to be that of fixing a certain responsibility upon the employer; and it does not appear to the committee that this can be done better than by binding him to the maintenance of the immigrant, and the payment of his wages for a given period. But for the adoption of such a check, nothing could be easier than for some interested party in Great Britain to induce persons here to make large demands for aid in bringing out labourers not required by themselves, for the sole purpose of enabling him to realize a profit upon the shipment of persons whose voyage might very probably terminate in bitter disappointment. But, beyond the granting of aid, the preventing its being unnecessarily applied for, and the affording of its protection to immigrants when necessary, the committee do not consider interference generally expedient. The Government, it appears to the members, may safely assist, but never permanently conduct, immigration.

2d. When the greater number of immigrants brought out are engaged on the responsibility of masters who have become bound to maintain them for three years, the supply and demand may reasonably be expected to regulate each other, in a manner to be depended upon by the Government, which would thus be relieved from the necessity of keeping up that constant surveillance requisite to enable it in any degree to protect the various parties interested in the measure. The only point left for its decision would then be, the maximum amount which could be afforded annually in aid of immigration.

3d. It will appear from the evidence, that the certainty of employment caused by the indentures has already operated in some most desirable instances as an inducement to immigration.

4th. The applicant under the bounty system may frequently send to his own native place for persons whom he may have personally known; and thus may have been laid the basis of a good understanding between the parties before they actually meet in the relation of master and servant.

The sixth question is, what are the measures best calculated for the effectual protection of the immigrants themselves.

1st. The committee think it a matter of great importance that the Commissioners of Immigration in England should have authority to institute the most searching examination into all the circumstances connected with the accommodation and food provided for immigrants on board of the vessels which are to conduct them hither.

2d. The committee, having regard to the circumstance that none but labourers of a superior class, both as to character and as to skill in farming work, can with any hope of advantage be now received into the colony, cannot too strongly recommend that they should be permitted to come in the regular traders in any number not exceeding 50, and never in any vessel freighted exclusively for carrying immigrants. The committee think, that the object should be to put them as much as possible on the footing of private individuals, in the rank of steerage passengers, and, therefore, free agents, defraying the expense of their own passages, and having the accommodation of private berths. The committee cannot escape from the conviction that, when 200 or 300 persons of different sexes and ages are crowded, even under the best arrangement, into one vessel, there must be circumstances of frequent occurrence calculated to impair those feelings of propriety which ought, on the contrary, to be by every means most sedulously protected.

3d. The great point of protection to be attended to, in the opinion of the committee, is, that the immigrants should be introduced into the colony gradually, and as they are wanted; which would, to a certain extent, be ensured by employing for their transport only the regular traders, in the manner already recommended, and still more by adhering to the regulation for contracts. It is altogether in vain to send to England true accounts of the rates of wages, if no effectual means are taken to regulate the number of immigrants. If the market be permitted to be glutted, as real and injurious a delusion will have been been practised as if the true rates had been for some wicked purpose doubled before being published. Neither is this all; there are even now most deserving families of immigrant labourers and mechanics in this colony who would be grievously wronged were persons of the same trade brought out either too rapidly or in too great numbers. It seems to the committee to be essential to the protection of the labouring classes that the rate of immigration should never be encouraged by the aid of public funds to exceed the rate of absorption. The first party should be received into the community, and incorporated with it, before another be allowed to present itself.

4th. It may not be quite in place under this head, and yet it is an observation which the committee would not willingly omit, that it appears from the evidence taken, that under existing circumstances, the expectation of immediate and adequate provision cannot be held out to families in which are three or four children under nine years of age, or where the mother is, from any other cause, prevented from contributing towards the general support.

Before

Before closing their report, the committee would now draw your Excellency's attention to the condition of the colony with respect to domestic servants. The committee have preferred not noticing until now the inconveniences to which the colonists are subjected from the want of a sufficient number of well-conducted persons of this class.

There can be no doubt that from 400 to 500 females of good moral character would find advantageous employment; whilst their presence would contribute, in no inconsiderable degree, not merely to the comfort, but also to the well-being of the community. The committee of the council would gladly vote, in addition to the 50,000 l. already proposed to be estimated for, the sum of 10,000 l. for this service.

The committee are aware that a strong impression exists in England against the measure which they now warmly advocate. Nevertheless, they are satisfied that the results several years since of the same description of immigration, notwithstanding the manner in which it was then conducted, were such as to show, after striking the balance of good and evil, a great preponderance of the former.

The committee have felt it to be necessary to prolong their observations upon this important subject, because the condition of Van Diemen's Land appears to them, as regarded in connexion with the immigration question, to be wholly different from that of any other of the Australian colonies, and to require arrangements equally distinct. It has, therefore, been felt by them to be a duty to prevent, by every explanation in their power, the possible occurrence of their being confounded together under one general system of immigration.

The committee, in conclusion, would draw attention to the very important information contained in the evidence, of which, however, they have not attempted to give any summary or view, thinking it better that every one interested in the question of immigration should be induced to examine it for himself.

(A.)

VIEW of IMMIGRATION, as elicited by the Evidence taken before the Committee of the Legislative Council, showing the current Rates of Wages, and the probable Demand for Labour.

Description of Servants or Mechanics.	Average Rate of Wages.	Probable Demand for Labour, &c.
Machine-makers and Engineers	2 l. 11 s. 6 d. per week, without rations	- - can be boarded in the town for 15 s. a week. A few good blacksmiths, qualified to forge machinery, much wanted.
Millwrights and Engineers -	3 l. per week, without rations - -	- - fourteen or fifteen good hands much wanted. The great drawback in the trade, employing inferior workmen at the highest wages.
First Class Farm Servants -	25 l. to 30 l. per annum, with rations	- - will always be in great demand, but it is difficult to point to any given number.
Good Free Overseers - -	40 l. to 80 l. per annum, with rations	- - they are much wanted in every branch of industry; probably 40 l. to 50 l. per annum would readily be engaged.
Second Class Farm Servants -	20 l. per annum, with rations - -	- - such as mowers, reapers, thrashers, thatchers, in considerable numbers.
Shepherds - - - -	25 l. to 30 l. per annum, with rations.
Coach-builders - - -	- - 2 l. 16 s. to 3 l. per week, without rations.	- - twenty to thirty could get employment, but at lower wages than at present.
Millers - - - -	50 l. per annum, with rations - -	twenty to thirty more wanted.
Sawyers - - - -	they earn about 2 l. 10 s. per week -	- - they are paid by the piece, and have no rations. No immediate demand for more hands.
Grooms - - - -	20 l. per annum, with rations - -	demand uncertain beyond a limited number.
Carpenters - - - -	- - 6 s. 6 d. to 8 s. 6 d. per day, without rations.	not in great demand at present.
Masons - - - -	- - 7 s. 6 d. to 8 s. 4 d. per day, without rations.	- - ditto.
Gardeners - - - -	30 l. to 40 l. per annum, with rations	- - always in request. A considerable number would find employment at those wages.
Common Labourers - -	8 s. per week, with rations - -	- - in the towns, they have 4 s. to 5 s. a day, without rations. There is no immediate demand.
Shipwrights - - - -	9 s. per day, without rations - -	- - there is a great stagnation in the trade, owing to the increase of the home trade with Port Philip, and other causes.
Tailors - - - -	- - 2 l. to 2 l. 10 s. per week, without rations.	- - they are paid by the piece. Wages not so much too high as that the masters are obliged to take inferior work. Good hands wanted.
Shoemakers - - - -	paid by the piece - - - -	- - they earn 7 s. a pair for bottoms, and 6 s. for closing; ladies' shoemakers and binders much wanted. Good workmen in great demand.
Bakers - - - -	first hands, 25 s. per week second - 18 s. „ third - 15 s. „ fourth - 10 s. „ } with rations	- - good first hands much wanted, at least forty of these, and eighty second hands.
Cabinet-makers - - -	- - 7 s. to 9 s. 6 d. per day, without rations.	- - twenty additional hands would find constant employment, and wages would not fall much in consequence.
Upholsterers - - -	- ditto - - - - - -	a very few fresh hands required.
Male Domestic Servants - -	20 l. to 40 l. per annum, with rations	- - free men generally preferred; always in demand, and in considerable numbers.
Female ditto - - -	16 l. to 25 l. per annum, with rations	- - these constitute the great desideratum of the colony. Mrs. Rex has numerous applications, and only three or four recommendable.
Good Reapers - - -	earn 14 s. to 18 s. per acre - -	in great demand all over the colony in harvest-time.
Good Shearers - - -	earn 11 s. per hundred - - -	- ditto - - ditto - - sheep-shearing.
Blacksmiths - - -	8 s. per day, without rations - -	- - many may come out without materially affecting the rate of wages.

It has appeared to the Immigration Agent that he could give no better data on which to ground an opinion as to the proportions in which Servants of the several classes in society may be expected to be required by the Inhabitants, than by showing in One Table the actual Applications since the 14th May 1840, to the present day; which he has therefore done in the above Return. The whole number of Male and Female Adults are included. With respect to the probable demand for labour in its several branches for the future, and the proportions in which it would now be advisable to continue Immigration, the Agent believes that Male and Female Domestic Servants, Shepherds, First Class Farm Servants, and the more useful Handicraftsmen, may be sent for in the proportions given above, without apprehending any slackness in the demand for several years.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1841.

Arthur Davies, Esq., called in; and Examined.

Arthur Davies, Esq.

13 September 1841.

1. You are the immigration agent for this colony?—I am.

2. How long have you held that appointment?—Since the 23d of June last.

3. Have any immigrants arrived here under the bounty system?—Two ships at Launceston and three at Hobart have arrived, bringing immigrants under the bounty.

4. Had you an opportunity of seeing the immigrants immediately on their arrival?—I saw the whole of those that arrived by the "Countess of Minto," and inspected them on board.

5. In what condition were they as respects health and comfort?—In perfect health, and in a state of great cleanliness and comfort.

6. By what other ships did the immigrants arrive?—By the "Winwick" and the "George," at Hobart Town, and the "Arabian" and "Andromeda," at Launceston.

7. The "Winwick" arrived before your appointment?—She did.

8. How soon after their arrival did you inspect the immigrants by the "Winwick?"—I inspected them ten days after, at the house of their master, Mr. Fraser.

9. Have you seen the immigrants by the "George"?—Only one family; the vessel arrived during my absence at Launceston, and the immigrants proceeded at once to the service of their respective masters. A notification has now been issued by the Government, representing the necessity of the immigrants remaining on board until they have been inspected by me, and the information obtained required under the regulations.

10. Were the immigrants that arrived at Launceston inspected immediately?—The ships were, by the sub agent in one case, and by myself in the other. The immigrants left before inspection, but the sub-agent has since inspected them.

11. In what state were the immigrants, and were they satisfied with their provisions, accommodation, and the general treatment they had received on board?—They were all in excellent health, and the provisions furnished them were of the best description; and they were perfectly satisfied with their accommodation and treatment, except in the case of sixteen servants, who came out to Mr. Ritchie, respecting whose complaints Mr. Ritchie has promised to address a communication to me.

12. Do you know whether any, and if any, how many deaths occurred among the immigrants?—One death only, being the case of an infant who was born on board.

13. Did the immigrants appear to be satisfied with their condition and prospects on their arrival?—Remarkably so.

14. Can you state the rate of wages at which the immigrants have been engaged?—Mechanics obtain from 2 l. to 3 l. a week, without rations, but in some instances with lodging; one wheelwright, at Launceston, receives 200 l. per annum; farm labourers have obtained from 25 l. to 30 l. per annum, with rations.

15. How many immigrants, if any, have been thrown upon their own resources since their arrival?—Not one; in one or two instances the indentures were cancelled by mutual consent, but the parties obtained other engagements immediately.

16. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Arthur Davies, Esq.

13 September 1841.

16. Do you know any instance in which peculiar advantages were derived to the master from obtaining the description of man sent for?—There are two or three instances at Launceston which appear to apply to this question decidedly. One is the case of a coach wheelwright, indented to Mr. Palmer, at Launceston, who receives 200*l.* a year, and whose services are considered by his master to be invaluable. Another instance is that of a blacksmith. to whom another party offered 10*s.* a day, in the hope of enticing him away from the service of his master. Another is the case of one of the men indented to Mr. Ritchie, at Perth; the machinery of his mill required five horses to work it; on the morning after his arrival the man told Mr. Ritchie that he could save him the labour of one horse by altering the machinery, which he did in the course of the day; he then said if he would give him two days more, he thought he could save him the labour of another horse, which he has done, and the mill is now worked by three instead of five horses. The foreman of Mr. Fraser, the coachmaker in this town, is also considered by his master to be invaluable, being able to turn out a carriage in a style equal to that of the best workmen in London; he receives 3*l.* a week.

17. What accommodations have you observed to have been made by masters for immigrants imported under the bounty?—The immigrants arriving by the "Winwick" have provided themselves with very comfortable brick tenements, which the rate of wages they receive has enabled them to do. Mr. Stevenson, of Curramore, has erected a two-story brick house, and given each of the men 30*l.* a year, with a very liberal ration, and a servant to wait upon them. Mr. Ritchie, the day after the arrival of his men, ordered brick houses to be built for the whole of them.

18. Have the masters been generally satisfied with the servants they have received?—In every instance they have been, except in the case of two female servants, where the master was not satisfied.

19. Do you consider the expense you have observed has been entered into by masters for their indented servants would have been made, had no specific engagement been entered into as to the time of engagement?—I do not.

20. Then you consider the engagement for a specific time to be advantageous?—Decidedly in favour of the immigrant.

21. Why in favour of the immigrant?—Because parties in the colony applying for chosen servants in the mother-country will always offer the maximum rate of wages current in the colony at the time of their applying.

22. Have you observed a great anxiety on the part of the settlers to obtain servants under the regulations now in force, as regards immigration?—Not since my appointment.

23. Do you consider that rescinding the 8th regulation, as to the term of engagement, will materially affect the immigration of labourers?—I think that it will have a decided effect in preventing this colony from obtaining the kind of labour we want.

24. What sums, if any, have been paid by the masters for the passage of their servants, over and above the sums given by the Government under the bounty?—In every instance that has hitherto come to my knowledge something has been paid beyond the bounty allowance; but there is a great disparity on the sums so paid. For each of the immigrants by the "Arabian," 10*l.* extra was charged by the charterer of the vessel.

25. If the immigrants are brought out by the regular traders, will the sum granted by the Government in any case, in your opinion, defray the cost of their passage?—With proper management on the part of the agents in England, I should say yes.

26. From your personal knowledge of the regular traders, are you of opinion that the persons brought out would be properly taken care of?—I have every reason to believe so.

27. So far as their morals are concerned, do you think it better that immigrants should come out in small parties by the traders, or in ship-loads?—As a general rule, I should say the smaller the number the better.

28. Does the bounty system exercise any, and if any, what control over the parties concerned in bringing immigrants to this colony?—The control it exercises extends over the agent for the ship in the colony, to the master and all the officers of the ship; and, generally, it protects the immigrant in every stage of his progress till he reaches his destination. The mode in which it protects the immigrant is, that in case of improper treatment by the officers of the ship, I should recommend the Government to stop the allowance. The way in which it controls the proceedings of the ship agents is, that under it time is afforded for full inquiries after arrival in the colony as to the charges for the voyage. I can illustrate that by the case of Mr. Ritchie, who declines paying the charges to his agent, on the ground that they are excessive.

29. Are you aware whether there are any considerable number of labourers, free or ticket-of-leave, who at present cannot obtain employment?—I have not heard of any instance.

30. Are you aware whether there is any want of labourers?—At least 2,000 would, in my opinion, find employment—such as shepherds, ploughmen, overseers, inferior mechanics, and domestic servants.

31. Do you consider that the Home System of Immigration would supply the wants of the settlers for the particular labour they require?—What we want more particularly are chosen servants, who can only be obtained under the bounty system.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1841.

Mr. Alexander Fraser called in; and Examined.

Mr. A. Fraser.

14 September 1841.

32. You are a coachmaker, in considerable business in this town?—I am.

33. You applied recently for immigrants under the bounty system?—I did; they have now arrived.

34. Of what trade are they?—The coachmaking.

35. You employed an agent at home to select them?—I did.

36. What rate of wages do they receive?—The smith receives 3*l.* a week; the other three 2*l.* 10*s.* a week. One is a body-maker, another a painter, and the third a trimmer.

37. Do they answer your expectations?—They do.

38. What was the rate of wages for workmen of the description you have mentioned at the time you sent home?—I had none of the same kind of workmen. I had a smith who received 3*l.* a week, but

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. A. Fraser.

14 September 1841.

but he left me and went to New South Wales. I had a painter, who was a ticket-of-leave man, to whom I gave 2 l. a week; he had partly learned his trade with me.

39. What is the rate of wages for such workmen in England?—The painter, 32 s. to 36 s. a week; the body-maker, 36 s. to 2 l. 5 s. a week; the smith, from 2 l. 10 s. to 2 l. 15 s.; and I would add, that in England they have to work 12 hours, whereas here they only work 10 hours a day.

40. Do you know whether such workmen are still in demand?—I should say a few more might find employment.

41. How many do you think could find employment?—I could employ two more myself; I do not think many are wanted.

42. Do you know of any other coachmaker requiring workmen of the same kind?—I know there is one at Launceston who requires some workmen, but I believe he has sent home for them. I should say half a dozen might find employment.

43. Are there any other descriptions of mechanics employed in your trade besides those you have mentioned?—Yes; there are vice-men, carriage-makers, and wheelwrights.

44. What do you suppose men of the class now referred to would require to maintain them?—I cannot exactly say.

45. Is living here more expensive than at home?—I should say not, now.

46. Does not the price of bread and meat vary very much?—It does: it is now only half what it was some time back.

47. What kind of accommodation have the immigrants who recently came to you obtained?—They have cottages, with gardens attached, at the rate of 8 s. a week, for which they could hardly get two rooms in London.

48. Did you provide the cottages for them?—No; on their arrival I went through the town with them, and assisted them in obtaining them. One workman has a cottage, which he has taken at 8 s. a week for five years, containing six rooms, with a garden; two more of the men have a cottage, for which they pay 40 l. per annum, which is at the rate of 8 s. a week each; one of them has a sister, who is under an engagement to me as a needlewoman.

49. Do they appear to be satisfied with the terms made with them at home?—Perfectly so.

50. Are they steady in their habits?—I have every reason to consider them so: they have now been 11 weeks in my employ, and they have not lost four hours amongst them.

51. Did they make any complaints respecting their treatment on board?—They did.

52. What did they complain of?—That they did not receive all that they were promised, in respect to their food.

53. Did you know any of them before they came out?—I did not.

54. Who acted as your agent at home?—A coachmaker in London of many years' standing.

55. Do you know the particulars of the agreement made by your agent respecting the provisions that were to be supplied to them?—Not exactly. I believe they were furnished with a scale of provisions; but they were promised extra fresh provisions, in consideration of my having paid 55 l. for the passage of the whole of them, beyond the allowance granted by the Government.

56. Do you think workmen of the description you have received could have been obtained by a person not practically acquainted with coachmaking?—I think they might.

57. Would you have sent for men of the description you have received, if you could not have exercised any control in the selection by the employment of your own agent?—I might have sent for them, but I should have been very doubtful what sort of men I should have obtained; I should have no confidence in the selection.

58. Do you happen to know the average rate of wages now being paid to other classes of mechanics?—I believe that cabinet-makers, stone-masons, bricklayers and carpenters are receiving from 8 s. to 10 s. a day.

59. Have mechanics of these classes constant employment?—I should say till lately in the building line; a great number of stone-masons have gone to Port Phillip.

60. Have the workmen you have received any objection to their being under an engagement for a specific time?—None whatever. I have their agreements with me; they endorsed them after they arrived here without any hesitation, at my request; a request which I made, as I had some doubt whether they would be legally binding without that addition.

61. Do you think that workmen would object generally to bind themselves for a fixed period?—I do not know whether they would object on their arrival here; I should say they would not object at home; two of the men I now have were out of employment for some months prior to their coming out.

62. From your knowledge of the trade, what would be the effect upon wages of the arrival of 20 or 25 workmen?—I think the men would find employment, but not at the rate of wages I give under my agreement. I should say they would get about 2 l. 10 s. per week.

63. Are there any coach-making establishments in the interior?—None that I am aware of.

64. Do you know whether saddlers and harness-makers are required here?—I should think they are.

Mr. John Addison called in; and Examined.

Mr. John Addison.

65. You are a master builder in this town?—I am.

66. Have you received any immigrants under the bounty system?—I have not.

67. How many masons do you generally employ?—From six to twelve, generally.

68. At what rate of wages?—From 7 s. to 8 s. a day.

69. Is that the usual rate?—It is.

70. For how long a period has that been the average rate?—Since I have been in the colony; about 17 years.

71. What was the price of provisions when you came?—It was much the same as now; butcher's meat was a little cheaper.

72. Have the wages varied with the price of provisions?—Very little, if at all.

73. Have many masons gone to Port Phillip?—Several.

74. What has been the cause of their going?—The high wages offered; some have, however, now returned; the wages are considerably lower than they were.

75. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. John Addison.

14 September 1841.

75. Do you find any difficulty in obtaining masons?—None whatever; on the contrary, there is scarcely a day on which I have not received applications from men for employment.

76. There is no demand then, in your opinion, beyond the supply?—Certainly not; there are now very few buildings being carried on.

77. Have you found any difficulty in obtaining carpenters and other mechanics employed in house building?—None whatever.

78. What is the average rate of wages for workmen of the last-mentioned description?—The highest, 8*s.* 6*d.* a day; the lowest, 2*l.* a week.

79. What rate of wages would such men obtain in England?—I should say, the man who gets here 8*s.* 6*d.* a day would get 3*s.* 6*d.* at home.

80. What would it cost you to maintain a man of this class?—About 25*s.* a week.

81. Can the workmen, in your opinion, maintain themselves in comfort upon the wages they receive?—Perfectly so.

82. Do you know any instance of their saving any money?—A great number; several of the men I have employed have built small houses, and live rent free.

83. Are the mechanics in your employ generally steady?—They are; we do not retain them if they are not.

84. You employ labourers?—I do.

85. What wages do you give them?—About 4*s.* a day.

86. Are they numerous?—They are; we receive applications from men for employment every day.

87. Are there steady men of this class out of employment now?—I think there are at present a good many serviceable men out of employ.

88. You confine your observations to the town?—I do.

89. Do labourers prefer the town?—They do.

90. Are the men in your employ free men?—They are men who have become free, or ticket-of-leave men.

91. Would you prefer men who came out free?—I prefer ticket-of-leave men; they are generally well conducted.

92. Do the labourers save any thing out of their wages?—No, they cannot, if they have families.

93. Have any number of mechanics emigrated to this colony?—I have not heard of any having emigrated lately.

94. If a considerable number of mechanics were introduced into the colony, would it not affect the rate of wages materially?—It would most probably decrease the rate of wages; but I do not think they could find employment.

95. Can the labourers receiving 4*s.* 4*d.* a day live comfortably?—I should scarcely say comfortably if they have families.

96. What is the general rent of a cottage suitable for a labourer, with three rooms?—From 5*s.* to 8*s.* a week.

97. Do you know whether house-carpenters are needed in the interior?—I do not know; I do not think they are.

98. Were they more in demand last year?—They were; there is not a single house now being built above the centre of the town; the town is, in fact, overbuilt.

Mr. John E. Addison called in; and Examined.

Mr. J. E. Addison.

99. You are a master builder?—I am.

100. How many masons have you in your employ?—At present very few; not more than six.

101. Had you any more last year?—Yes, four times that number.

102. There were more buildings in progress then than now?—We had more; I believe there were more generally.

103. Do you think it probable, then, that more buildings will shortly be undertaken?—I do not at present see any prospect of an increase in our trade.

104. You consider the present time to be one of depression?—I do.

105. Have you always been able to obtain a sufficient number of mechanics?—We have, though not perhaps of the best description.

106. What wages do you give the mechanics whom you employ?—The general rate is from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 8*s.* 4*d.*; we pay some good hands 9*s.*; when there were a number of men employed, the wages were somewhat less.

107. How do you account for the rate of wages being higher when the demand for workmen has decreased?—Many mechanics have left the colony for Port Phillip.

108. Do you know whether any have recently returned?—I believe some have.

109. Do you know the cause of their having returned?—I believe it to be that they like this country better, and because they have found that, although they were promised higher wages, they had great difficulty in getting paid.

110. Do you anticipate any reduction in the rate of wages?—I do not, unless there should be an increase in the supply of labour.

111. Has there been any considerable fluctuation in the rate of wages during the last seven years?—Not much.

112. Suppose two or three contracts were offered for public buildings, would you be deterred from tendering by a fear that you could not obtain the requisite number of mechanics?—I should not, unless they were very heavy indeed.

113. Would you, for instance, be prevented from undertaking a new court-house and gaol?—No, if the time given were not very short; such a work as that mentioned would take from two to three years, according to the usual time allowed.

114. Would you look to emigration for that additional labour which you would require if you undertook such a work?—I might, perhaps, look for some to that source; but I think I could obtain a sufficient number from the other colonies.

115. Suppose you had no expectation whatever of receiving any supply of labour by emigration, would you undertake such a work?—I should have no fear of getting 30 or 40 masons, and as many carpenters; it might be necessary to advance the wages 6*d.* a day.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. J. E. Addison.

14 September 1841.

116. Would other master masons be able to carry on their works at the same time?—Yes; I should say I could obtain the number I have mentioned, and the general run of work continue the same.

117. Can mechanics be now easily obtained?—They can; we have had applications from 10 or 11 recently for employment.

118. Would 50 or 60 emigrant mechanics, good workmen, find permanent employment, in your opinion?—I should hardly think they would.

119. Do any of the mechanics save any money?—They do; most of our workmen have done so.

120. How do they invest it?—In houses and other property.

121. Do the mechanics who have come under your observation take much care of their children?—Those who have come out free take great care of their children, keeping them decent in appearance, and sending them to school; of the ticket-of-leave, and others who have become free, I cannot speak so favourably.

122. Would not any reduction of wages have the effect of causing them to take their children away from school, and lessen that decent pride which the mechanics you have spoken of appear to have?—It would.

123. Do you think there is any demand for common labourers?—We can get as many as we want; I have had ten labourers applying to me in the course of one morning for employment.

124. Do you think there is any distress at present existing among that class of men?—I should think there is.

125. Can a labourer save any thing out of the wages he receives?—Not if he has a wife and family; hardly any of them can go on without an advance of wages before the end of the week.

126. Do you know any thing respecting the demand for labourers in the interior?—I do not.

Mrs. Rer called in; and Examined.

Mrs. Rex.

127. You keep a register office for servants?—I do.

128. In what part of Hobart Town?—In Liverpool-street.

129. Have you many applications?—A good many; it is a year and ten months since I opened my office, and I have had in that time 1,040 applications for servants, male and female; some applications being for three and four servants, principally females.

130. Have you been able to get the servants you wanted?—Not by any means.

131. Do you remember what class of servants you have most readily obtained?—I think nursery-maids; they are younger.

132. For what description of servants is there the greatest demand?—For housemaids, laundresses, female cooks, and maids of all work.

133. You mentioned just now that you had had 1,040 applications; can you state the number of each description of servants applied for?—I cannot.

134. The total number of servants for whom you received applications would amount probably to 2,000?—About that number.

135. How many have you supplied?—About 300.

136. As regards men servants, how do you find the supply?—There are plenty of male cooks and coachmen.

137. What is the usual rate of wages for men servants?—For a coachman 10*s.* a week, a waiter about the same, and the same for a cook; a good cook would probably obtain more.

138. Are the men servants of whom you have spoken as abundant as free or ticket-of-leave?—Both; many free men have come from Port Phillip.

139. Do you think you could find employment for 2,000 female servants?—Certainly not at once.

140. For how many could you?—I could find places for 40 directly; I should think there are 70 or 80 families who are now requiring female servants.

141. At what rate of wages?—The wages are now much reduced; about 12*l.* to 15*l.* is the usual rate; a twelvemonth ago it was 20*l.*

142. Which are most in demand?—Laundresses and housemaids.

143. Is there any difference in the rate of wages given to these two descriptions?—The laundress gets the most generally; I have one application for a laundress, from a lady who offers 25*l.* a year.

144. Is that the general rate for laundresses?—No, unusually high.

145. Do you find that the female servants are good servants generally?—No; there is a great scarcity of good female servants.

146. Do you know whether the female servants are generally comfortable in their places?—I think not, in many cases.

147. What is the cause?—Their being associated with the assigned servants; where the servants are all free they are generally comfortable.

148. Are they badly lodged?—No.

149. Is the present rate of wages sufficient, in your opinion?—Quite sufficient.

150. Do you happen to know what is the rate of wages for the same class of persons in England?—About 10*l.* to 14*l.* for housemaids, and 16*l.* for good cooks.

151. Have you heard women who have been employed as cooks in the interior complain that they cannot stand the enormous wood fires?—I have; males are better as cooks for that reason.

152. In large establishments in the interior, do you know whether the cook has the assistance of a kitchenmaid?—Yes, I believe so; of some one in that capacity.

153. Is there any demand for nursery governesses?—I had about two months ago a great many applications.

154. What is the rate of wages given to this class of persons?—About 25*l.* per annum.

155. Do you ever receive applications for milliners and dress-makers?—Very few; not more than three.

156. For how many female servants could you now obtain places in a month?—For 100, I should think.

157. How does it happen that the demand for female servants is not so great as it was?—There are a greater number of female servants assigned.

158. Have you many servants applying for places at the present time?—Not more than three or four that I could recommend.

159. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mrs. Rex.

14 September 1841.

159. Do you find that the female servants marry to any great extent?—Very frequently, if they are well conducted.

160. Are people generally particular as to the character of the servants they take?—The limited number of servants prevents their being as particular as they otherwise would be.

161. What term of service do you consider as giving a character?—A three months' character is rather a long character; few servants have a twelve months' character.

162. Does that remark apply to free and ticket-of-leave women?—To both.

163. Do you find generally that the servants leave the mistress, or that the mistress dismisses the servant?—The servant leaves the mistress, and frequently without any warning.

164. To what do you principally attribute the constant changing of their places by servants?—To the readiness with which they can get fresh places; the least advance in wages tempts them to leave.

165. And that readiness of obtaining places is the consequence of the great demand for servants?—Yes.

166. Have you many applications from the country?—I have; I have great difficulty in obtaining servants for country service; servants do not like generally to go into the interior.

167. By whom are the expenses of a servant proceeding to service in the interior defrayed?—By the master or mistress, if she remains six or twelve months in her service, as the agreement may be; if she leaves before the six months have expired, they are paid by the servant herself.

168. Suppose a female servant to leave her place in the interior, would she not have a difficulty in obtaining another situation?—I should not think any great difficulty; she would, most probably, obtain one in the family of some adjoining settler.

169. Do you find the female servants particular as to the families they enter?—No; they go wherever they can get the highest wages.

Captain Michael Fenton, M.L.C., called in; and Examined.

Capt. M. Fenton, M.L.C.

170. You are a member of this council, and a landed proprietor in the district of New Norfolk?—I am.

171. How long have you been in this colony?—About twelve or thirteen years.

172. Of what quantity of land are you in possession?—About 8,000 acres.

173. How many of them are under cultivation?—About from 250 to 300.

174. How many servants do you generally employ in your establishment?—From twenty to forty.

175. Are your servants bond or free?—At present I have twelve assigned servants, the rest are free.

176. What wages do you give your free servants?—I had a man and his wife with me, to whom I gave 55*l.* per annum, with board and lodging.

177. In what capacity?—He was a general farm servant, and his wife a laundress.

178. You have mentioned one instance; what wages do you give generally?—I generally prefer contract work; because the class of servants who are to be obtained at present in this colony are not to be depended upon, and require as much supervision as assigned servants.

179. What description of work do you get performed by contract?—Fencing, splitting, grubbing, clearing land, cutting watercourses; in short, every description of work except ploughing, sowing, and domestic service.

180. At what rate per rod do you get your fencing done?—A five-rail fence at from 4*s.* to 5*s.* a rod; the price depends on the distance. The fencer has to draw the material.

181. Has the rate varied since 1829?—That is the general average; I do not think I ever paid higher.

182. What amount can a man earn in a day at that rate?—I cannot exactly say; when they have finished, the fencers and others I have employed have generally had to receive half the amount they have earned in cash.

183. You spoke of several other classes of labourers; are their rates higher now than they were?—I think not.

184. Is there, in your opinion, any scarcity of labour?—Twelve months ago there was a difficulty in obtaining labour when you required any work to be done; now, I have had several applications from men for employment, which I have been obliged to refuse.

185. What do you consider to be the cause of this decrease in the demand for labour?—In consequence of the bad harvest last year, and there being no sufficient price for stock, the settlers are not able to carry on the improvements on their estates which they otherwise would.

186. Have you any reason to think there will be a greater demand for labour?—I have, and most probably a permanent one.

187. Will you state the grounds upon which you have arrived at this conclusion?—The probability of a reasonable rise in the price of stock, and a fair return from the grain crops. Last year, in consequence of the want of rain and the extreme heat, we had but half the usual crop; namely, twelve instead of twenty-four bushels to the acre.

188. What was the price of wheat last year, and what is it now?—It ranged from 10*s.* to 15*s.* a bushel last year; this year it has not exceeded 8*s.* 6*d.* a bushel.

189. How do you account for the diminished price of wheat and the diminished supply coexisting?—The diminished price arises from the large importations made from foreign markets, in consequence of the high prices of the last and former year here.

190. When you speak of a fair return from grain, what rate per bushel do you consider to be a fair price?—Eight shillings a bushel, provided there be an average crop of from twenty to twenty-four bushels to the acre.

191. Can you employ free labour with an average crop, without having a foreign market for your grain?—If the price of labour be reduced to 10*l.* to 12*l.* a year, with lodging and rations (the rations being worth about from 15*l.* to 18*l.* a year), I could. The quantity of free labour, however, which I could employ must depend upon the amount of ticket-of-leave labour that may be available for the service of the settler from the probation parties.

192. Do you think the present amount of labour is adequate to raise the grain required for the consumption of the colony?—I think not, but it may be when the probation men become available.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Capt. M. Fenton, M.L.C.

14 September 1841.

193. Do you remember any period when the colony has not raised sufficient grain for itself?—I do not.

194. Do you anticipate that you will ever be able to obtain labourers at the rate you have mentioned?—I do; by establishing your labourers as tenants, giving them a sufficient portion of land to employ their leisure time, and other facilities.

195. What species of labour is most required in your district, in-door or out-door?—We are in particular and urgent want of in-door servants, especially females; and if they were obtained under the bounty system, when each person could obtain the precise description of servant he wanted, a number of men now employed as in-door servants would be rendered available for out-door work. Any large and promiscuous supply upon the general system of emigration, proposed to be adopted at home, would, in my opinion, be injurious; unless it is determined to stop transportation, as on this will depend the demand.

196. Is there any difficulty in getting ploughmen now?—I should think they are scarce; I have rarely heard of their being out of employment, and have frequently been unable to obtain them when I required them.

197. What wages would a good ploughman demand or expect?—About 30 l. a year and his provisions; but I could not afford it, and never gave it.

198. How do the men whom you employ by contract obtain their provisions?—From myself, at certain prices fixed upon at the time the agreement is made.

199. How are they lodged?—In huts, which they generally build for themselves on the farm.

200. Are grooms and coachmen much wanted?—Good grooms.

201. What wages do grooms get?—About 20 l. a year.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1841.

Mr. Robert Robertson called in; and Examined.

Mr. R. Robertson.

15 September 1841.

202. WHAT trade are you?—A millwright and engineer.

203. In that capacity how many men do you employ?—About twenty free men and apprentices.

204. What wages do you give your free men?—The lowest wages we give is 2 l. 8 s., and the highest 2 l. 15 s.

205. Do you happen to know what wages are obtained in England by similar descriptions of workmen?—I have recently received a letter from a person in Lancashire; the wages there, he tells me, are 30 s. a week for the kind of workmen I employ. In London they are about 2 l. 2 s.

206. Is there any great demand for machinery in the colony?—About twelve months ago there was a great demand for machines, such as thrashing machines; we were obliged to decline many applications made to us, on account of our not being able to obtain a sufficient number of workmen. We wrote home for some under the bounty system; they have not, however, arrived; and I do not regret it under the existing circumstances of the colony. There is now very little demand for machines on the part of the settlers, owing to the depression of the times.

207. Can you get what men you now require for engineering purposes?—We are becoming more independent every day of a supply of workmen, on account of our apprentices.

208. How many apprentices have you?—Six.

209. Suppose the ensuing harvest to be good, and the settlers to make demands upon you again, could you obtain workmen to enable you to comply with such demands?—I hardly know; I could find employment for four additional hands, three millwrights and one smith; at this moment, however, they are not wanted; I might state that one or two good blacksmiths, qualified to forge work for machinery, would find employment; since we commenced business I have only found one thoroughly qualified man for that description of work.

210. At what cost per week can the workmen you employ obtain board and lodging?—About 16 s. a week; when they board in the house with us we charge them from 12 s. to 15 s. a week.

211. Will you state the number of bond and free respectively now in your employment?—We have seven free journeymen, six apprentices, three assigned men and one ticket-of-leave man.

212. Are the apprentices native youths, or did they come free to the colony?—Mostly native youths.

213. Are you in the habit of tendering for contracts for the erection of bridges and other public works?—Occasionally.

214. Do you think there is a deficiency of mechanics for such works?—I should say not; I should say there are sufficient without obtaining any assistance from home.

215. You would not be deterred, then, from undertaking any work of the kind we are now speaking of, by a fear of not being able to obtain workmen?—Certainly not; I ought to add, perhaps, that the Government give very liberal assistance in the shape of convict labour when they tender for contracts.

216. Do the Government offer the assistance of mechanics as well as labourers?—Of a few.

217. Then I am to understand that if convict labour could not be obtained, you would require more free labour to be imported?—Yes.

218. On account of the large quantity of tools and iron work for carts, &c., required for the probation gangs, will not additional mechanical labour be required?—Judging from the low price at which the contracts are taken for the supply of pick-axes, &c., there does not appear to be any deficiency of mechanical labour. I am credibly informed that the prices are below those in England; the last contract for picks was taken at 5 d. to 6 d. a pound, weighing from seven to eight pounds each, which makes the cost of the pick about 3 s. 6 d.; small stone hammers were contracted for at 1 s. 3 d. each.

219. Do you know the price of iron in England at the present time?—About 10 l. a ton.

220. The best Swedish iron?—The best Swedish iron would be, I should think, about 14 l., but we do not use that kind here.

221. What does iron cost you here now?—About 14 l. a ton when brought direct from the merchant.

222. Is the employment for men in your line of business permanent or fluctuating?—We seldom turn off any of our men.

223. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. R. Robertson.

15 September 1841.

223. Do you think the present rate of wages too high?—We find them too high in reference to the masters; the workmen earning 2*l.* a week make more in proportion than the masters; still, I believe, when men come so far from their native country, to give them less would render them discontented, and therefore less useful.

224. Do you think that a man and his wife, with three or four children, could live decently, and bring up their children well, that is to say, furnish them with proper clothing, and send them to school on less wages?—I do not think they could; the expense of house-rent and education is so high compared with what it is in Scotland; I have known several tradesmen who have come out here from Scotland quite discouraged at the difference; in Scotland children can be taught well, including mathematics, and even the classics, for 12*s.* a quarter.

225. Then you think that if wages were lower, that the effect would be that the children would be withdrawn from school, and they would lose all decent pride in their families?—Most certainly; I am sure they would rather stop at home and take 30*s.* a week.

226. Are provisions much cheaper at home than here?—The mode of living is much cheaper; I myself have at home saved money out of 6*s.* a week.

227. Have you any knowledge of the wages given to agricultural labourers at home?—In Roxburghshire, when I left, the wages of a ploughman were from 8*l.* to 10*l.* per annum, and the average rate for hired labourers about 10*d.* a day.

228. Do you think that labourers and others would be glad to emigrate from thence?—From what I have seen of the poorer classes there, I should say they would regret coming here, taking it for granted that they were in permanent employment at home.

229. Do you think that agricultural labourers, with wages from 10*l.* to 15*l.*, with the usual rations and lodging, would be better off here than they would be at home?—They would.

230. What leads you to think that they would regret coming here?—Such is the general impression on my mind; it would be difficult for me at once to give my reasons for it; I would, however, mention as one, that they could not get education for their children here as at home.

231. How many men in your line of business do you think could be introduced with a prospect of certain employment?—The prospects of business are very uncertain at present; I do not think more than six millwrights and two or three wheelwrights.

232. You mentioned that you had six apprentices; is the system of apprenticing general?—We have several applications; I have just bound one lad for seven years, and I have postponed taking one for six months.

233. Do you think your business is liked more than any other by the parents?—It is a very favourite one with boys.

234. Do you receive any premium?—Yes, generally from 15*l.* to 25*l.*; many parents, however, cannot pay a premium, and in that case the apprentice is kept by his parents for the first six months, in lieu of premium.

Mr. John Macgregor called in; and Examined.

Mr. J. Macgregor.

235. You are a tailor and clothier?—I am.

236. How many men do you employ?—From 10 to 20.

237. Are they free or otherwise?—At present they are all free or ticket-of-leave.

238. What wages do you give them?—In our trade men are paid by the piece.

239. What can your workmen earn generally?—There is a great difference between men; one man can sometimes earn as much as three other men. I have known men who can earn 3*l.* a week, while others can only earn 25*s.*; the average would earn about from 2*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.*

240. What would the same men make in London and in Edinburgh?—About 6*s.* in London, and about 3*s.* or 3*s.* 6*d.* in Edinburgh.

241. Do you find any difficulty in getting workmen?—Great difficulty in getting good men; out of 20 men here, only four or five can be termed good men.

242. How many tailors might, in your opinion, be introduced into the colony with advantage?—It would depend on the sort of men introduced.

243. How many would you take in addition to those you now have?—Not any; good workmen would displace the indifferent ones.

244. Have you any apprentices?—One only.

245. Are the bad workmen, to whom you have referred, men who have been brought up as tailors?—No; they have been partially brought up to the trade; they have been principally boys who have learned what they know at the hulks or at Port Arthur.

246. Are any of the men now in employ men who came out free?—Not one; they are either ticket-of-leave men or men free by servitude.

247. Do you think it desirable that any tailors should be brought out?—I think that the introduction of some good and steady workmen would be a great advantage, but they should be good workmen; there are many deserving men at home who would be the first to desire to emigrate, but who would not be of much service, because they are but indifferent workmen.

248. Is the present rate of wages too high, in your opinion?—The wages are not so much too high, as that we are compelled to accept of an inferior made article.

249. Have you any idea of what it would take to maintain a man of the description of those you employ?—About from 12*s.* to 15*s.* a week.

Mr. James Sly called in; and Examined.

Mr. James Sly.

250. You are a boot and shoemaker?—I am.

251. Have you many free men in your employment?—No, I cannot procure them.

252. Are there no free men to be had in your trade?—No; I have advertised for several, without success.

253. Then the introduction of journeymen boot and shoemakers would be advantageous?—Most certainly.

254. How many could you employ, in addition to the men you now have?—From six to eight more.

255. What men have you at present?—I have three assigned men and two free men.

256. What wages do you give your free men?—Seven shillings a pair for bottoms, and 6*s.* for closing.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. James Sly.

15 September 1841.

257. What can a good workman earn a week, at that rate?—A clever closer can close ten pair a week, regularly; a pair a day is a general average.

258. Do you think the present rates of wages too high?—I think they are, particularly in proportion to the quality of the work. There are not more than four good footmen in Hobart Town, and two of these have lately become free, and only work three days a week; there is but one real good closer in Hobart Town.

259. Do you think a man and his wife, and three or four children, could live decently, clothing their children properly, and sending them to school, at a less rate of wages?—I think they might; they have to do it at home.

260. What is the rate of wages at home?—Four shillings and sixpence a pair for bottoms, and from 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* 6*d.* for closing.

261. Is not house-rent and living more expensive than at home?—Not now.

262. How many journeymen boot and shoemakers do you think might be introduced, with a prospect of certain employment?—About fifty; many other men require workmen besides myself.

263. Do you happen to know whether they are wanted at Launceston?—I should think so, as I work for many gentlemen on the other side of the island.

264. When you speak of fifty journeymen being introduced, you mean good workmen?—I do; there are plenty of inferior workmen, men capable of making stock-keeper's boots, who have been taught at the hulks, or at Port Arthur.

265. What do you pay for this latter description of work?—Four shillings and sixpence a pair for bottoms, and 2*s.* for closing.

266. Then you think there is no necessity for introducing any common workmen?—None, I should say. I could mention that there is another class of workmen not to be had in the colony; namely, ladies' shoemakers; and binders are still more wanted.

267. How many could you employ?—Two or three.

268. Have you sent for any workmen under the bounty system?—Four men and two women.

269. Have they arrived?—No.

270. Did you send to a private agent?—I did; to my brother, at Liverpool.

271. Are there many boot and shoemakers in the interior?—I believe there are some shoemakers at Campbell Town.

272. Do you think a master boot and shoemaker could set up with advantage in any of the country townships?—I think he might in two or three. I should have set up my own nephew at Oatlands, but I was deterred by a want of men.

273. What do you think a journeyman, with a wife and two or three children, could maintain himself and his family for?—About 30*s.* a week. If the wife could bind, she could earn as much as her husband.

Mr. Thomas Whitney called in; and Examined.

Mr. T. Whitney.

274. You are a baker?—I am.

275. How many men do you employ?—Four.

276. At what rate of wages?—According to their ability. The foreman has 25*s.*; the second, 18*s.*; the third, 15*s.*; and the fourth, 10*s.* a week, with their board.

277. Do you find any difficulty in procuring good workmen?—So great, that we are obliged to let the men we have, have their own way in a great measure, being fearful of their leaving us, and of our not being able to get men to replace them.

278. What do you reckon to be the cost of the board of each of your men?—From 16*s.* to 1 l. per week.

279. Do you think the present rate of wages too high?—I do.

280. What is the rate of wages at home?—The same rate in money as here; but the workmen only receive their bread instead of their board.

281. How many of each of the classes could, in your opinion, be introduced into the colony with a prospect of obtaining permanent employment?—About forty foremen, eighty second hands; the third hands are not so much wanted, as common men can perform the work required of them, and of the fourth class.

282. How many of these would find employment in Hobart Town?—About four fore-hands, and thirty good second hands.

283. There being such a want of foremen, how is the business conducted now?—The master now, in most cases, performs the work allotted to the foreman in England.

284. Are the workmen you have met with good?—The ticket-of-leave men are generally very good, but very insolent; they leave at a moment's warning, and, owing to the want of this kind of labour, other masters are glad to take them in without making any inquiries.

285. Have you any applications?—None.

286. Have you sent for any emigrants under the bounty?—I and another master baker sent for some men under the terms of the Government notice. We applied to a person at home to act as our agent, and we sent sufficient money to pay part of their passage out, and to enable them to purchase tools and other necessaries. We have since learned that the men were selected and taken before the Emigration Committee at home, and that the committee refused to sanction their going out unless the whole of their passage-money was paid. Our agent did not choose to do this, and sent us out goods for the money which we transmitted to him. Our men have learned that the men we sent for are not coming, and they are consequently more troublesome, as they think that we are more dependent than ever upon them.

287. What wages were you paying at the time you sent home?—I was then giving 30*s.* a week for the foreman.

Mr. Joseph Woolley called in; and Examined.

Mr. J. Woolley.

288. You are a cabinet maker and upholsterer in this town?—I am.

289. How many men do you usually employ?—About ten.

290. Are they all free?—They are.

291. What wages do you give?—From 7*s.* to 9*s.* 6*d.* a day, according to the ability of the workmen.

292. Do you know the rate of wages at home?—I do not; when I left England, about 5*s.* a day was the usual rate.

293. Do you think the present rate of wages too high?—I think it is.

294. Do you think a workman could maintain himself, a wife and four children, decently, and send his children to school, if he receives a lower rate of wages?—That must depend materially on the price of provisions. I should be inclined to say he could not. All the men I have had have done well; some have realized money, and live in houses which they have purchased.

295. Are the men you speak of as having done well married or single?—Married.

296. Are workmen in your trade scarce?—Not now; about four or five months ago men were much wanted.

297. Is there constant employment for the mechanics now in the colony in your line?—Yes.

298. How many do you think might be sent for with a prospect of their obtaining regular employment?—In the course of a few months men will, I expect, be more required than now; I should think eight or ten additional cabinet-makers would find employment in Hobart Town.

299. How many do you think might find constant employment in the colony?—I should think about 20 additional men.

300. Any upholsterers?—Not more than two are needed.

301. Have you sent home for any workmen under the bounty?—I have not; it is so long since I left England, that I do not know any one whom I could ask to select men for me; and unless I could be certain of getting the description of men I wanted, I should not like to run the risk of bringing men out.

302. Have you any apprentices?—Two; I had four.

303. Do you get any premium with them?—When I have an in-door apprentice I have a premium; with an out-door apprentice I have none.

304. Would there be any employment for women in your trade?—There are several women here who profess to be upholsterers; I do not think there would be any employment; that branch of the business is not pursued here as it is at home.

305. Should 20 additional men be introduced, would wages fall much in consequence?—I think not now with those who were good hands.

306. How long have you been in the colony?—Nineteen years.

307. Have wages fluctuated much during that period?—Not in the least.

Mr. John Watson called in; and Examined.

308. You are a shipwright and boat-builder?—I am.

309. Do you employ many shipwrights?—Not at present; I have had as many as 20 or 30, free men and apprentices.

310. Have you experienced difficulty in procuring men?—At times great difficulty; but I remedied that, in some measure, by the number of apprentices.

311. Could you give employment to any emigrants in your line now?—I could not; the greater number of men in the trade are now without employment, there being great stagnation in the shipping trade; at present there is neither ship-building nor ship-repairing going on.

312. To what do you attribute the stagnation?—To the probable failure of the fisheries, and the decrease of trade to Port Phillip; there is now less demand for vessels in the whaling trade.

313. Will the demand become less, in your opinion?—It will, as regards the bay fisheries.

314. What cause or causes would you assign for the decrease in the trade to Port Phillip?—The direct trade that now takes place between England and that colony, and the raising of their own supplies by the settlers; probably the want of money, recently felt there, may also have exercised some influence on the trade.

315. Do you think the shipping trade will become better?—Eventually I think it will.

316. Do you think it would be prudent to send for shipwrights from England?—I think not.

317. Could you get a good foreman here, if you required one?—I could not.

318. What wages do you give the men you now employ?—Nine shillings a day.

319. Is that the average rate?—It is.

320. You said just now that there were a number of men now out of employment in your trade; how does it happen that the rate of wages continues the same?—Our work is generally pressing, and requires to be put out of hand as soon as possible; so that, when a job comes in, all hands are employed.

321. Is the wood here suitable for ship-building?—The timber here is better for ship-building purposes, in my opinion, than any which I have seen from New Holland or from New Zealand.

322. Is there any want of sail-makers?—None.

323. Any want of boat-builders?—I think eight or ten additional boat-builders might find employment in Hobart Town and its neighbourhood.

324. Is the gum here equal to teak?—For some portions of the work in a ship I consider it superior.

325. How do the workmen subsist when out of employment?—They save sufficient out of their wages when employed to live upon.

326. Have any of the men you have employed saved any considerable sum?—I know two or three who have saved enough to have a house of their own, with a garden attached to it, worth perhaps 200*l.*

Mr. Thomas Tilley called in; and Examined.

327. You are an engineer, and an iron and brass founder, in this town?—I am.

328. How many men do you employ?—A smith, four engineers, a plumber, an iron-moulder and a brass moulder.

329. Are you in want of any description of workmen?—I could employ two coppersmiths and a pump-maker.

330. How many have you in all in your employ?—Eight.

331. What wages do you give them?—The brass-moulder, 8*s.*; vice-men, 7*s.*; blacksmith, 7*s.* 6*d.*; plumber, 8*s.* 8*d.* The plumber has just left me. To the iron-moulder, half the profits of the iron shop.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. Thomas Tilley.

15 September 1841.

332. Do you know what wages workmen of this description obtain in England?—A plumber, 5*s.*; the brass-moulder and the others, about 6*s.*

333. Do you think the rate of wages too high?—I should not mind paying them myself, if the workmen here would do as much work as they do in England.

334. You stated just now that you give half the profits of your iron shop to your moulder; what rate of wages do you consider that arrangement to be equal to?—I will state the arrangement itself; I find the iron and the coal; the man casts, say, 13 cwt., and we halve the profits; I should say that he earns a guinea a day; I pay him ready money, and give credit; I carry on this branch of the trade for the sake of my other business; the man himself is a whaler; I am now putting up a crane for him, and he has gone down the river for pleasure.

335. Do you think that a guinea a day is too high a rate of wages for such a description of workman?—If he were busy, and the trade rising, I would gladly give 14*s.* a day to such a man.

336. Would it be prudent to send home for moulders?—Not unless they could be specially selected.

337. Is there any opening, do you think, for men in your trade?—I think there is an opening for two moulders here, and one at Launceston; I could myself employ two good vice-men, first-rate workmen; there is also an opening, I should say, for two plumbers here, and for one at Launceston.

338. Are there any smiths needed?—There is a sufficient number of smiths if they were but steady men,—as it is, they often work one week, and do nothing the next.

339. Would the introduction of some steady men be desirable?—We should be more independent; it is often now quite a favour to get a man to work when a job is urgently required to be done.

340. Is your trade an increasing one?—It has been so hitherto; it is very stagnant now; when I entered into partnership with Mr. Harris, we had on the books 545*l.* the first year, 1,500*l.* the second, 2,400*l.* the third, and 3,000*l.* the fourth; ours was then the only house in the trade.

341. Are there any other establishments now?—One other.

342. Can you compete with the importer of iron ware?—I do; I make every thing; I import nothing but the raw material.

William Page Ashburner, Esq., M.L.C., called in; and Examined.

W. P. Ashburner, Esq., M.L.C.

343. You are a member of this council, and a landed proprietor in the district of Westbury?—I am.

344. What number of acres do you occupy?—Nine thousand.

345. How many of these are in cultivation?—Two hundred and fifty.

346. What number of men do you employ?—From fourteen to twenty.

347. How many of these are freemen?—Three, at annual wages.

348. What rate of wages do you give them?—From 30*l.* to 70*l.* per annum, with rations. The man receiving 70*l.* is an overseer; the other two, receiving 30*l.* and 35*l.*, are shepherds.

349. Is that the usual rate for shepherds?—About 30*l.*, I should say, is the usual rate.

350. Is there any scarcity of good shepherds?—Very great.

351. What can good ploughmen earn?—From 30*l.* to 40*l.* a year, I should say.

352. Do you happen to know the rate of wages given to common labourers here?—I believe, from 8*s.* to 10*s.* a week, with food and lodging. I ought to mention, that I have other free and ticket-of-leave men working by contract.

353. At what rate are the men paid who are working by contract?—From 3*s.* to 3*s.* 6*d.* a rood for fencing; the stuff is drawn for them.

354. Do you think 70*l.* a year too much for a good overseer?—I do not; for that sum, however, I have the services of his wife as dairy-maid; but as she has an infant to take care of, she is of little use.

355. Do you think that the rate for the shepherds is too high?—No; I would rather pay more than less for trustworthy men.

356. Have you any difficulty in obtaining labourers?—At times, very great; latterly they have been very abundant; but good men will always obtain employment. Good gardeners are very scarce, and would readily be engaged; I would give 30*l.* per annum for one.

357. Are good ploughmen easily to be obtained?—They are not.

358. Can you obtain free female servants?—They are not to be had. The difficulty of procuring a female to superintend a dairy will, most probably, prevent my keeping on my dairy this year, with a view to profit.

359. Is there an opening for every class of labourers?—That must depend entirely on the measures of the Government with respect to transportation. I should myself prefer having all free men in my employ, if I could afford it, or obtain them.

360. When you speak of free men, do you mean men free by servitude, or free immigrants?—Free immigrants.

361. What wages could you afford to give free men?—That would depend upon the state of the markets

362. Do you think the wish to employ free labour is a general feeling?—Yes, I do.

363. Suppose an emigration to take place sufficiently extensive to admit of that wish being realized, what would be the effect as regards the class of labourers now principally in employ?—They would cease to be employed as regular farm servants, and would be then employed in job-work.

364. Do you think they would find sufficient employment of that kind?—Perhaps; wages would, however, be reduced, and persons would employ the cheapest kind of labour, without reference to whether the man were a free immigrant or an emancipist.

365. Do you not think that many ticket-of-leave men and others now employed would be thrown out of employment?—I think they would, if the supply of immigrants was on the extensive scale you allude to.

366. What would be the results, in your opinion?—I am afraid to contemplate.

367. Do you think an immigration on a less extent than that to which we have been referring is desirable?—Most undoubtedly.

368. What number do you think could be introduced with benefit to themselves and to the settlers?

W. P. Ashburner, Esq, M.L.C.

15 September 1841.

settlers?—I should say a large number might be introduced, without any injurious effect on the labour market; it ought, however, to be gradual.

369. In what way do you think immigrants may best be introduced into the colony?—I should say, under the bounty system, established by his Excellency Sir John Franklin; because, among other reasons which occur to me as rendering it the best, the supply will always be in exact accordance with the demand.

370. Do you draw any distinction between that and any other system?—Comparing the bounty system with the general system, as it is termed, and which is the only other one, I believe, that has yet been tried, I should say the advantages are all on the side of the bounty system; under it we can obtain the precise description of labour we require, while, in many cases, there is also this material advantage attending it, that, by employing a friend in England to select men, we should, most probably, obtain labourers with whose family or connexions we may be acquainted, and thus an interest would be created in the relation between master and servant, that would not exist were the men introduced promiscuously. I would add, that I should have very great hesitation in receiving men such as I have seen emigrating to this colony; I should hesitate to receive men, in fact, unless specially recommended to me from England.

371. You are aware that probation parties are about being stationed in the different unsettled districts in the colony, and that it may be expected that the labour of many of these men will, before a long period, be available to the settler; does that circumstance suggest any important point to you for consideration in connexion with this subject?—The labour-market will, of necessity, be materially affected by it.

372. Do you think there will be employment for these men and a considerable number of immigrants too?—Not without the arrival of immigrants who shall themselves require labour.

373. Do you think the present number of labourers sufficient to raise grain for our own consumption?—Most certainly; we know it as a fact, that large quantities of wheat have been exported.

374. At what period is the scarcity of labour most felt?—At the harvest and sheep-shearing time.

375. Do you not then want, in fact, a surplus upon the supply of labour required at other periods?—We do.

376. Supposing a sufficient supply for the harvest, how would you propose to employ the surplus during the other months of the year?—I have not considered that point sufficiently to be able now to answer; but there will, I should imagine, be room for employment in general improvements.

377. Was labour very scarce last year?—It was.

378. To what do you attribute that scarcity?—To the cessation of assignment, and the establishment of the new colonies in our neighbourhood. Many have now returned, and many persons have also come here who came out as emigrants to those colonies.

379. You are aware that a scarcity of wheat very frequently occurs in New South Wales; are you able to state at what intervals that scarcity has been observed to recur?—I believe every fourth year, at the least.

380. You are aware that very large importations of wheat have been made to New South Wales; do you think that, with an additional quantity of free labour, and the labour of the probation men which may hereafter be at our service, we could grow wheat at such a rate as to compete with the foreign market?—It is well known that a scarcity in New South Wales has always raised the price of grain here beyond its legitimate standard. From what I have learned, I believe that, if grain could be supplied here at a moderate price (say 7*s.* to 8*s.* a bushel), which it can be, there would be no importation from South America to Sydney.

381. Suppose the wheat to be at the average price (say 8*s.*), what wages could you afford to give your free labourers, having none but free labourers on your farm?—Not more than from 10*l.* to 15*l.* per annum, with rations and lodging.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1841.

Mr. Peter Degraves called in; and Examined.

Mr. Peter Degraves.

16 September 1841.

382. WHAT is your business?—I am a civil engineer; I have a large establishment, consisting of a flour mill, saw mill and brewery.

383. Have you many men in your employ?—About 50; I have had 70.

384. Of what classes are they?—Mostly labourers; some few are mechanics; we have at present a blacksmith, a millwright and three carpenters.

385. What wages do you give your free labourers?—Eight shillings a week, with board and lodging.

386. Are many of your men assigned servants?—The greater number are free or ticket-of-leave.

387. What wages do you give the mechanics?—The millwright 10*s.* a day. The smith has been 17 years in my service; he was originally an assigned servant; he is now free; I pay him 10*s.* a week, with board and lodging. To one carpenter, whom I employ constantly, I give 7*s.* a day; to the other two, 8*s.* a day.

388. Are the freemen in your employ free immigrants, or men free by servitude?—Some free emigrants, but, for the most part, men free by servitude. The greater part of them were assigned to me, and became free in my service.

389. Have you ever found any inconvenience from the intermixture of free immigrants and assigned men?—A little; the prisoners, at times, have been disposed to annoy the other men; some have left me on that account.

390. Which class have you found the most useful?—Those free by servitude; they have had generally a long training, or sort of apprenticeship in their business, during the period of their assignment; I prefer them myself on that account. Several free men who have come to me under agreement have gone away and left me, and it was more trouble than they were worth to look after them. In our business too, particularly, it requires some training even among these labourers; a striker at the forge, for instance, who is a common labourer, is not clever at first.

391. Have you any difficulty in procuring agricultural labourers?—Very great; I expect my corn will shake in the field this season.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. Peter Degraves.

16 September 1841.

392. How many acres have you under cultivation?—Myself and sons have 500 acres under plough, all sown.

393. Had you any difficulty in procuring men to plough and sow your land?—Previously to the whaling season I had about 20 men at work on the farm; when the whaling season commenced, they all left me.

394. Do they return for the harvest?—They generally return about November.

395. The harvest season is the time when there is the greatest difficulty in obtaining labour?—It is.

396. Do you consider there is a deficiency in the supply of labour now?—I would employ men to clear land if I could get them.

397. What could men earn in that employment?—At least 4*s.* 4*d.* a day.

398. What do you reckon to be the expense of keeping a labouring man?—My men cost me till lately from 12*s.* to 15*s.* a week each; now they cost me 8*s.* or 9*s.* a week each, provisions being cheap.

399. Do men object to the labour of clearing land?—The clearing of land is heavy work; the greater part of the men are not disposed to undertake it.

400. You appear to pay your labourers rather less than the average rate?—Yes, but then I agree with them for a year. Men labouring on the jetty earn 4*s.* or 4*s.* 4*d.* a day, but then their employment is uncertain; when men are engaged by the year, 18*s.* or 19*s.* a week is the general average.

401. Do you think that rate of wages too high?—I think it is; it is far higher than the rate in other countries. At home a labouring man can only earn 5*l.* or 6*l.* a year, with his board.

402. Is the cost of keeping a labouring man at home more or less than here?—Not so much at home as here; the men do not live so well.

403. Do you think a man and his wife, with two or three children, could live decently, and send their children to school, if he received less wages than 19*s.* a week?—I think not; it must depend on the price of provisions; I have been speaking of single men.

404. Are you of opinion that it is desirable to introduce a number of free emigrants into the colony?—I think it is.

405. Have you applied for men under the bounty system?—I have not. In order to get families out, it is necessary to incur some expense in providing them with various necessaries prior to their embarkation. When the Government notice first appeared, I did not quite understand it, and I thought it would be a failure. I afterwards, however, understood the subject better, and was intending to take steps for bringing out some men, when I heard that the contract part of the system was done away with at home.

406. Am I then to understand that you would not apply for men unless they were bound to you for a certain period?—I would not. In many cases the men, if not bound, will go to other colonies, so that not even the colony is benefited; and if they do remain here, they will probably go to other masters, and the person who has brought them out has had all his trouble for nothing, besides having lost the money which he may have paid for their passage, over and above the Government allowance. I myself brought out some mechanics from England, and every one of them left me.

407. Have you had servants who were under contract to you?—I have some now, and have had many.

408. Did you observe any restlessness or impatience on their part under their contract?—Very seldom; sometimes a man may wish to leave your service; he may form an attachment to some female in another establishment, and wish to get away.

409. Have you ever met with any instances in which they have had recourse to a system of continued annoyance, in the hope that you would dismiss them?—I have; a few.

410. Can you state how many?—About three or four.

411. Out of how many cases of contract?—Out of 50.

412. I think you stated that some free emigrants under contract had left your service, and that you did not think it worth while to look after them; was the cause of their leaving insufficiency of wages?—No. In one case it was the fear of being prosecuted for a felony or a larceny; and in the other cases the men had got into debt, and were afraid of an execution issuing against them.

413. Have you ever considered in what way any great quantity of additional labour might be employed?—I should say there was an immense field for labour in this colony; in the clearing of land for instance, the cost of which would be defrayed by the first year's produce; besides other improvements.

414. Do you think there is a corresponding amount of capital to carry out the improvements to which you refer?—I should think so.

415. To what produce would you devote the land you might clear?—Wheat and potatoes, principally.

416. Do you think the amount of labour now in the colony sufficient to provide grain for its own consumption?—I should say not, with the introduction of so many probation men as are expected.

417. Within your experience, do you remember any year in which the colony was unable to provide sufficient grain for its own consumption?—I do not at this moment.

418. The inference from that is, as you will perceive, that there always has been hitherto an adequate supply of labour for that purpose. Are you of opinion that there has been any decrease in the supply lately?—Yes; great numbers have gone to Port Phillip.

419. Have not many men returned?—Very few; I consider that I have lost many of my best workmen.

420. What induced them to leave?—A higher rate of wages; and the work at Port Phillip is not half so hard as that in which they were employed here.

421. Are you aware whether the last harvest produced sufficient grain for the consumption of the colony?—Quite sufficient, I should say.

422. Was it more than adequate?—I think so; I cannot say positively.

423. Was not the harvest last year less productive than usual?—As a miller, I have heard from settlers that it was a bad crop. We had not a third of an average crop on our own land; but then we were late in sowing.

Mr. Peter Degraves.

16 September 1841.

424. Do you think the produce of the next harvest will be sufficient for our consumption?—I doubt it. It has been a season of great drought; and unless we have heavy rains, I think the crop will be defective.

425. Do you think as much grain was put in the ground this year as last?—I do not.

426. What reason would you assign for this?—The scarcity of labour, and high rate of wages, principally.

427. Would you think a large immigration so desirable, if you knew that any considerable number of men from the probation gangs would soon be available, when holding tickets-of-leave?—It would render it necessary to use caution as to the number to be introduced. The ticket-of-leave probation men will but be half as valuable as the present ticket-of-leave men. In the one case, they have been regularly trained to particular kinds of work, and have been, during assignment made, in most cases, good labourers or workmen, but the ticket-of-leave probation man will have learned nothing.

428. What would be the result of the probation men not easily finding employment?—It would be a matter of alarm, both as regards bond and free.

429. Have any of your men acquired property?—Some have.

430. Do you not consider it conducive to good conduct, on the part of the labourers and mechanics, that wages should be so high as to induce them to save?—Not so much so as may be imagined. I have a man in my employ who lives very decently on 25*s.* a week, with his wife; I find him a cottage, and he has wood and water close at hand.

431. What do you take the value of the cottage, with wood and water, to be?—About 10*l.* a year.

432. Is the rent of houses suited to the occupation of labourers and mechanics reasonable here?—I should say, very. There are now 180 cottages in Hobart Town untenanted.

433. How do you account for so many being vacant?—The labourers who occupied them have emigrated.

434. How many millwrights could be introduced with advantage?—I could not say. There would be more speculation if we could get a few more workmen; I myself was thinking of putting up two more mills, but I have not workmen enough.

435. How many carpenters?—Good joiners would find employment; we do not want rough carpenters.

436. Any smiths?—I have found no difficulty of late in getting my smith's work done.

437. What, in your opinion, is a remunerating price to the grower for wheat here?—I think not less than 8*s.*

438. Suppose our own market to be over supplied, can we depend upon a foreign market?—I think there is every reason to suppose that we may, in our neighbouring colonies.

439. You have heard of the siloes established at Sydney for the storeage of wheat?—I have; but I do not think that wheat will ever remunerate the grower in New South Wales.

440. Do you think the Indian wheat is likely to interfere with our exporting wheat?—Not materially; it will only do for mixing.

441. What do you think of the South American wheat?—I have seen a very good sample of wheat from the neighbourhood of Valparaiso; but then there is the risk of the voyage, the chances of the wheat getting damp, and the great uncertainty of the Sydney market.

442. What is the present price of wheat from Valparaiso?—From 4*s.* to 4*s.* 6*d.* a bushel, good wheat.

443. Is it not within your knowledge that no wheat could be had here at 8*s.* a bushel, when the importations to New South Wales first commenced?—It is. At Hobart, 16*s.* and 20*s.* a bushel was demanded.

444. Do you think the Sydney merchant would send elsewhere for wheat, if he could depend upon always being supplied here at 8*s.*?—I do not think he would.

445. Does it consist with your knowledge that, at the time 16*s.* a bushel was demanded here for wheat, a surplus of wheat had been produced?—I conceived so.

446. In point of fact, the scarcity at Sydney caused the high price here?—I believe so.

447. Do you happen to know whether the market at Valparaiso is affected by an impression being abroad that there is a scarcity at Sydney?—When we sent the "Agenoria," at the time of the high prices here, to Valparaiso, the market rose immediately on her arrival from 3*s.* to 7*s.* The captain proceeded to sea, on the broker's recommendation; and the broker then purchased the cargo at from 3*s.* to 3*s.* 6*d.* a bushel. We lost 300*l.* by the speculation.

Charles Octavius Parsons, Esq., called in; and Examined.

C. O. Parsons, Esq.

448. You are a landed proprietor in the district of Richmond?—I am.

449. What extent of land do you occupy?—Seven thousand acres.

450. How many of those are in cultivation?—From 200 to 300 acres.

451. How many servants do you employ?—About 30.

452. How many of these are free?—About 12 or 14 are assigned men, and the rest free.

453. Have you any free emigrants in your employ?—Some few; the greater part are men free by servitude, or ticket-of-leave men.

454. Which class of men do you prefer?—I prefer the ticket-of-leave men; they are better than the free emigrants, unless those that are employed as overseers.

455. How do you account for this?—Probably it may be attributed to the summary way in which ticket-of-leave men can be punished if they misconduct themselves, and also to their wish to gain further indulgence,—which they know can only be done by good conduct.

456. What wages do you give your free men?—From 20*l.* to 30*l.* per annum, with lodging and rations.

457. Do you find any inconvenience from having bond and free men on your farm?—No, not any; the free men are the most troublesome; they consider that they are more independent, as they have never been convicted of any crime.

458. When you said that you preferred your ticket-of-leave labourers to your free labourers, do you mean that you would prefer ticket-of-leave men generally to free emigrants?—I consider the most useful servants to be those who have been assigned to settlers.

459. Are not the free emigrants more to be trusted?—I have had several, and I have not found that they were.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

C. O. Parsons, Esq.

16 September 1841.

460. On what system were the emigrants you have referred to sent out?—I am not aware; they were not selected.

461. Are you desirous to see free immigrants introduced into this colony?—Yes, I am, if they are good farming servants; men, in fact, of a totally different description from those I have ever met with here. Almost all the immigrants I have seen have been quite useless as farming men.

462. In what way would you propose to obtain such men as you wish to see introduced here?—I think they should be selected in England or Scotland by some practical farmer.

463. Do you think the present rate of wages too high?—I do; after you have paid your men their wages, many of them are not unfrequently in the public-houses for two or three weeks together.

464. What is the expense of maintaining a labourer here?—I have not lately calculated; I should think the rations worth from 18*l.* to 20*l.* per annum.

465. What does an assigned servant cost you?—About 10*l.* a year for clothing and other allowances, in addition to his rations.

466. Do the assigned servants perform as much work as the free men?—A great many do; I have had some excellent men.

467. At what price can you afford to sell your wheat, assuming that you have an average crop?—About 8*s.* a bushel; last year, instead of 2,000 or 3,000 bushels, I had only enough to keep my own establishment.

468. Supposing your establishment to consist of all free men, receiving the present rate of wages, what would then be, in your opinion, a remunerating price for your wheat?—Not less than 10*s.*

469. What would you consider to be a fair rate of wages?—The wages of a farm servant, in my opinion, ought not to exceed 15*l.* per annum.

470. Do you think that a man, his wife, and three children, could live with any degree of comfort on these wages?—Much would depend on the management of the wife. I have a man and his wife who get 40*l.* a year; the wife washes. They live very comfortably.

471. What number of labourers could, in your opinion, be introduced into the colony with advantage?—It must depend on the number we shall receive from the probation gangs. I should think from 4,000 to 5,000 useful labouring servants would find employment.

472. In addition to those now employed?—Yes, in addition. The high rate of wages is the great obstacle to the employment of men.

473. In what way would such an additional number of men be employed?—In clearing, and in raising grain.

474. Do you think the additional quantity of grain would find a market?—I should think so. As yet, I have never found any difficulty in disposing of grain.

475. Do you think the present number of labourers in the colony sufficient to raise grain for our own consumption?—I should say, not enough.

476. Has the price of labour varied much within your knowledge?—Three years ago, I hired several labourers at 15*l.* per annum.

477. How long have you been in the colony?—Eighteen years.

478. Do you ever remember a year in which the colony has not been able to raise sufficient wheat for its own consumption?—I do not think the last crop was sufficient.

479. What is the present price of wheat?—Eight shillings a bushel.

480. The present price is not, then, beyond the ordinary rate, and that is not a remunerating price?—It is not.

481. How do you account for a remunerating price for wheat not being obtained when the supply was deficient?—That is owing to the importation of wheat and flour.

482. What, in your opinion, would have been the price of wheat had there been no importations of wheat and flour?—I should say, from 15*s.* to 1*l.* a bushel.

483. From what country?—From Sydney, Valparaiso and India.

484. Do you think we can depend upon a foreign market for our surplus wheat, provided the price does not exceed 8*s.* a bushel?—I should say so; we always have had.

485. Every year?—Generally.

486. Are you of opinion, that if there was such a quantity of labour as to produce a considerable surplus of grain, we could dispose of that surplus at a remunerating price?—I think so.

487. What would be the effect of the supply of labour exceeding the demand?—The labourers would emigrate to other colonies.

488. Are you aware, that several who have emigrated from this colony to Port Phillip and other colonies have returned?—I believe some have.

489. Do you know the cause of their having returned?—I imagine the reduction of wages at Port Phillip. I am informed, that man who received 40*l.* or 50*l.* a year, can only now obtain 20*l.* or 25*l.*

490. To what do you attribute this reduction in wages?—To the arrival, at once, of a large number of immigrants from England, and the great scarcity of money.

491. You stated that the wages of a farm servant ought not, in your opinion, to exceed 15*l.* per annum; do you happen to know the rate of wages in England?—In England, the highest wages do not exceed from 8*s.* to 9*s.* a week, the labourer being provided with a cottage and garden.

492. Is there not a difference in the living of a labourer here, and that of an English labourer?—In some parts of the west of England, labourers have meat only once a week, in other counties oftener. Here the men have meat at breakfast, dinner and supper.

493. Do you think the English labourer has too little animal food?—No; he can do a much harder day's work than the labourer here.

494. Then you are of opinion, that the labourer here has too much animal food?—Too much by one-half.

495. Are not the labourers in England allowed beer?—They receive an allowance of small beer every day; here we do not give beer, but tea.

496. Is there any want of domestic servants in your district?—A very great want, particularly of females.

497. What wages would a female servant obtain?—At the present time from 16*l.* to 20*l.* a year.

498. Is

C. O. Parsons, Esq.

16 September 1841.

498. Is that rate of wages too high, in your opinion?—Decidedly so; I should say 8*l.* a year was sufficient.

499. Are you aware of the wages which female servants can obtain at home?—In Herefordshire and Gloucestershire, never more than from 2*l.* to 5*l.* a year. I am aware that in London and its neighbourhood wages are much higher.

500. Do you not think that respectable females emigrating here would expect to receive better wages than they could get at home?—I think the better living which they would get here would be in itself an inducement—I speak of country servants.

501. How many additional free labourers would you employ if the rate of wages were reduced, and you could obtain men?—Nine or ten more, certainly.

502. Have you applied under the bounty system for labourers?—I have not.

503. Have any of the men in your employ saved money?—Not one; all their money is spent in the public-house.

504. Do the free immigrants frequent the public-house as much as the other men?—They are worse than the others.

Philip T. Smith, Esq., called in; and Examined.

P. T. Smith, Esq.

505. You are a landed proprietor in the neighbourhood of Ross?—I am.

506. What extent of land do you occupy?—About 23,000 or 24,000 acres.

507. What number of men do you employ?—About 24 or 25.

508. How many of them are free?—One free, nine or ten ticket-of-leave, and the remainder are assigned.

509. What wages do you give your free men?—I give my free overseer 80*l.* per annum, and provisions; to one ticket-of-leave shepherd, 30*l.* per annum, and rations; to two ticket-of-leave labourers, 8*s.* per week, and rations; my cook, 30*l.* per annum; a carpenter, 52*l.* per annum, and rations; and the remainder are employed in splitting, fencing, &c.

510. Do you consider the present rates of wages too high?—I do; the wages of an overseer must depend on his merits; but I consider 20*l.* enough for a good shepherd, and 15*l.* for an ordinary one, and 7*s.* a week for a good labourer.

511. Do you find any difficulty in obtaining labourers?—No difficulty at present.

512. At the harvest time, do you find any difficulty?—A ruinous difficulty; the wages then demanded are extravagant. I paid last year 5*s.* a day, and extra allowances of meat, flour, tea, sugar and wine; and I heard of many farmers suffering their corn to shake on the ground, rather than pay what was asked. In some parts, the wages were, I believe, more moderate.

513. What wages did men earn last harvest?—I employed some men to reap, when the crop was heavy, at 14*s.* to 16*s.* per acre, with provisions; and the men I employed at 5*s.* a day were, in my opinion, dearer than them. I paid my shearers 11*s.* per hundred, with as much meat, bread and tea, as they could well eat and drink, and an allowance of wine.

514. Do you think that there is at present a deficiency of labour?—No deficiency just now, for the settlers generally are too poor to employ more than are absolutely necessary at the present rate of wages and rations. There will be a great demand, however, at shearing and harvesting, and if corn and wool were to rise, more labour would be employed; but as things are, and money at 10 and 15 per cent., half the settlers are nothing but overseers to their creditors. Nothing but the present depression of the market forces me to stop my improvements. I could irrigate a large quantity of land, but I cannot afford to do so, but on a very limited scale.

515. Has any mode occurred to you of providing labour for the harvest?—No other, except by applying to Government for men on loan. Last harvest my brother and myself applied for men, and we obtained four; but one had lost a hand, and I returned him in consequence.

516. Would a large supply of labour by immigration be, in your opinion, desirable?—Without a doubt, if properly conducted; for it would make labour of all kinds cheaper, and it would improve the quality of convict labour, to say nothing of the moral effect of a free population.

517. You stated that the settlers were too poor at present to employ much additional labour; supposing the prices to continue the same, how could the additional number of men be provided for?—They must be content with lower wages.

518. You think that they would find employment by taking lower wages?—I do. We should then weed out the worst of our assigned and ticket-of-leave servants, and replace them with free men. In fact, if labourers would be content to accept wages in proportion to the profit of the farmer, almost any number might, I think, be employed.

519. Supposing their wages to be reduced, on what kind of labour would the labourers be employed?—In almost every species of improvement; I think that irrigation might be carried on where it has never been thought of; and where people have thought of it, they are deterred by the expense.

520. Do you think that this particular kind of improvement could be carried on profitably?—Almost any expense would be repaid, provided that capital was not borrowed for the purpose; but no improvement, producing slow returns, can stand against 12½ to 15 per cent. for money.

521. Would it lead to the growth of fat stock?—Certainly; as an instance, I may mention that my neighbour, Mr. Kermode, kept 3,900 sheep on 60 acres of irrigated rape for six weeks; and Mr. Frank Bryant has told me that he can fatten 15 to 20 Leicester sheep per acre on English grasses, and cut three tons of hay besides.

522. Are you aware what is the population of this colony?—I believe about 55,000.

523. Do you think that settlers, who could avail themselves of the advantage of irrigating their lands, would do so without overdoing the market with fat meat?—There is no fear of that; the importation of meat into this colony is very large in proportion to the population.

524. Could you compete with the importers of meat?—We hardly know at present at what price meat can be imported; but I could afford to sell very much cheaper than at present if I could irrigate.

525. Could you exclude the importer?—I think we shall do so gradually; but hitherto numbers, and not quality, have been the object, and artificial food is grown but to a small extent, and irrigation has hardly been thought of till very lately.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

P. T. Smith, Esq.

16 September 1841.

526. To what rate, in your opinion, must labour be reduced so as to render its employment profitable to the settler?—That must depend, in a great measure, on the prices of produce, and the changes here are so rapid that there is no arguing from one year to another; hitherto the wages have been about 12*s.* per week, with rations, for a ploughman, and 8*s.* to 10*s.* for a labourer; and now that wool, corn, and meat have fallen, the settler cannot afford to pay half these wages, and pay the same rate for money as before; the extensive and injudicious sales of Crown land have operated, in my opinion, very prejudicially, by producing unnatural prices, and by the banks being made the depositories of the money.

527. Do you think that the present supply of labour is sufficient to raise corn for our own consumption?—I should say abundant in point of numbers, but a large proportion is dear at any price, and the customary rate of wages is not easily altered.

528. Do you think there is reason for supposing that we can generally depend upon finding a market for our surplus grain?—I should say so generally, as the neighbouring colonies cannot grow corn with so much certainty, or of such quality as we can; in consequence, however, of large contracts having been made at Sydney with the Chilian merchant for a supply of wheat, there is no prospect of a great demand for some time.

529. At what rate must grain be sold to remunerate the grower?—That depends on the situation and quality of his land; the carriage from my farm to Hobart Town is 1*s.* 6*d.*, to Launceston 1*s.* 3*d.* per bushel. Every thing considered, I question if, one year with another, I could grow wheat for the market under 8*s.* 6*d.* per bushel.

530. Supposing a number of families to be introduced into the colony, and the man to receive at the rate of 7*s.* a week as a labourer, does it enter into your calculation giving rations to the family?—Yes, it does; but he must be a good farm servant, and the rations must be moderate.

531. Would you expect any return of labour from the wife or children?—If the wife's services were available for washing, a dairy, or any other purpose, I would pay her something in addition. I should place such a man in a cottage, with a garden for his own use. To the children under 12 I should give plenty of bread and vegetables, and less meat; to a useful boy, I would give five or six pounds of meat, plenty of bread, and his clothes, and work him on the farm.

532. Suppose you had only the man's labour, and you gave rations to himself, his wife, and four children; what wages would you give him?—With the present opportunity of employing convict labour, he would be dear to me at any thing beyond his clothing, and perhaps at that. I am supposing they consumed rations on the scale now adopted in the colony; if they consumed less, I might afford to give some wages. The introduction of families is desirable, not so much on account of immediate benefit to the settler, as of the future advantage in having eventually a respectable tenantry.

533. Do you consider it practicable to establish such a tenantry in this colony?—To a small extent, I do; but a tenantry is a thing of slow growth, and almost incompatible with the present convict system.

534. Would you select your immigrants from the smaller class of farmers, or from the ordinary labourers?—From the farming labourers at first, because the inducement is not strong enough for farmers with small capitals to come here.

535. How do you think such men could best be obtained?—By appointing an active intelligent agent to select them, or by permitting the settler to get them out in his own way, upon the bounty system; but on no account to leave the selection entirely to the Home Government.

536. How many emigrants do you think could be advantageously introduced?—I can hardly say; I should not think there would be any danger of bringing out more single men or single women, or married couples without children, than would be readily employed; but there would be more difficulty in disposing of men with families.

537. Would you rather employ a free or a ticket-of-leave man?—At the same, or even higher wages, I would prefer the free man of equal capacity; because character is worth money, and there is no fellow-feeling between the free man and the convict.

538. At the present time, do you consider that enterprise is checked for want of labour?—The labour-market here is an anomaly, comprising as it does free labour, ticket labour, and assigned labour; and, from the regulations regarding the two latter, the supply being unequal in different parts of the island. Enterprise, therefore, may be checked in some instances, and not in others; but, generally speaking, labour, with the present scale of rations, is too dear, and the wages of fencers, splitters, sawyers, shearers, reapers and others, are out of proportion with the profit of the farmer. In my neighbourhood, such men think the job a bad one if they cannot clear 15*s.* to 20*s.* a week, after paying for their provisions; and the wages of mechanics are still higher.

539. Do you think that employment could be found for mechanics in the interior?—I should say undoubtedly. I pay 1*l.* and rations a week to an ordinary carpenter; and I paid two masons lately 120*l.* a piece per annum, without provisions.

540. Could any employment be found for wheelwrights and blacksmiths?—Wheelwrights' and blacksmiths' work is very dear at Ross; if there were more mechanics of this description, more would be hired by the settlers on their farms.

541. Are good female servants scarce?—The great want of the colony; I believe no one can tell the inconvenience felt by many families for want of them.

542. What description are required?—Nursery-maids, laundresses, housemaids and cooks.

543. What wages would they obtain?—The rate of wages usually given is, I understand, from 20*l.* to 30*l.* per annum. The rate in England varies from 6*l.* to 10*l.*, and seldom exceeds 15*l.* Before I left England, I made an agreement with two female servants, if they remained four years with me, to give them 15*l.* a year, and if they remained a shorter period, only 12*l.*; they have been in my service 11 months.

544. Are there any female assigned servants in your establishment?—None; and I should admit a female convict into my family with the greatest reluctance, and I believe no one would, if it could be avoided, though they at times turn out very well.

545. Do you know any instance of a landed proprietor attempting to establish a tenantry upon his estate?—None upon any plan; I speak of proprietors dividing their estates into small farms, and selecting the best of their servants, or industrious married people, for tenants, and helping them for a year or two; looking more to the improvement of the property than to the rent; where there have been many small holdings close together, a "rookery" has been the result, and this has created a prejudice prejudice against a tenantry; I am aware of only three small tenantries in my neighbourhood: Mr. George Scott has two, and my brother, Mr. A. Smith, has one, but each tenant had a capital to start upon.

P. T. Smith, Esq.

16 September 1841.

546. Do you think it likely that a tenantry will be established as long as cheap convict labour will be obtained?—No hope of it; the two things seem to me incompatible; the struggle here is for present profit, either to enlarge the estate or pay the creditor; and as long as cheap convict labour can be obtained, few will be troubled with families; besides, in the absence of materials, the advantage of a tenantry is not understood; nor is the lasting evil of a convict population and the present disproportion of the sexes thought of as it deserves; in my opinion, without an extensive immigration, and a stop to the introduction of convicts, there can be no hope either of a respectable tenantry or a sound prosperity.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1841.

William Gunn, Esq., J. P., called in; and Examined.

William Gunn, Esq.

17 September 1841.

547. You are the superintendent of the prisoners' barracks, and a landed proprietor in this colony?—I am.

548. What extent of land do you occupy?—Four thousand acres.

549. How many men do you employ?—About 12 free and ticket-of-leave men, and about 12 assigned servants.

550. Do the two classes of men work well together?—They do not work together; all the free men I have in my employ work by contract; except the overseers.

551. How many men who came free to the colony have you in your employ?—Not above one.

552. What is your reason for separating the free labourers from the others?—I employ the free men by contract, because I have found it by far the most advantageous arrangement.

553. Do you think there would be any difficulties attendant on working the two classes together?—I think there might be some; if a good class of emigrants came out, I do not think they would like being at the same table with prisoners, their habits being in many respects different.

554. What wages do you give your men?—Ten shillings a week to the ticket-of-leave men, as hired servants.

555. Have you any difficulty in getting labourers?—Not now; about three months ago there was considerable difficulty.

556. To what do you attribute that difference?—To the season principally; this is about the dullest time of the year; the seed is in, the thrashing is done, and the hay-making season has not commenced.

557. Do you think an immigration of free labourers to be desirable?—I think there is an opening for good agricultural servants; I should say there is a sufficient number of ordinary servants; in a few weeks there will, however, be a great demand; I may add, that I do not think that the settlers put in the crop this year they otherwise would, had there been a sufficient supply of labour.

558. What duration is the slack season of the year?—About two months—between July and October.

559. Do you know whether there are any men now actually out of employment?—I believe there are many; the cause, however, of their not obtaining employment is, their standing out for high wages.

560. What do you call moderate wages?—Seven shillings a week, and rations; there are ticket-of-leave men who would sooner go about doing nothing, than take less than 10*s.* a week.

561. Do you think that a considerable addition of free labour might be made to our present supply of labour, without displacing those now in employment?—I think that a very considerable number of good servants would find employment, without displacing those now employed; and I think the demand would be found to increase with the importation, inasmuch as very many of the free persons would, in a short time, be occupiers of land, and thus become employers of labour, instead of being in the market themselves.

562. Have you borne in mind the number of probation men who may be expected, within no very long period, to be available as servants?—The probation gangs cannot give us a considerable quantity of useful labour for years to come: out of the prisoners who have hitherto been sent out here, not above one man in five has been found to be of immediate service to the settler as an agricultural labourer; when a man under the assignment system was sent to the settler, not having any knowledge of farming matters, he was set to work at some odd job, and gradually trained until he became of service; but a settler would not pay such a man wages—no man could afford to pay a labourer, for instance, as a farm servant.

563. Do you think, then, that a ticket-of-leave man, coming from a probation gang, would have an inferior chance of being employed, compared with the present ticket-of-leave man?—No question of it; the present ticket-of-leave man has served an apprenticeship; the probation man has learned nothing but to work with pick and shovel.

564. The probation men would, in your opinion, stand a bad chance of being employed, compared with other men?—They would, with the exception of those who were originally agricultural servants, or understood the management of horses.

565. What effect would the circumstance to which we are now referring have upon life and property?—My impression is, that many of these men would not go to work for less wages, and that they would prefer tramping about, with a chance of thieving.

566. Do you not think that many of these men might be employed in working on the tiers?—Not unless they were trained to it.

567. Are not the probation men, in some measure, trained to hard labour?—I do not think they are trained to such labour as that referred to, when employment on the tiers was spoken of; unless hard labour and long hours are really made part of the system, I do not think they will be disposed to undertake very heavy work; and, from the printed instructions, I gather that discipline, not labour, is the object of the probation system.

568. Looking to the probability of a large number of these men being shortly available, do you think that the committee would do safely in recommending any large amount of labour to be introduced?—I think that if a good class of immigrants were brought in, they would soon become

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

William Gunn, Esq.

17 September 1841.

employers; I do not think that immigrants of the class of those who came out by the "Bussorah Merchant" (the last free immigrant ship) would be of any service at all; indeed, I doubt whether they could find employment; the class I refer to as being likely, if introduced, to be of benefit to the colony, are such as might be expected to be sent out, if specially selected in England for particular services here.

569. Suppose two ships laden with immigrants under the system of general emigration were to arrive here within six weeks, do you think they would all immediately find employment?—I should say, there would be great difficulty in getting employment for those who were burdened with large families; masters in the country are not disposed to hire servants if encumbered with large families.

570. What wages should an ordinary labourer receive, to enable him to keep his wife and four children?—No master could afford to give to the husband wages, and support the family; to a gardener, an overseer, a carpenter or other mechanic, wages might be given.

571. Might not the services of the wife be in some way rendered available, so as to enable the master to give wages?—The wife might, perhaps, be employed in washing, or in some kind of out-door work; but I do not consider it desirable to employ the wife as a hired servant; I think it would be better to pay her for each job.

572. Can you give any information as to the wants of the colony in respect to female servants?—Good female servants are much in demand.

573. Have you had any difficulty in disposing of the female prisoners in different services upon the arrival of a female prison ship?—Not any; I found, however, that a considerable number was returned to the Government on the arrival of a female convict ship.

574. What proportion, generally, do those immediately returned on these occasions bear to those who are then assigned from the ship?—I cannot exactly say; about one-third I should think.

575. Reverting to your opinion that many of the immigrants would become occupiers of land, what produce would they raise?—Grain and potatoes; they would also fatten pigs.

576. Would they raise a surplus produce?—They would.

577. Would not the cultivation be of an inferior description?—Most certainly it would.

578. Then the produce would decrease?—Yes; but this would be more than counterbalanced by the increased number of acres in cultivation.

579. Then would not the remunerating price of grain be raised under such circumstances?—I am not prepared to answer.

580. Are you aware whether there has ever been a year in which the colony could not raise sufficient wheat for its own consumption?—In two or three of the 19 years I have been in the colony, I think we have not.

581. To what years do you refer?—The years 1825, 1832 and 1839.

582. What was the price of wheat in those years?—About 21*s.* a bushel.

583. Does it consist with your knowledge, that the deficiency in the years to which you have referred was, in point of fact, balanced, or very nearly so, by the quantity we exported?—In 1825 very little was exported; in 1832 a greater quantity was exported, and in 1839 we raised really more than we consumed, the exportations to Sydney being very large.

584. You have not as yet known any scarcity arising from deficiency of labour?—I have not.

585. Have we enough wheat in the colony now for our own consumption?—About enough.

586. Did the last harvest yield an average crop?—Not in my own district, and I believe generally it was below the average.

587. Do you think that if the crop be an average one this year, the supply will be sufficient?—Barely, I should say; the same breadth of soil was not sown this year as last.

588. To what do you attribute this latter circumstance?—To the fear which the settlers entertain that they would not be able to procure labour for getting the harvest in; in this country the settlers must depend entirely on their own establishments for getting in their crops; there are no villages, the population of which might turn out to assist in such times.

589. Do not the whalers give aid?—Yes, they generally return in time for the harvest.

590. Can the fact of there being a deficiency of labour at the harvest time be taken as a proof that there is a general deficiency for ordinary purposes?—Certainly not.

591. What, in your opinion, is a remunerating price to the grower of wheat?—About 7*s.* 6*d.* a bushel; certainly not under that.

592. Are the wages higher now than they have been?—Yes, higher than they have ever been; some years ago, the common wages for a labourer was 7*s.* a week, or 15*l.* a year; now 25*l.* a year is demanded, and even more.

593. When the assignment system was in force, did not the Government grant loans of men for the harvest?—For many years convicts were lent out for the harvest, but the practice was discontinued about the year 1834, and again resumed in 1839; last year, also, all the available men were lent out, amounting to about 600; I have known as many as 1,000 lent.

594. How many men do you think the Government may be able to lend this year?—About 200.

595. You stated that there was much difficulty in obtaining labourers some short time back; can you mention any immediate causes which may appear to you to account for that deficiency of labour?—Yes, in 1839 a great many men, free by servitude, left the colony for Port Phillip; I watched the times anxiously at that period; when wheat was high, the settlers, as soon as their grain was in the ground, returned as many of their assigned servants as they could to the Government; they also paid off a great many of their free men; assignment from the ships on arrival ceased; the harvest came, and then each establishment having been decreased, the demand for labour from that time was universal.

596. Are the settlers now, in your opinion, in circumstances to employ much additional labour?—I do not believe they are.

597. Are the causes of such inability permanent or not?—The price of wool and stock now is such that no settler can undertake making any extensive improvements on his farm.

598. What price do you think could be certainly calculated upon for wheat?—It is impossible to say; I have known it range from 4*s.* to 20*s.* in 11 months.

599. Were a considerable number of useful immigrants to come out, what would be the effect as regards the men now employed?—They would be reduced to want, or compelled to accept a low rate of wages.

600. Are

William Gunn, Esq.

17 September 1841.

600. Are you aware whether the scarcity in Sydney and in this colony have been contemporaneous?—In 1825 there was a scarcity in both places; so also in 1832; in 1839 there was an average crop here.

601. Have not the scarcities been more frequent at Sydney than here?—They have; at Sydney one has occurred, I believe, every third year; and I should now say the deficiency of their crops, for their own consumption, was permanent.

602. Do you think we may reasonably expect always to find a market for any surplus of grain which may be produced?—I should say the Sydney market would always be open for our supplies at a fair price; the farmers in New South Wales cannot, in my opinion, grow wheat to any great extent; our wheat is much better; the difference in quality will always pay the freight.

603. What do you think would be a fair rate of wages between master and man for a good farming servant, with rations?—From 20*l.* to 25*l.* per annum; I speak now of a good farming man, not an ordinary labourer.

604. Do you think the settler could afford to give that rate of wages?—I do not think you could induce good men to come out for less wages; the question of what wages the master can afford to give depends entirely on the value of the produce; taking the average value of the produce for the last seven years, I think the master could afford to give the rate of wages I have mentioned.

605. What rate of wages do you think the settler could afford to give an ordinary labourer?—About 15*l.* per annum, with rations.

W. T. N. Champ, Esq., called in; and Examined.

W. T. N. Champ, Esq.

606. You are chairman of the commission for investigating titles to land?—I am.

607. You were the proprietor of a farm in the district of New Norfolk?—I was, until within the last 12 months.

608. Did you find any difficulty in obtaining labour?—I always found great difficulty in obtaining free labourers when I required them.

609. What has been the usual rate of wages for free labour?—I believe from 25*l.* to 30*l.* per annum for farm labourers. I never employed but one free man for any length of time; I paid him and his wife, also free, 25*l.* per annum and rations; but those wages were extremely low, as the individuals obtained other advantages, and came to my service under particular circumstances. When they left me, about a year ago, they immediately obtained 50*l.* per annum and rations, which they still receive. I have repeatedly employed ticket-of-leave men, and never paid them less than 25*l.* per annum (exclusive of rations); when employed for a short period, they generally asked from 10*s.* to 14*s.* per week, and rations.

610. Was the free man you have spoken of a superior farm servant?—No; he could neither read nor write.

611. What do you think would be a fair rate of wages for a farm servant?—The wages which the master could afford to give would depend, I conceive, entirely on the price to be obtained for farm produce.

612. Can you calculate on the price of wheat, with any tolerable certainty?—I believe not, at present.

613. What wages do you think settlers can afford to pay labourers at present?—I do not think that, at the present price of farm produce, the settlers can afford to pay their labourers more than from 10*l.* to 15*l.* per annum, and rations.

614. Do you think that a man, his wife, and two or three children, could live on that rate of wages?—A single man, receiving 15*l.* per annum and rations, ought, if prudent and careful of his clothes, &c, to lay by, at least, 5*l.* per annum; but, of course, no man could support a wife and family on that sum.

615. Do you think the wife and children could earn any thing towards their own support?—The wife, certainly, and the children of ten years old and upwards.

616. Do you think that it would be fair to immigrants to introduce them in such numbers as to reduce the rate of wages to the rate you have mentioned?—I do; I believe it is with difficulty that employment can be obtained in England and Ireland at that rate; but I do not think it would answer at all, at present, to introduce immigrants with large families; single persons, or married couples without children, are the class required. The wages asked by persons of that description, at present, are enormous; I have, until within this last week, been paying 45*l.* per annum to a man and his wife, and their allowances cost me at least as much more. The wife was employed as housemaid, and the man as cook; they were convicts, the man holding a conditional pardon, and the woman a ticket-of-leave. The man was almost useless as a servant, but for several months I was unable to obtain better. I have known far better servants, of unstained character, obtained in England (in the country) for 17*l.* per annum, i. e. 10*l.* for a man, and 7*l.* for a woman.

617. You would not have employed that man and his wife if they had had children?—I should not.

618. Do you think that a man and his wife might be placed with advantage, both to themselves and the settler, on a small portion of ground; it being part of the agreement between himself and the proprietor that he should render his occasional services?—With industrious persons of good character, such a plan would, I am sure, answer admirably, particularly in the case of a man with a family.

619. How many agricultural servants do you think might be now introduced, with advantage, into the colony?—I cannot say, as I have not made any calculation; but such settlers as I have conversed with have invariably complained that they cannot get such servants except at a high rate of wages.

620. Under all the circumstances of the colony, to which system of emigration would you give the preference, the bounty system or the general system?—To the bounty system, decidedly; under which the immigrants for each particular service are selected by the friend or agent of the person to whose service they are to be sent. Under that system, also, the immigrants arriving will be certain of employment as soon as they land; and as it is not probable that more will be sent for than are wanted, the supply will be regulated by the demand, both as to the quantity and the species of labour required.

621. Do you think it desirable for the immigrant that he should enter into a contract previous to his embarkation?—If he were a strong, useful man, I should say it would not matter whether he did or not, as he would be sure to obtain employment. On the whole, I think it would be desirable that there should be a contract for a particular service, as the master or his agent would be thereby induced to be more careful in the selection of immigrants; but I do not think the contract should be for a longer period than six months, or twelve at the extreme.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

W. T. N. Champ, Esq.

17 September 1841.

622. Supposing a great number of immigrants to come out, might not some of them find a difficulty in obtaining employment?—Under the bounty system that is not likely to occur; under the other system, if a large number, such as 500, arrived at once, they might possibly not find employment immediately in private service. But I can hardly imagine the possibility of there being a superfluity of labour in this colony, where there are vast forests to be cleared, roads and streets to be made, marshes to be drained, and public works of every description to be carried on; in fact, channels for the employment of labour in every direction. It certainly would not be desirable that large numbers of immigrants should be brought here at once; they should come at regular intervals, and notice of their expected arrival published beforehand; all persons requiring servants being requested to apply at once, stating the description of servant required.

623. Do you think that if two ships were to arrive now with immigrants, employment could be found them?—I should think that 200 or 300 immigrants of a good class would find employment readily; but I cannot speak with any certainty, as I have not made any inquiry on the subject.

624. Do you think there is sufficient capital in the colony for the carrying on of the extensive improvements which you appear just now to have had in view?—I do; I feel satisfied that if labour were less expensive, many such works would be undertaken, both by private individuals, and by public subscription. Besides, if the price of labour be reduced, the capital at present employed will, of course, go further in proportion.

625. Are you aware whether female servants are much in demand?—Respectable female servants are very difficult to be obtained, and the wages given are very high. I am at present paying 20*l.* per annum to one free female, and 15*l.* to another, the latter a girl twelve years of age. The usual rate of wages is, I believe, from 16*l.* to 20*l.* per annum; I have been asked 25*l.* by the description of servants that in England would obtain about 6*l.* or 7*l.* Male domestic servants are also much required; the most inferior description readily obtaining from 25*l.* to 30*l.* per annum. I have been asked 35*l.*; and I know one instance in which a man, formerly a convict, asked 50*l.* per annum as in-door servant, and refused an offer of 40*l.*; this occurred about six or eight months ago.

Mr. Alexander Clark called in; and Examined.

Mr. A. Clark.

626 You are a millwright and engineer?—I am, of the firm of Davidson & Clark.

627. How many men do you employ?—About nine.

628. Are they free, or ticket-of-leave or assigned?—We have no assigned men, all ticket-of-leave or free.

629. Are the free men, men who came free to the colony, or free by servitude?—We have only one man who came free to the colony.

630. What wages do you give your men?—Iron moulders, 3*l.*, and brass moulders, 2*l.* 8*s.* a week; millwrights, 9*s.* a day; common blacksmiths, 8*s.* a day.

631. Do you find any difficulty in obtaining workmen?—Not now; it was different some time back. With the exception of iron and brass moulders, we can get plenty of men.

632. Do you think there is room for the introduction of any workmen of the description employed by you?—I do not think that many additional men could find constant employment.

633. What can a workman and his wife, with a family, live on?—As provisions now are, about 30*s.* to 35*s.* a week.

634. Are you aware whether there is any demand for workmen in the interior?—I cannot say; sometimes farmers have applied to us for men; we have generally been able to supply them.

635. Are you aware whether there are any workmen now out of employment?—I know one or two who want employment.

636. Are they first-rate workmen?—No, they are not.

637. Are they well-conducted men?—Yes, they are decent men.

638. Do you find that men who are out of employment will work for less wages?—No, that is the great drawback here; we have to pay inferior workmen the same wages as good workmen.

639. Are the wages too high, in your opinion?—Yes, for the masters; they might be a few shillings less.

640. Do the men frequently save money?—No, very seldom. We have one man who has received the highest rate of wages the last eight years; he has now a cottage worth about 200*l.*; he is a very sober man, and never missed a day's work.

641. Do you know the price of board and lodging for a single man?—About 15*s.* a week, with plenty of food.

642. Is this a slack time in business?—Yes, we are not so busy as we have been.

643. Could you employ more men than you do at present?—No; we might exchange some of our inferior workmen for better workmen, if they offered.

644. Suppose you required additional workmen, would you prefer sending for them from home, through some agent, or would you be content to take them, without that previous trouble, from some ship arriving here with immigrants?—I should prefer having them selected at home, by some one on whose judgment I could depend.

645. Is there any such business as yours at Launceston?—There are several millwrights there, but there is only one foundry. We had applications some months back from a few millwrights.

646. How many workmen do you think in your line of business could be brought into the colony with a prospect of constant employment?—I should say, about from 14 to 20, in the different branches.

647. Have you sent home for any men under the bounty system?—No. We sent home for two workmen of a particular kind before the Government system was made known; they have not as yet come out; there is great difficulty now in inducing men to leave home; the wages at home, at the present time, for men in our line of business are nearly as high as here.

648. Does it come within your knowledge, whether any of the workmen who have come out in your trade have been of a superior description?—Very few indeed of them that I have met with have been good workmen.

James

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

J. Gordon, Esq.

17 September 1841.

James Gordon, Esq., called in; and Examined.

649. You are a landed proprietor in the district of Richmond?—I am.

650. How long have you been resident in the colony?—Nineteen years.

651. How many servants do you employ in your establishment?—About 20.

652. Are free farm labourers sufficiently numerous in your district?—I do not believe they are.

653. What is the usual rate of wages for good farming servants?—Good men are not to be had under 25 l. per annum.

654. Are shepherds sufficiently numerous in the district?—I think not; I hardly know above three good shepherds.

655. Have you experienced much difficulty in getting in the crops at harvest time?—Very great.

656. Do you think that if the crop this season be an average one, sufficient wheat for the consumption of the colony has been sown?—I do. In my district, I should think the wheat will exceed the consumption of the district five times.

657. Has any mode occurred to you of providing for the extra demand for labour that occurs at harvest time?—In our district we depend upon the ticket-of-leave men, and others who come at that season, knowing that we pay a very high rate of wages; a higher rate, in fact, than is paid at the Shannon, or in Hamilton.

658. Do you think you will be able to get in the crops this year in your district?—With great exertion, I think we may.

659. What is the cause of your paying higher wages to labourers at the harvest time than they do in other districts?—We are able to do so because we are so near water carriage.

660. What do you consider to be a fair rate of wages?—For good farming men, from 16 to 20 guineas a year, with rations.

661. Do you think that a man could maintain his wife and three or four children upon that rate of wages?—I think they might. If I engaged a man with a wife and family, I would build him a cottage, and would employ his wife (if she were so disposed) in hoeing turnips or some other out-door work, at 1 s. a day.

662. What wages can good gardeners obtain?—From 40 l. to 50 l. a year.

663. Are orchards at all cultivated?—Yes, by some. I have never even a gallon of beer for my men—I make sufficient cider for their use.

664. Are you aware whether any of the native-born girls in your district enter domestic service?—I have heard but of very few who have gone into service; they generally marry whalers or boatmen.

665. Have you formed any opinion as to what wages the farmer can afford to pay?—I should say from 15 to 20 guineas a year, with rations, to a really useful man.

666. Do you think that if a considerable number of men were introduced now, they would find employment, without interfering with the men now in employment?—I should say that 2,000 farming labourers would find employment in this colony without displacing those now in employment.

667. What would be the best mode of obtaining good labourers?—The only satisfactory plan, in my opinion, would be to have them selected by good practical farmers in England. The Van Diemen's Land Company have obtained, I believe, very good men from home, who were selected especially for their service.

668. If you sent home to England to a friend to select men for your service, would you expect that the men should bind themselves by a contract to continue in your service for any stated period?—I should expect that they would bind themselves to remain with me for a twelvemonth at least. I would not send for men unless they were bound to my service for some period.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1841.

Joseph Gellibrand Jennings, Esq., J.P., called in; and Examined.

J. G. Jennings, Esq.

18 September 1841.

669. You are the managing director of the Union Bank of Australia?—I am.

670. You are also a deacon of the Independent Congregation in Brisbane-street?—I am.

671. In that latter capacity have you had frequent opportunities of judging of the general state of the lower classes in this colony?—I have.

672. Do you think that the lower classes are in comfortable circumstances generally?—For the most part, I consider that they are.

673. Are you acquainted with the rate of wages now given to mechanics and labourers?—About 8 s. a day to mechanics, and 5 s. to common labourers.

674. Do you consider the present rate of wages sufficient?—I should say it was ample.

675. Do you think 5 s. a day sufficient to maintain a man and his wife and two or three children?—I think it is, with prudence. I have observed that those families are often in the most comfortable circumstances where the highest rate of wages is not obtained; the high wages not unfrequently produces improvidence, while a lower rate, in many cases, induces habits of care and economy.

676. Are the labourers who receive only 5 s. a day as comfortable generally as the mechanics?—In many cases they are more so.

677. When you say that the present rate of wages is ample, would you have it inferred that, in your opinion, they would admit of reduction?—I think the wages of mechanics might be reduced, but not those of labourers.

678. You are superintendent of the Sunday schools belonging to your communion?—I am.

679. How many children attend?—About 150 at one school, and about 90 at the other. There are about 350 altogether on the roll.

680. Are the children clean and neat?—They are usually clean and comfortably clothed.

681. Are they sent to school during the week?—The greater part of them are, certainly; I think I may almost say the whole of them are.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

J. G. Jennings, Esq.

18 September 1841.

682. To what class does the majority of the parents of the children attending the schools belong?—Mechanics and common labourers.

683. Are their families usually well conducted?—I think they are for the most part.

684. Do they prize the advantages afforded them by the Sunday schools?—I think they do. We have one person whose duty it is to call upon the parents and ascertain, whenever their children are absent, the cause of such absence; and we seldom find that the causes are frivolous.

685. Are you aware whether any labourers or mechanics have emigrated from this colony?—A great number emigrated about two years ago.

686. Did they emigrate from dissatisfaction with their state here?—No, I think not. I consider the cause of their emigrating to have been the higher rate of wages offered at that time in the neighbouring colonies, particularly at Port Phillip.

687. Are you aware whether many who emigrated have returned?—I am not aware that any have returned.

688. In visiting the former classes, have you ever heard any apprehension expressed of the immigrants who may arrive interfering with their prospects?—Yes, I have.

689. How do they reason in the matter?—They fear lest there might be a surplus of labour, and that a reduction of wages, or even no employment, would be the consequence.

690. Do you know whether there are many men now out of employment?—Very few, if any, are, I believe, wanting employment.

691. Do you observe any difference, in their dress or otherwise, between the children of the emigrants and the children of parents who are free by servitude?—None whatever.

692. When you have visited them, have you found both classes to be equally comfortable?—I have.

693. Have you any idea of the number of free emigrants that might be introduced into the colony with advantage?—I have not.

694. Are you aware whether there is a demand for female servants?—I have no doubt that there is a great want, at present, of female servants of every description.

695. What would be the result, as regards the convicts, of a very large importation of free labour?—If the wages demanded were not too high, convict labour would be superseded altogether.

696. Is there any indisposition to take ticket-of-leave men or emancipists into private families as servants?—I think the prefereuce would generally be given to a free man. I have employed both classes; and although I should prefer a free man, I must add, that I have had no reason to be dissatisfied with many men, both ticket-of-leave men and emancipists, who have been in my service.

697. Have you observed whether free female servants object to be associated in service with assigned women?—There is great repugnance evinced at first by free female servants to such an association; and although it soon partially subsides, I doubt whether it ever subsides wholly.

698. Do free female servants evince the same degree of repugnance towards the male assigned servants?—They do not. Very many emancipists and ticket-of-leave men marry free women; several free women have married from my service men who have been prisoners.

699. Are you aware what is the present price of wheat?—From 7*s*. to 8*s*. a bushel.

700. Is that a remunerating price?—I consider it to be so.

701. Are you aware whether the cultivation of wheat for the last ten years has given, on the average, a fair remuneration?—I consider it has.

702. Is there any scarcity of money now?—There has been a very great scarcity; the pressure is now, however, partially relieved.

703. Are there great fluctuations in the money market in this colony?—The fluctuations have been very great within the last twelve months.

704. During the last four or five years have there been any great fluctuations?—Not many; I think about two.

705. Do not these fluctuations in the money market affect the employment of labour?—They do, very materially.

706. Do not the prices of wheat and all other commodities fluctuate considerably?—They do; the most steady price is that of wool.

707. Do you think that if there were a more extensive cultivation of wheat, consequent upon a large introduction of free labour, there would be a market for the surplus produce?—I do.

708. When you say that there would be a market for the surplus produce, have you kept in mind the importations of grain that may take place from South America and other places?—These importations would be checked by the extensive growth of wheat in this colony.

709. Supposing the settler to be without any assigned servants, and to cultivate his farm by free labour only, are you of opinion that 7*s* a bushel would be a remunerating price; it being, of course, assumed that the crop is an average one?—I cannot reply with certainty; the settler would be then in an entirely new position. I believe, however, the general impression to be, that 7*s*. would not then be a remunerating price.

710. Are you aware how often scarcities have occurred at Sydney?—A scarcity has generally, I believe, occurred there once in three years. Latterly it has been even more frequent.

711. You are aware that extensive importations of wheat and flour have been made to Sydney from South America?—I am.

712. Do you think that the high price demanded here for wheat last year led the Sydney merchants to look to South America for supplies?—Unquestionably it did. At the time referred to, 18*s*. and 20*s*. a bushel was demanded here for wheat. The market at Sydney is now full; flour has gone to Melbourne from thence. I believe it is well known that, if the Sydney merchants could rely upon obtaining wheat here at 8*s*. a bushel, they would not send to other quarters for supplies.

713. You are aware, that some time back several ships arrived here with free immigrants; is it within your knowledge whether complaints were made by them as to their treatment on board ship?—Complaints were very frequent; some were, as might be expected, frivolous, but others were well founded. The emigrants by the "Thomas" and the "Bussorah Merchant" had, I think, great cause to complain.

714. Were the immigrants who came out under the general system of immigration then in force of a good description?—I should say, speaking generally, that they were not; the most useful were the free women.

Mr.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Mr. J. Hiddlestone.

18 September 1841.

Mr. John Hiddlestone called in; and Examined.

715. You are a member of the Wesleyan body, and a class leader?—I am.

716. In that latter capacity have you visited the families of the labouring classes in this town?—I have.

717. Have you found them to be generally comfortable?—Those that are industrious are generally comfortable.

718. What is the ordinary rate of wages for a labouring man?—About 4 s. 4 d. a day.

719. Can a man support his wife and two or three children upon those wages?—With prudence, and at the present prices of provisions, I think he might.

720. You have Sunday-schools in connexion with your communion?—Yes; I am superintendent.

721. Do the children who attend your Sunday-schools attend any school during the week?—The greater part of them.

722. Are they decently clothed?—Yes.

723. Are you aware whether any of the poorer classes who attend your places of worship are out of employment?—I am not aware that any are.

724. Have you known any instance of a labouring man with a family saving money?—I have known several; but in each of these the wife contributed towards the support of the family.

725. Do you know what is the general rate of house-rent for labouring men?—Sometimes two agree to a house between them, for which they pay from 8 s. to 10 s. a week; the average rent for accommodation for a labourer and his family is from 5 s. to 6 s. a week.

726. Is there any distress among the labouring classes at present?—I have not heard of any.

George Abbott.

George Abbott called in; and Examined.

727. You are a free emigrant?—I am.

728. What ship did you come by?—The "Winwick."

729. When did she arrive?—In June.

730. What trade are you?—I am a coach-body maker.

731. In whose employ are you?—Mr. Fraser's.

732. What wages do you receive?—Ten shillings a week; I am under contract to Mr. Fraser for three years.

733. You entered into that contract in England?—I did.

734. What wages did you receive in England?—About 2 l. 5 s.

735. Were you well accommodated on board ship?—Not so well as we might have been; the captain was a queer tempered man; we were promised potatoes and soup; the captain stopped both soon after we had sailed; the salt beef was so bad for six weeks that we could not eat it; we were obliged to make shift as we could, living principally on our own stores; we had also to keep ourselves three weeks in the docks, as the ship did not sail at the appointed time; the captain made a deduction for that when we arrived here; the captain was, however, very kind to my wife when she was ill; she was confined during the voyage.

736. Were your berths comfortable?—They were very much confined; but we were as well accommodated as the ship would allow; she was too small to carry many passengers; but that was our own fault, as we chose our own ship.

737. How do you find yourself accommodated in the colony, as regards lodging?—I have a cottage, with a garden, which I have taken for five years, at 8 s. a week; I have to finish three of the rooms, which I shall do in my leisure time.

738. What did you pay in London for lodging?—From 6 s. to 8 s. a week for two good rooms: small rooms might be had from 4 s. to 5 s., in some back street, and in a neighbourhood not liked by tradesmen; here, however, we have to buy our own water. In Leamington, and in the country, I have got as good a cottage for 4 s. 6 d. a week.

739. What wages did you earn in the country?—From 36 s. to 2 l. a week.

740. Do you find living here dearer or cheaper than in England?—Near about the same.

741. Were you in constant employment when in England?—No; that was my principal object in coming out here, that I might have plenty of work; sometimes I have been a month out of employment in England.

742. Do you regret having entered into a contract?—No, I think it is a surety for a man; if four or five workmen came out together, and I happened to be the worst, I might be rejected; some men might like the freedom of entering any employ, and might think the contract to be a tie; I think it more secure; if a man can bring 200 l. or 300 l. with him, it does not then much matter; but if he has very little money, it is best to be bound for three years.

743. You think that men would more readily come out with an engagement than without one?—Hardly any would come out without an engagement; very few are inclined to come at all; no good men would come without an engagement.

744. Would not men out of employment come without being engaged?—Men do not like to come on a venture; a man who had money might come; if we had come without an engagement, we should have been on our own hands when we landed: instead of this, when we landed our wages began directly.

745. Do you think that men would like to know the sort of man whose service they might have to enter when coming out here?—They would; we knew Mr. Fraser through our master; I should not have come myself without I had got an engagement; they do not speak favourably at home of this place; we find things better than we expected.

746. Are you quite satisfied with the change you have made?—Highly satisfied; I should not wish to return to England so long as I continue as I am now.

747. Was there any surgeon on board the "Winwick?"—No surgeon.

748. Had you plenty of water?—We had; it was rather bad before we got to the Cape.

749. How many passengers were there on board?—Sixteen.

750. Excepting the confinement of your wife, had you any sickness on board?—None.

751. Do you find your garden an assistance to you?—Yes, in providing us with garden-stuff.

752. Are not milk and butter dearer here than at home?—They are; and bread is dearer; meat, tea and sugar are cheaper.

753. Is slop-clothing dearer here?—About the same.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

George Abbott.

18 September 1841.

754. Is not malt liquor much dearer?—Yes; in London we paid 3*d.* a pot for porter; here we have to pay 1*s.*; the porter we get here is much better.

755. Are you able to save money?—Not yet; I have had to spend a good deal of money in getting things comfortable, buying furniture and other things; by and bye, however, I hope to save a little.

756. How many children have you?—Four; one nine years old, another five, a third four, and the youngest four months old.

757. How many master coach-makers are there in Hobart Town?—Two.

758. Is there plenty of work for the trade?—I do not think there is work at present for more than are now in the trade.

759. Have you more to pay for schooling than in England?—Yes; I pay 1*s.* a week for the eldest.

760. Are not the hours of work less here than in England?—Yes; here we work 10 hours a day all the year round; at home we work 12; but then at home we have tea half hours, and an hour on Monday morning; then, at Christmas, we have what are called flag nights, when we leave off work at dark; so that the difference in the time is not quite so great as might appear at first sight.

761. Are there not benefit societies in England?—Yes, there are several in our trade; some for giving an allowance when we are out of employment, and travelling, perhaps, for work; others for giving an allowance in case of sickness.

762. Are there any benefit societies in this colony?—None that I have heard of.

763. Have you any agreement with your master in case of your falling ill?—No, not any.

764. Have you had occasion to have a doctor?—I have not.

765. Are you aware whether medical attendance is more expensive here than at home?—I have understood that it is.

Charles Hutchins called in; and Examined.

Charles Hutchins.

766. By what ship did you emigrate to this colony?—By the "Winwick."

767. In whose employ are you?—Mr. Fraser's.

768. What is your particular trade?—I am a coach-smith.

769. What wages do you receive?—Three pounds a week.

770. What was your usual rate of wages in London?—About 2*l.* 5*s.* a week; if I worked by the piece, I have earned as much as 4*l.* a week.

771. Did you find constant employment?—No, very precarious; that was my object in coming out, that I might get regular work.

772. Had you accurate information respecting this colony before you came out?—I found great difficulty in obtaining any information; I heard the rate of wages given here; I wrote to the editor of the "Dispatch," and I learned from him the prices of provisions, and the price of land.

773. You are under a contract for three years with Mr. Fraser?—I am.

774. Through whom did you make the contract?—Through Mr. Carter, as agent for Mr. Fraser.

775. Did you inquire about Mr. Fraser before you came out?—Yes; we had an opportunity of knowing Mr. Fraser's character.

776. Do you think it better for a man to come out under an engagement than to come free to enter any employ he pleases?—I consider it much better to have an engagement.

777. Suppose a free passage had been offered to you, would you have come out without an engagement?—No, I would not; there are not many in our trade who would come under any circumstances; I belonged to a society 400 strong, and not one of them was willing to come out.

778. What is the cause of that unwillingness to emigrate here?—The long distance principally; then many of the men are given to drink, and they fancy they could not get so much to drink here as at home.

779. How are you accommodated as regards lodging?—I and one of the men who came out with me rent a cottage between us; we pay 40*l.* a year; it has eight rooms and a garden.

780. Do you think there is any room for more workmen in your trade?—One in each branch might, I think, find employment in this town.

781. Can you save money?—I have hardly had time to tell; there is a considerable outlay at first in getting furniture.

782. Is the expense of furnishing greater here than at home?—Two-thirds greater; we cannot get the description of furniture we want; things are either very good and expensive, or very rough; the furniture that working-men use at home is not made here.

783. Were you comfortable during your voyage?—Not so comfortable as we might have been; we were deprived of several extra things that were paid for by Mr. Fraser; our captain insisted on having the passage money all paid before we sailed; there was plenty of fresh provision put on board, but the captain used to drink occasionally, and he was then very suspicious: if he saw us talking apart, he fancied we were going to mutiny, and then stopped our provisions for punishment; on the whole we were pretty well off, and should have done well, had not the captain been of rather a queer temper. The beef that was served out was very bad; and it was well for us that we had some small stores of our own on board.

784. Have workmen in your trade generally constant employment at home?—There are a great many who have not; I have had constant employment for four years, but I have known many out of employment for three months together.

785. Are you satisfied with having emigrated?—I am perfectly satisfied; I like the climate, and it appears to be a prosperous place.

786. Would you recommend any of your fellow-workmen to come out?—I should not hesitate to do so if there were no assigned servants.

787. What is the nature of the objection you have mentioned?—I do not think a man can command a fair price for his labour while workmen are assigned.

788. Do you think that good and respectable workmen would come out here without an agreement?—I do not think good men would; some might, that is to say, some who would work one week and play the next; but steady men, and men who could be depended upon, would not come out on a chance; in our trade, men can earn a good deal of money in a short time; some men earn a good deal of money, and then do nothing as long as it lasts; and that suits some men better than constant employment.

789. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Charles Hutchins.

8 September 1841.

789. Do you find any annoyance from the convicts?—No. There is one man who has been a convict in Mr. Fraser's employ; he has been with him a long time; he appears to be a very decent respectable man; he was known to some of us before he was sent out.

790. Is your wife satisfied?—Yes, she is quite reconciled to the change; she has found things better than she expected.

George Gaulton called in; and Examined.

George Gaulton.

791. By what ship did you come to this colony?—The "Winwick."

792. In whose employ are you?—Mr. Fraser's, the coachmaker; I am under contract to him for three years.

793. What branch of the business do you follow?—I am a coach-painter.

794. What wages do you receive?—Two pounds sixteen shillings a week.

795. What wages did you get in London?—Two pounds five shillings.

796. Could you obtain constant employment in London?—No; in the winter season, business is very slack; sometimes four or five weeks out of employment; we are not the same as workmen in other branches of the business, we cannot speculate; in other branches, men may prepare work beforehand; we cannot do so.

797. What induced you to emigrate?—To get constant employment was the principal inducement.

798. Did the offer of the contract with Mr. Fraser lead you to come out?—Not exactly; because I had heard from several people about this place; I contemplated coming out six months before I did; I had partially engaged with the New Zealand Company; I had constant employment at the time I left England.

799. What sort of lodging have you obtained?—I have a cottage, for which I pay 8*s.* a week, with a small garden.

800. What rent did you pay in London?—Six or seven shillings a week for two rooms, not to be compared with the cottage I now have. Rent is very dear in London.

801. Is there any difference in the rate of living?—I think there is a little advantage in favour of London; several little articles are dearer here: mutton is cheaper here, beef and pork are dearer; butter is much dearer here; in bread there is not much difference; vegetables are cheaper at home.

802. Is your wife satisfied with the change?—Yes, perfectly.

803. How many children have you?—Three.

804. Do you find many persons to associate with?—I have not found any as yet,—in fact, I have been advised not to seek company.

805. You associate with your fellow passengers?—Yes, we keep very much together.

806. Are you satisfied with your change?—Yes, I am quite satisfied.

807. Do you think you have done right in making a contract?—I think so—I approve of it myself—I think it far preferable; a few pounds soon go if you have to live on your own hands while looking for employment: under the contract the employment is immediate.

808. Do you think that respectable workmen in your line would come out without an engagement?—Very few would; the generality do not like the idea of coming at all; the contract we have entered into is, I think, very fair and just; it has been rather expensive to Mr. Fraser bringing us out, and I do not think it would be fair for him unless he was certain of our remaining with him some time.

809. Do you like the climate?—Yes, much better than the climate of England.

810. Is schooling for your children dearer here than at home?—Yes, I pay 6*d.* a week for each of my children who go to school.

William Westcott called in; and Examined.

William Westcott.

811. By what ship did you come to this colony?—The "Winwick."

812. In whose employ are you?—Mr. Fraser's; I am under contract to him for three years.

813. What is your trade?—I am a coach-trimmer.

814. What rate of wages do you receive?—Two pounds sixteen shillings a week.

815. What rate of wages did you receive in London?—Two pounds two shillings to Two pounds five shillings.

816. Were you in constant employment?—I was not; I was sometimes out for a few months.

817. What induced you to come out?—I was out of employment, and I thought I would venture it; I had no great confidence when coming out.

818. Did you get any information respecting the colony before coming out?—No; I could not get any information; I made inquiries at the Colonial Office, but I did not succeed in getting information.

819. Would you have come out without the contract with Mr. Fraser?—Certainly not.

820. Would you not have come if you had been told that you could get constant employment?—No; I would not have come even then—I should not have had confidence.

821. Do you know whether any of your fellow-workmen were disposed to come out?—I do not think that there were any inclined to come; they thought the wages not sufficiently high, for one thing.

822. If Mr. Fraser wished now to get a few additional coach-trimmers, under a contract, do you think he could obtain them?—Yes, I think he could.

823. If you were to write home to your acquaintances, and tell them that they could obtain employment here, do you think any of them would come, upon the strength of your statement, without having an agreement with any one here?—I do not think they would; a man might, if he had a little money; the general opinion amongst our men is against emigrating here; they all advised me not to have any thing to do with it, when the contract was offered me.

824. Are you married?—No, I am a single man.

825. Have you not a sister who came out with you?—Yes; she lives with me, and takes in needlework.

826. Do you think she could earn her own livelihood?—I have every reason to believe she could.

827. What do you pay for lodging?—I have part of a house with another man, who came out with me; we pay 40*l.* a year; it has a small flower-garden attached to it.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

William Westcott.

18 September 1841.

828. Do you consider your lodging more comfortable than that which you had in London?—Yes; in the heart of London mechanics are obliged to put up with one or two rooms.

829. Are your expenses as great here as you expected?—They are not.

830. Are you satisfied with the change you have made?—Perfectly so at present; I have no reason to complain.

831. Is your sister satisfied?—Perfectly so.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1841.

A. F. Kemp, Esq.

16 October 1841.

Anthony Fenn Kemp, Esq., called in; and Examined.

832. You are a resident landed proprietor in this colony?—I am; I reside at Mount Vernon, at the Cross Marsh.

833. What may be the extent of land which you possess at Mount Vernon?—Between 4,000 and 5,000 acres.

834. Will you be good enough to inform the committee what quantity you have under cultivation?—About 400 acres, under wheat, barley, oats, &c.

835. How many men have you employed on this land?—Upwards of 20.

836. Are any of these free men?— Only one, whom I have hired within the last few days; the rest are assigned, and ticket-of-leave convicts.

837. What wages do you give to your ticket-of-leave convicts?—I give them 25 l. to 35 l. per annum, with board and lodging, according as their services are more or less valuable; a farming man who is capable of mowing, ploughing or reaping, cannot be obtained at a less rate of wages.

838. What wages do you give your shepherds?—To one, who is an emancipated convict, I give 35 l. per annum, to another 25 l.

839. In the event of these men leaving you, do you think you would experience any difficulty in finding others, at the same rate of wages?—Very great difficulty indeed; I know not where I could obtain men of the description I have named, at less wages.

840. What is the wages of the ordinary classes of labourers?—None under 20 l. per annum; I allude here to the ticket-of-leave convicts.

842. What number of immigrants could, in your opinion, be introduced with safety into this colony?—I should say from 8,000 to 10,000.

843. What description of emigrants do you think it most desirable to have imported?—Shepherds, ploughmen, carpenters, blacksmiths, &c. &c.; in a word, the several classes of labourers whose services are found to be requisite on a farming establishment.

844. You are one of the oldest residents in this colony?—I am; I have been resident here about 23 years.

845. Have you known any instances of scarcity during this period?—I have several, arising from bad seasons and drought, to which this colony is very much subject; had there been a sufficient quantity of land under cultivation, a scarcity from seasons of drought must, to a certain extent, have been prevented; and this can only be done, I think, by a large importation of agricultural labourers.

846. Do you not think that the scarcity has, in some instances, arisen from our supplying other colonies?—Yes, in some few instances.

847. Is it within your knowledge that there is a great portion of the grain raised last year at present on hand?—I really cannot say, of my own knowledge; I am convinced that if there was a sufficient agricultural population, this colony could well support itself, without any supplies from other colonies.

848. Has not this colony been able to export grain?—It has, ever since I have been here.

849. Do you think labour is less abundant now than it has generally been?—Since the discontinuance of assignment, labour has become less abundant; many men ordered to me as assigned servants I would not employ as ticket-of-leave men; I never looked to employ ticket-of-leave convicts when I could procure assigned servants, because the expense was so great; during the time of assignment, I have given a ticket-of-leave convict 20 l. per annum.

850. Do you know in what manner the 10,000 immigrants could advantageously be employed?—For agricultural purposes, with a view to enable us to compete with foreigners in exporting corn to the Isle of France, &c. &c.

851. What price do you think could be obtained for our wheat at the Isle of France?—I really cannot say, perhaps 7 s. per bushel; you look for a profit on your return cargo.

852. Is our wheat more highly prized than the American wheat, and that raised in other colonies?—I should say so; I believe, however, the Cape wheat is equally prized with ours.

853. Can Sydney be depended upon as a market for our wheat?—I cannot speak decidedly upon this point.

854. At what rate do you think we could raise wheat, so as to enable us to compete with America?—I cannot grow wheat under 80 s. per quarter, considering the high price of labour; with assigned servants, we could have raised wheat at 7 s. a bushel, having no wages to pay; but when you come to pay a man 25 l. per annum, with rations and lodging, you cannot raise wheat under 80 s. per quarter; labour is very cheap in America; I am decidedly of opinion that we cannot compete with foreign markets at the present high rate of wages given to labourers; the wages of a ploughman should be reduced to from 16 l. to 20 l. per annum, with board; at this rate of wages, I think, we could bring wheat into the market at 8 s. a bushel; the small farmer cannot exist under the present high rate of wages, and ticket-of-leave convicts will not work without you give them enormous wages.

855. Do you think that a ploughman could support himself at 16 l. per annum?—If single, it is sufficient for his support; if married, his wife would find employment in some capacity on the farm, as a laundress, &c.; I recently employed a married man and his wife, to whom I gave 45 l. per annum.

856. Had they any children?—No; if they had, I should not have hired them; I omitted to state that I have now an overseer to whom I give 60 l. per annum; but this is a particular case.

857. It

857. It is, then, your opinion, that from 16 l. to 20 l. per annum, with rations, is adequate wages for an unmarried agricultural labourer?—It is quite sufficient; it is as much as the farmer can afford to give, and as much as the labourer ought to expect; if a married man, his wife will receive an adequate remuneration for her services.

858. How would you propose that the 10,000 immigrants should come out, at once, or would you limit your importation within a certain period, as circumstances might require?—I would recommend their being brought out within three years, and the supply to be made equal to the demand.

859. Would you have them introduced under the bounty system, or under the Government general immigration system?—Under the general immigration system; I think it very desirable that shall arriving with immigrants should be notified in the papers, to give an opportunity to the master to see the man, and the man to see the master; they should make their own selections; I look upon the present system of the large proprietors of land sending home, say, for 30 immigrants and upwards, as pregnant with much evil to the community at large, by withdrawing from the land fund large sums of money, and by importing free labour at a very moderate price, thereby enabling them to grow wheat cheaper than those who have not the means of employing private agents in England to provide them with immigrants; for 50 landed proprietors sending home for 40 immigrants, would abstract from the land fund 40,000 l., which would almost make a monopoly of the fund; I would submit to the committee, that no proprietor of land should be allowed to send for a greater number than 10 immigrants to be paid for from the land fund; and that general immigration should be allowed to a sufficient extent to enable those not having agents in England to be supplied with free labour.

860. Would you not allow those, not having private agents in England, to avail themselves of the services of the Government agents, to send them such immigrants as they might require?—I think that the local government should make itself acquainted with the wants of the community in this respect, and then apply to the Government agents to send out the different classes required.

861. Do you think that there is, at present, a want of domestic servants?—There is a great want of all classes of domestic servants at this moment.

862. Can you inform the committee whether you think that any difficulty in practice would be found from the employment of free emigrants and convicts together on the same farm?—From personal observation, I must say, that I do not think they would be likely to harmonize.

863. From your own knowledge, are you of opinion that respectable free immigrants would take their meals with assigned convicts?—I feel convinced they would not take their meals with assigned servants; but they might not have any strong objection to do so with ticket-of-leave men, under particular circumstances. I have separate places for the free immigrants and ticket-of-leave men to take their meals.

864. In recommending the introduction of 10,000 immigrants to meet the demands of the colonists for labourers, have you kept in view the number of ticket-of-leave men who may be expected, within a few years, to come from the probation gangs?—I have not lost sight of this fact; but I should prefer, and I believe this is the feeling among the settlers generally, paying free men, to paying ticket-of-leave men from the probation gangs. If I am to give 25 l. per annum, I would much prefer giving it to a competent free man, than to any ticket-of-leave man.

865. Do you think that if the 10,000 immigrants were introduced, the men from the probation gangs would also find employment?—Looking forward to a great increase in agriculture, I think they would gradually find employment.

866. Do not you think the probable effect would be to lower wages?—Most certainly.

867. If so large an importation of labourers take place, do you not think the effect might be to cause those not finding employment to take to the bush, and thus render property and life insecure?—I think the Government, if they propose to deluge us with convicts, ought to find sufficient protection to prevent the mischiefs which you contemplate may ensue from the probation convicts not finding employment; in two points of view I consider an extensive immigration not only highly desirable, but absolutely indispensable: first, that the great natural resources which it is undeniable this colony possesses, may thereby be fully brought out and developed; and secondly, and especially, that by the importation of free immigrants, so as to preponderate over the convict population, a healthy tone and feeling of morality may be diffused through the working classes, and the character of the colony by this means elevated.

868. Do you consider that any restriction should be placed by the Government on the amount of wages to be demanded by men from the probation gangs?—Most certainly, they should be restricted in their demands.

T. Nowlan, Esq., called in; and Examined.

869. You are a landed proprietor?—I am; I farm my own land, situated on the South Esk River, within 12 miles of Launceston.

870. What number of men have you employed on your farm?—About 30 men on the farm and sheep run.

871. What quantity of land have you under cultivation?—About 400 acres, under wheat, barley, potatoes, turnips, oats and meadow.

872. Are the men in your service free?—I have eight free men, six ticket-of-leave, and the rest assigned servants.

873. What wages do you give your free men?—From 10 l. to 50 l.; the latter sum to a practical overseer; from 30 l. to 40 l., working overseer, plough and seedsman, and head shepherd; from 20 l. to 25 l. ploughmen and shepherds; from 10 l. to 20 l. labourers and grown boys. To all these men I give rations in addition to their wages.

874. Do you find any difficulty in procuring a sufficient number of free labourers at these rates of wages?—None; at harvest time additional men are required, the wages being governed by the state of the weather and crops, as in other countries.

875. Are these rates of wages too high to enable you to raise grain?—If all my establishment were free men, these rates would certainly be too high; any thing above 20 l. is, in my opinion, too high for agricultural labourers.

876. Are you of opinion that the introduction of free labour is desirable or necessary; and, if so, what do you consider to be the most advantageous mode upon which to conduct immigration, the

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

T. Nowlan, Esq.

16 October 1841.

bounty system, or the Government general immigration system, or a modified system?—I am of opinion, that the importation of free labour is both desirable and expedient; and I would recommend the adoption of a modified system of immigration; I think it desirable that parties in this colony should be allowed the opportunity of selecting through friends, and getting out such immigrants as they may require through the Commissioners at home, and without any contracts whatever, leaving it optional with the immigrants, on arrival, to engage with the parties that invited them or not.

877. Have you any idea what number of immigrants could find employment within the next two years?—That depends, in my opinion, entirely on the state of the market, which is, of course, subject to much fluctuation. It may open at a high price at the commencement of the season; the consequence of which would be to induce merchants to send to their correspondents in other countries to supply them with grain, on a large importation of which agriculture is for a time discouraged and depressed.

878. Do you not think that the importation of foreign grain, and consequent discouragement to agriculture, would have the effect of throwing a considerable number of farm labourers out of employment?—The effect would be, not to remove agricultural labourers from employment, but simply to reduce the price of wages, by which the large proprietors would be induced and enabled to get their lands cleared and prepared to carry a heavier stock, and rendering it available for cultivation and renting to practical or working farmers, &c. Thorough-bred farmers will always command high wages; first, as working overseers, afterwards as superintendents; and will soon be enabled to save sufficient capital to work a farm on their own account, which, from their practical knowledge and experience, they can profitably manage.

879. Have you any immigrants brought out under the bounty system?—I have lately obtained six, under indentures executed at Bristol, cancelled on their arrival, and a fresh agreement made for a year. Having frequently observed that parties engaged for a longer period were not contented or satisfied; and, on the other hand, the employers were constantly disappointed in not finding their servants at first every thing they expected.

880. What description of immigrants would you recommend to be imported into this colony?—I would recommend sound and healthy immigrants being obtained, no matter of what description they may be; provided they have been accustomed to labour, they can be made useful for the general purposes of agriculture; I know it is frequently said, that a man brought out here from the towns in England cannot be taught to mow or plough, &c., or in fact, be made a useful labourer. My experience and personal observation, however, in this colony, enable me to say that this is a very erroneous notion; I have myself seen the perfect use of the improved cradle scythe acquired in a few days by one of the class to which I have just alluded; and I could state several other instances of a similar kind; one of the best ploughmen in the district is a Lancashire weaver.

881. What description of families would it, in your opinion, be most desirable to have imported into this colony?—A single man is most convenient to settlers, or a man of not more than 45 or 50 years of age, having a family of children from nine years and upwards, as children at this age could be made useful in a farm; and when the father has saved sufficient to rent a farm, the children will be of incalculable advantage to him in his old age, while he will be their best protector, and inculcator of frugality and thrift. I think a great mistake has been made in endeavouring to get out younger families, who have generally become a tax on their employers.

882. What, in your opinion, would be fair wages for agricultural labourers for the next four or five years?—So long as the settlers continue to furnish the labourer (and we have it from good authority (M'Culloch) that he is the highest and best-fed labourer in the world) with rations, as they now do, I think that any thing above 10*l.* per annum would make the condition of a labourer here better than it is in England, where the best in-door farm servant seldom gets more, with coarser fare; and the annual earnings of an Irish labourer does not exceed it, though finding himself.

883. Where may we in general expect to find a market for our wheat?—I consider Sydney, and the other ports of New Holland, or new settlements, the market to which we must look for our surplus grain; as for years to come, if not at all times, frequent droughts prevail in these countries.

884. Do you think the Americans can compete with us in exporting grain?—Should flour be admitted free of duty from the United States, it will, for a long time, be a formidable rival to that article manufactured in these colonies; as, from a late improvement of drying flour after being ground, it is said that it will keep for years without becoming sour, as formerly. From the cheapness of labour in South America they can afford to bring wheat to the Sydney market at from 4*s.* to 5*s.* per bushel at a profit.

885. What is the difference in value between our wheat and the South American wheat in the Sydney market?—The difference is about 1*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* per bushel in our favour. In ordinary seasons Van Diemen's Land wheat generally sells from 7*s.* to 10*s.* per bushel at Sydney.

886. Do you think that we can supply Sydney at that rate, so as to remunerate the grower?—I do not consider that any thing less than 7*s.* per bushel would compensate the grower. The wheat market has hitherto been very fluctuating, owing, in some degree, to the difficulty of conveying, at all times, grain from the interior to the ports of export, and which the improvement in the roads now in progress and contemplated will tend greatly to obviate, and act as a bounty to the erection of mills and corn stores throughout the interior, to the benefit of the farmer. The erection of siloes, also, in New South Wales is of much importance, as formerly grain could not be stored at Sydney without being destroyed by weevil, which will prevent ruinously low prices, as the capitalist can safely speculate.

887. Does this answer refer to the present price of labour, or is it to be understood as contemplating a reduction?—I refer to the present price of labour, assuming that there are free and convict labourers in every establishment.

888. In proposing the introduction of immigrants to this colony, are you aware that a great number of men may be expected within the next two years to emerge from the probation gangs; and if so, is your recommendation founded upon the conviction that there will be sufficient employment for immigrants in addition to those men, or has it arisen from supposing that the settlers would employ immigrants in preference to the men from the probation gangs?—I am fully aware of this fact. But considering the immense quantity of land which is at present lying waste and uncultivated throughout the colony, from the want of a sufficient number of labourers, I feel assured that if immigrants, say to the number of 2,000, were to arrive here annually for several years to come, they would find ample employment, in addition to the men from probation gangs; the greater portion of them to be landed at Hobart Town and Launceston, if possible, during the months of October, November and December, at which periods the harvest demands would ensure speedy engagements. The settlers would then be able to clear their lands, and prepare them for the reception and growth of rain, which they cannot now do; and as labour would become abundant, its price must decrease, and thus the farmer would be enabled to carry on his agricultural operations still more extensively. The agricultural resources of the island being thus brought out and improved, the value of land would be enhanced, and the condition of the colony considerably raised. As regards the men who will have emerged from the probation gangs in the next two years, I know that there exists among many settlers a feeling of reluctance to employ them if they can possibly avoid it. This arises from their having to pay wages to men who have, perhaps, never been engaged in any kind of agricultural labour. The settler is in want of agricultural labourers; there are no free immigrants to be obtained; and some of these men from the probation gangs come and offer their services, and demand an exorbitant rate of wages: the settler has no alternative, he engages these men, although they may have never laboured on a farm, and he pays them what they have demanded; while, at the same time, he has to teach and train them to what they are to do. These are the views of many settlers, though not of the poorer farmers, or the majority. For my own part I look forward with some degree of gratification to the time when these men will have emerged from the probation gangs, and their services made available to the settler. They will, in my opinion, during their term of probation, have been broken in to habits of industry, and trained to be useful; they will have become inured to the climate; and they will be more under control, from the knowledge that their state of comparative freedom is entirely dependent on a continuance of good conduct; and when they subsequently become wholly free, the labour market will be so supplied, that they will just obtain what wages they are worth.

889. Do you consider that any restriction should be placed by the Government on the amount of wages to be demanded by men from the probation gangs?—I would strongly advise such a measure during the first period of trial, though it may not be fully acted upon by all employers. I would add, that I entirely concur in the opinion which has been given before the committee this day by Mr. Kemp, that the most beneficial effects may be anticipated, in a moral point of view, from the introduction of immigrants to that extent that the free may exceed the convict population.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1841.

William Kimberley, Esq., called in; and Examined.

890. WHERE do you reside?—At Bagdad.

891. What extent of land do you possess in this colony?—Two thousand three hundred acres at Bagdad, and Eight thousand four hundred at Salt Pan Plains.

892. How many acres of land have you under cultivation?—Rather more than 400 acres of wheat, 100 acres of hay, 70 acres of oats and barley, and 150 acres of turnips.

893. How many servants do you employ?—Never more than 20, except during the harvest. Of those men, nine are assigned servants, and the rest free or ticket-of-leave

894. What wages do you give your men?—It depends upon circumstances. The wages I give my free men vary usually from 20 l. to 25 l. per annum; but then they are select men, otherwise I would not give that rate.

895. In what way are the men to whom you give the last-mentioned rate of wages employed?—Principally as ploughmen; each man, however, employed is capable of taking charge of a pair of horses.

896. Do you give lodgings and rations in addition to that rate of wages?—Yes, with lodging and rations; but the men find their own bedding.

897. What is the difference between the whole expense to you of an assigned servant, and a free man employed at the rate of wages you have mentioned?—I have been very fortunate in the assigned servants I have obtained. I would not exchange my assigned men for free men; and I therefore save the whole of the wages given to a free man by the employment of an assigned servant, with the exception of about four guineas a year for clothing, and a small sum for tobacco.

898. Do you find any difficulty in obtaining labour?—Some time back there was a great difficulty in obtaining free labourers. Men can now be more easily obtained.

899. Did you send home for any free servants under the bounty system?—I did.

900. Have you received any advices from the agent whom you employed?—I have not. I do not expect to hear from him before the month of January.

901. To which system of emigration do you give the preference—the bounty system, or the general system, as it is termed?—I prefer the bounty system, because select men can be obtained under it. When obtaining servants under the general system of emigration, it is, of course, a complete lottery whether you obtain good servants or not.

902. For how long a period are the men for whom you have sent to be bound to you?—For three years.

903. What wages have you agreed to give them?—To the six ploughmen for whom I have sent, I have agreed to give 20 l. a year, with lodging and rations; and to a blacksmith and a carpenter, 30 l. a year each. I have requested that three out of the six men may be married men, without children; and I have agreed to give the wife 10 l. a year as wages, in consideration of her undertaking the charge of the station where the men are placed, and thereby save the services of a man.

904. Do you think 20 l. per annum a fair rate of wages between master and man?—I think no master can afford to pay more; if the man be a good servant, I think his services are worth that rate of wages.

905. Do you think a man and his wife, and three or four children, could live upon 30 l. per annum?—Yes, I think they might.

906. Do you think the wife could render the services you have referred to, and attend to her children?—Yes, I think she could cook the provisions and attend to such an establishment as I mean, where there are not more than four or five men.

907. How long have you been a settler in this colony?—Thirty years.

908. Do you remember any years when there was a scarcity of wheat?—The colony has always, I think,

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

W. Kimberley, Esq.

26 October 1841.

I think, been capable of supplying itself; last year the crops were deficient; my usual quantity of grain is 6,000 bushels; last year I had only 1,000 bushels.

909. Was the deficiency in the crops general?—I should say that it was.

910. Are you of opinion that, notwithstanding the deficiency of the crops last year, a supply was raised sufficient for the demands of the colony?—I am perfectly satisfied that the supply was sufficient; I should even be inclined to think that there was some surplus.

911. Has the colony always been able to command a market for its wheat?—Not always a paying market.

912. How many acres of land can a good ploughman manage?—From 60 to 100 acres with two horses, if he be allowed to remain steadily at his work, and not required to perform any thing extra. With bullocks he could not manage so many acres.

913. Suppose 300 or 400 ploughmen were to be introduced, do you think there is a sufficient number of ploughing horses in the country to admit of so many additional ploughs being worked by horses?—I have no doubt there are sufficient; three out of four of the settlers use horses for their ploughing, and the increase in the number of horses is greater in proportion than the increase in cultivation. The advantage of ploughing with horses instead of bullocks is very great; if the soil is very stiff and hard, as has been the case the last two or three seasons, I then double the teams, and fetch up the soil much better and quicker than I could with bullocks.

914. Do you think that a large number of immigrants would be able now to find employment?—I think that a large number might; and I would advise that, for those settlers who cannot afford the extra expense attendant on the bounty system, the adoption of the general system of immigration would be beneficial; and even if the immigrants so brought out were not good farming men, they might still be useful for other purposes, for which a previous selection is not, perhaps, so essential.

915. Do you think 3,000 or 4,000 immigrants might find employment?—Yes, I think they might, if not brought out altogether, but at proper intervals of time, and dispersed throughout the colony.

916. Would not the labour market be seriously affected by the services of 3,000 or 4,000 of the probation men becoming available?—Undoubtedly it would; but a great proportion of the probation men will not find employment at all. Out of 1,000 men, 300 will probably be good servants, the remaining 700 will be worth nothing to the settler, and will be returned to the Government. Under the old system a man was assigned to a settler, knowing probably nothing about farming, in any service in which the settler might want to employ him; having, however, no wages to pay, the settler could afford to teach him; but no man could afford to pay wages to a man whom he had to instruct in his work. All that the men are taught while under the Government is to use a pick and a shovel, and that is, in fact, teaching them nothing, so far, at least, as relates to making them good and useful servants.

917. If so large a number of immigrants were introduced as that named in the last question put to you, what would become of the surplus grain that would be produced?—By the introduction of a large number of immigrants, labour would become cheap, and we should then be able to compete with other growers in foreign markets, as, for instance, at the Isle of France, which we cannot now do, in consequence of the high rate of wages we are obliged to pay. I do not agree with those who think that the new colonies will not be able to grow wheat for their own consumption: I think they will. As regards the colony of New South Wales, I think that it must be dependent upon a foreign market.

918. At what rate do you think wheat must be sold here to enable us to command a market, and to compete with foreign growers?—Five shillings a bushel would always command a market.

919. What is the average crop per acre yielded by your land?—About 25 bushels an acre; the last two seasons the crop has failed.

920. Is that the general average?—It is not; the district of Bagdad is very favourable to the growth of wheat. I should say the average crop would be about 15 or 16 bushels an acre.

921. If you had no assigned servants, what rate of wages could you afford to give free men?—That would depend entirely on the man himself; the wages would range then, I should think, from 10*l.* to 20*l.* per annum; a very good man might get 20*l.* a year; 15*l.* a year would probably be the average rate.

922. In England wheat fetches about 7*s.* to 8*s.* a bushel, and the farmer pays his labourers from 8*l.* to 10*l.* a year; is the cultivation of grain so profitable here that we can afford to pay double wages?—I have not given the subject sufficient consideration to enable me to answer that question.

923. You are aware that there is a great difference between the farmer here and at home as regards taxation?—I am; but then it must be borne in mind that the farmer in England has a certain market for his wheat at 7*s.* a bushel, wheat never being at a lower price than that; and further, that he has an abundance of good labour at his command; here the farmer is continually at the mercy of his servants, and the market is of the most fluctuating kind.

924. Are you aware whether there is any want of blacksmiths or wheelwrights in the country?—I consider there is a very great want of both, as the greatest inconvenience is experienced by many settlers in consequence of having to send a great distance to have their carts, ploughs and other farming implements repaired.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1841.

Benjamin Berthon, Esq., called in; and Examined.

B. Berthon, Esq.

29 October 1841.

925 You are a resident landed proprietor in this colony?—I am; I reside at Woodlands, at the Cross Marsh.

926. What extent of land do you possess, and what quantity of it have you under cultivation?—I have about 7,000 acres, of which about 450 are under wheat, oats, barley, turnips, peas and meadow.

927. What

927. What is the strength of your establishment of servants?—I have generally from 23 to 25 men, including domestic servants; of these 18 are assigned, the others free, or ticket-of-leave men.

928. What amount of wages do free and ticket-of-leave men demand?—They ask from 25*l.* to 30*l.* with rations and lodgings; I would willingly give 25*l.* per annum to 10 regularly-bred farming men, brought up as such in England.

929. What rate of wages is usually given to ordinary labourers, or what amount do they demand?—When seeking employment they all consider themselves good agricultural labourers, and require wages accordingly; but very few of them are worth more than their rations and clothing.

930. Do you consider that there is a want of labourers at the present time in the colony?—I am decidedly of opinion that there is a great want of thorough-bred farming men and mechanics, but a superabundance of idle useless hands; and when the men emerge from the probation gangs, there will be a great accession to the latter class. I think that the few good farming men who are discharged from those gangs will obtain full wages, although the Government should limit the amount to be demanded by them—a measure, which I understand, to be in contemplation. With respect to the useless hands discharged from those gangs, I am disposed to think they will not be able to find employment at wages they would like to hire at, and that consequently they would be induced to take to the bush.

931. Do you consider immigration to be necessary, and, if so, which system would you recommend the bounty system or the Government general immigration system?—It appears to me, that to carry out a plan of immigration which would be beneficial to the colony generally, the Government should from time to time ascertain the wants of the settlers with respect to the particular class of labourers they may require; and that upon their arrival in the colony it should be an open labour market, where parties requiring situations, and masters in want of servants, could make their own arrangements. By the adoption of such a mode of immigration as I have suggested to the committee, we should get those men only whose services would be really valuable to the colony. I would observe, however, in reference to the want of labourers in this colony, that if the Government would make any arrangement for relieving the adjoining colonies of their superfluous labour, such a measure would, in my opinion, be attended with very beneficial results.

932. Do you think that persons, not farm labourers imported under such an arrangement as that you have just suggested, would obtain employment?—Mechanics, equally with farm labourers, would readily obtain employment, but I am not prepared to say that others would; much would, however, depend upon their character and habits.

933. Do you think the effect of immigration would be to cause a greater and more extensive cultivation of land?—Most certainly; provided there is a demand for the extra produce, there is plenty of available land whenever it is worth while to bring it into cultivation.

934. Have we been always able to grow grain sufficient for our own consumption?—So far as I can recollect, we have always been able to grow more than sufficient.

935. If there were now a drought at Sydney, do you think that we could supply them?—At the present moment I do not think we could, but we might do so hereafter.

936. Do you think that fluctuations in the market would have the effect of throwing men out of employment?—Fluctuations in the grain market are at all times extremely prejudicial, but I do not think that they would materially affect the labour market, as few farmers would reduce their establishments unless the market was permanently depressed.

937. Have the prices of wheat been always remunerating to the farmer?—This must depend upon the season; the prices have generally been remunerating, but there has not unfrequently been a deficiency in the quantity.

938. Adverting to a former part of your evidence, wherein you stated that the men who will come from the probation gangs, not being agricultural labourers, will obtain no employment, and in consequence be driven to the bush; do you not think that if good farming men were imported, and that the settlers employed them as overseers in training these men to agriculture, it would have the effect of removing the evil which you have contemplated?—I fear not; it would never answer the purpose of the settlers to employ free immigrants so unprofitably; I look upon a large proportion of the men from the probation gangs who have not been brought up to agricultural pursuits as wholly useless to the farmer; nor do I think that they are ever likely to become respectable or useful members of society.

939. Are domestic servants much wanted?—They are; there is no class more wanted than respectable females; if we could get out respectable male and female immigrants, it would be no less our interest than our duty to make them as comfortable as we could, by building them cottages with gardens attached to them.

940. What wages do shepherds usually obtain?—Twenty-five pounds per annum.

941. Is there any scarcity of this class of men?—I should say decidedly not.

942. Do assigned and ticket-of-leave men work well with free men?—The assigned men do not work well with the paid men, at least I have not found that thus working together is beneficial, as the former are too much in the habit of thinking themselves imposed upon, if more than a very moderate day's work is required of them; and, on the other hand, the paid men are generally too much disposed to reduce their standard of work to the scale of their assigned fellow-servants.

943. Do you think that the colony is not in a thriving state?—No, I do not; my opinion is, that even now the colony is decidedly in a thriving state; but still I do not consider that a healthy state of things can exist until this colony ceases to be a receptacle for convicts. Before we can become a moral, happy and truly thriving community, we must have a better description of peasantry about us than we have at present, which can never be the case, so long as England pours upon our shores the filthy and pestilential sweepings of her gaols.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

EVIDENCE taken by William Page Ashburner, Esq., M.L.C., at the request of the COMMITTEE.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1841.

Christopher Kains Dunning, Miller, an Emigrant by the "Arabian," from Bristol.

C. K. Dunning.

28 September 1841.

1. How long have you arrived in the colony?—About five weeks.
2. Did you come out under any engagement?—I was engaged in England as a miller to Captain Ritchie for three years; I am his foreman.
3. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—Yes, sir.
4. What wages do you get?—Fifty pounds per year, and board and lodging.
5. What wages would you have received in England?—One guinea a week, and out of which I should have to have found myself in food and lodging.
6. Are you a married man?—I am; I have a wife and child, who are also provided for by Captain Ritchie; my wife teaches Captain Ritchie's younger children, and is accommodated in his house with a room; I have a separate room for myself to take my meals in.
7. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—Yes, sir; I should have gone to Port Phillip.
8. What induced you to emigrate?—Times were very hard, and I heard a good account of this country.
9. Were you in constant work in England?—Yes.
10. Did not 50 l. a year supply your wants there?—No, sir; I could not have got a house any thing decent under 8 l. or 9 l. a year.
11. Do you know the price of provisions here?—I can get beef and mutton for 4 d. a pound; the 4 lb. loaf is 10 d.
12. What comparison do you make between your circumstances here and in England?—I could not get in England, regularly, more than 7 s. a week, with every thing found me as I have at Captain Ritchie's.
13. Do you think you have done right in coming here?—Decidedly so.
14. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—The provisions were very bad—bad pork; biscuit very bad, mouldy and quite rotten; our berths were very close.
15. Did the captain behave well to you?—Not very well; but we would not wish to say any thing about that.
16. Do you think any other persons of your trade could get employment here?—Yes, I should think 20 or 30; I have heard of several places; and if I had not been engaged in England, I should now obtain 30 s. a week; I have had several applications to induce me to leave Captain Ritchie, but I am perfectly satisfied.
17. Have you any thing else to say that can give information as to your prospects, and do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements?—I think they would all prefer engagements, as they would have a place to go to.
18. Do you think your engagement too long?—No, sir.
19. Would so long an engagement be generally objected to?—No, sir; generally it would be preferred.

Charles Ellen, Carpenter and Joiner, an Emigrant by the "Arabian," from Bristol.

Charles Ellen.

20. How long have you arrived in the colony?—About five weeks.
21. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes; to Mr. Ritchie, for three years.
22. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—No, I cannot say I am; it would have been better to have agreed for one year.
23. What wages do you get?—Fifty pounds a year, with board and lodging.
24. What wages would you have received in England?—I used to receive 24 s. a week when I left Bristol to come here.
25. Are you a married man?—Yes, I am married; I left my wife and four children in England.
26. Why did you leave your family at home?—I thought it would be better to come out first and prove it.
27. Will you send for your family?—No, sir; I do not think I shall.
28. Why?—Because the wages I get are not enough for a family.
29. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—Yes; I had made up my mind to come out as a free emigrant, and I should have brought my family with me.
30. Then why did you make the engagement for three years?—Because I thought I should like to see the country first, and see if I could maintain my wife and family here.
31. What induced you to emigrate?—I thought I could do better out here.
32. Were you in constant work in England?—I was, sir.
33. Did not 60 l. or 70 l. a year, which you say you could get in England, supply your wants sufficiently?—Yes; but I saw in a paper, in Bristol, that we were getting 10 s. or 12 s. a day here.
34. Then what induced you to agree for 50 l. a year?—Because I could not come out without; there was no other ship coming.
35. Do you know the price of provisions here?—Meat is 6 d. or 7 d. per lb.; bread is 10 d. a 4 lb. loaf; clothes are dearer here; beer is 1 s. a quart, half-and-half; we can get it in England 5 d. a quart.
36. What comparison do you make between your circumstances here and in England?—I find carpenters are getting here from 9 s. to 10 s. a day for their work, and I am, from my engagement, getting only 19 s. $2\frac{3}{4}$ d. a week; I had rather run the risk of chance-work, than to have a settled sum less, though regular.
37. Do you think you have done right in coming here?—I hope so; I am rather disappointed, as I expected

Charles Ellen.

28 September 1841.

expected to have come to a more comfortable place; lodging not so good, and diet indifferent; I get, I suppose, 9 or 10 lbs. of meat a week; we have plenty of bread, 2 oz. of tea, 1½ lb. of sugar.

38. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Very rough; very bad regarding our diet.

39. Did the captain behave well to you?—No fault to find against the captain.

40. Do you think any other persons of your trade could get employment here?—Oh, yes; it appears to me that the country is in a very flourishing state, and trade will be brisk this summer; but I fear it is rather dead just now—a stagnation.

41. Do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements or without?—I should advise them not to come with engagements; the country is very well; several will come out if I give a good account of the place: as yet I have not formed my opinion.

42. Would so long an engagement be generally objected to?—For mechanics I think they would not like engagements, but for labourers and such like it would be advantageous.

Thomas Pococke, Farm Labourer, an Emigrant by the "Arabian," from Bristol.

T. Pococke.

43. How long have you arrived in the colony?—Between four and five weeks.

44. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes, I came out under an engagement as a farm labourer to Captain Ritchie for three years.

45. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—Yes, sir.

46. What wages do you get?—Twenty-five pounds a year, with board and lodging.

47. What wages could you have received in England?—About 10*s.* a week, without board and lodging; I was seldom out of work.

48. Are you a married man?—No, sir, single.

49. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—I did think of leaving for some time past, but had not made up my mind; I saw a Mr. Williams in Bristol, and asked him about a ship called the "Victoria;" he told me I could get a passage in this ship, the "Arabian," and I took the engagements.

50. What induced you to emigrate?—Nothing particular; I thought I could get some benefit from it,—I heard so good an account of the colony.

51. What had you to pay for your board and lodging in England?—I never lodged out; I lived with my father; I could get a lodging for 1*s.* 6*d.* a week.

52. Are you a ploughman?—I can plough; but I engaged as a farm labourer to do odd jobs on the farm—sowing, reaping, thrashing, clearing, or any thing that I was capable of doing.

53. What accommodations have you at Captain Ritchie's?—Very middling at present, but we shall have it better in a short time; there is a cottage building for us; we came rather unexpected.

54. What was the price of provisions in England?—Meat 6*d.* to 7*d.* a pound; I cannot say what it is here; bread was 7 d. a quartern; I do not know the price here.

55. What comparison do you make between your circumstances here and in England?—If I had been at home, I should have been much more comfortable than I have been as yet. I should not have earned so much money, but should have had better rations. A young man in England can always get meat; we should be better off here if our accommodation was better. I have not yet had enough benefit from the money, and do not know yet how it will turn out.

56. Do you think you have done right in coming here?—I do not regret coming here; I had to endure many hardships in coming here.

57. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Very indifferent,—not for abuse, I do not mean—but the provisions were very different from what we expected, and what we were promised; our bread was very bad, and meat likewise, not fit for any one to eat; I left my meat, and could not eat it, and gone to bed—have been obliged to throw it overboard.

58. Did the captain behave well to you?—I do not wish to say any thing about the captain. When we got to the Cape, there was a sad outcry about the provisions; they promised to buy a fresh supply—they did so to last us three weeks, when we were obliged to go to our old stores again, or else go without.

59. Do you think any other persons of your trade could get employment here?—I have not made inquiries as yet about that.

60. Do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements or without?—I think men would rather come without an engagement; but I do not know,—time will show.

61. Do you think your engagement too long?—No, not if I am used as I expect to be: I do not mean to say any thing against my place; all I complain of is the voyage.

James Godwin, Ploughman, an Emigrant by the "Arabian," from Bristol, aged 25 years.

James Godwin.

62. How long have you arrived in the colony?—Five weeks to-morrow.

63. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes; to Captain Ritchie, for three years: the time was to commence from the agreement in England—we were five months on the water.

64. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—It is too soon yet to form much of an opinion about that—we are expecting to be made more comfortable.

65. What have you to complain of?—Oh, I have nothing to complain of now.

66. What wages do you get?—Twenty pounds a year.

67. What wages would you have received in England?—Oh, 100 l. a year, if I had chosen to have remained there.

68. How?—I could have made nearly that by looking after the railroad at Swindon, in Wiltshire. A young man got 70 l. a year, and board and lodging, and I was offered that, but I was coming out here. I thought I could do better by getting some land of my own, after getting out of my indentures, that is my intention.

69. Have you any capital or money to enable you to buy land?—No, sir, I have got none with me, but I wished to see the currency of the country.

70. What do you think of the country?—It is a very good country for those who have a few hundred pounds, and I see my error in not bringing money with me; my father could have given me money.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

James Godwin.

28 September 1841.

71. Are you a married man?—No, I am single.

72. Should you have come as an emigrant if not under an engagement?—No, sir, never.

73. What induced you to emigrate?—I wished to see the currency of the country, and to see if I could lay out money to advantage; and by getting wages, it would be losing nothing, if I was gaining nothing.

74. Were you in constant work in England?—I did not work for wages in England, I was in constant work for my father.

75. What could you earn in England?—I do not know, I am sure—I know what we used to give our men—we used to give 12 l. a year to a ploughman, with his board. One pound in England would go as far as four here. I lived about 10 miles from Bristol.

76. What comparison do you make between your circumstances here and in England?—A man is better off in England,—every thing is so dear here: cheese is 2 s. a pound; beer they charge us 2 s. a quart. But I have been here so short a time that I can hardly form a right idea of the place.

77. Do you think you have done right in coming here?—Yes, I do not know but I have; I think I should have done better to have brought out the little money I shall have; things appear a little dead.

78. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Very badly, as far as regarded the provisions; the captain did not treat us amiss; Mr. Williams, of Bristol, sent our provisions on board; they were very bad; the captain said he had nothing to do with it; the pigs would not eat the bread.

79. Do you think any other persons of your class could get employment here?—Yes; they say we have higher wages than are going, but I do not see people looking out for work.

80. Do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements or without?—I should have preferred coming out without engagement; I heard in our country that some gentlemen in England would send us out for 5 l. a head, and then we should be free here. I was told by a Mr. Phillips, in John-street, Bristol, that he would send us for 20 l.; there were to be 45 in the steerage.

81. Do you think your engagement too long?—Yes, two years would be quite long enough; I hear if I was free from engagement, I could earn three times as much as I am working for now.

82. Have you any thing else to say?—Yes; our grog was stopped on board, and we were a fortnight without sugar.

Mr. Francis Spencer, Timber Merchant.

Mr. F. Spencer.

83. How many men do you employ in your trade?—Three pair of sawyers, free emigrants, and two assigned men that I have taught to saw.

84. Did the six men who are now sawing for you come out under engagements?—Yes, they are to saw for me at a certain price per foot, for four years; 7 s. for 100 feet as far as two feet deep; 8 s. for two feet six inches, and beyond that size the price allowed in the island.

85 What can these men earn at that rate?—Last week the six men earned between 11 l. and 12 l., that was a bad week; they would average 4 l. a week for each pair of sawyers; as the days get longer they will get more.

86. Are the men married, and are they good workmen?—There are four men married, and two single; there are five brothers in the lot; they have proved themselves good workmen and very industrious; they have not lost any time since they have been with me; they are all young and hearty men.

87. Are you quite satisfied with having obtained them?—Yes; the times are rather hard, and had I foreseen it, I should have had only two instead of three pair; they cut their stuff much better than our colonial men. I found the Government were withdrawing assigned servants, and I feared my trade would have stopped if I did not get free labour: I tried many bush sawyers, but found they did no good; these men, by cutting with a different tooth, save me one board in 16, and the carpenter is saved five per cent. in his time in working up. I consider I save four per cent. upon foreign timber by the superiority of their work, that in former days went away in saw-dust.

88. Have the men any children?—Yes, there are 10 or 11 children among them.

89. Who supports the wives and children?—The men themselves; I have advanced them money; they are settled with every Saturday night.

90. Can they support themselves comfortably on your wages?—I should think they could; the single brothers pay 15 s. a week, I believe, for their board, to their brothers who are married.

91. Are you satisfied with the men?—Yes, I am very well satisfied.

92. What is your opinion of the mode of obtaining men by the bounty?—I do not think the thing will answer; my agent has great trouble to obtain these men; and he writes me, he does not think he could get the men he wanted; he had tried many in England and Scotland, who engaged with him, and then broke their engagements. There was a great detention of the vessels, which dissatisfied them.

James Page, Sawyer, an Emigrant by the "Andromeda;" arrived here nearly a Month.

James Page.

93. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes, as a sawyer, for four years, to Mr. Spencer, of Launceston.

94. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—Yes; I have hardly been here long enough to say; I do not see my master's ways just yet.

95. What wages do you get?—Ours is all piece-work; 7 s. or 8 s. a hundred; I can make about 2 l. 3 s. a week, on an average; it is as much as we got elsewhere; I am satisfied with what I get.

96. What wages would you have received in England?—About 30 s. a week, constant work; I had to find myself, and pay every thing the same as we do now.

97. Are you a married man?—I am a married man, with one child nearly 16 months old.

98. Can your wife gain any thing by her work, so as to assist you?—Yes, I expect she will; I have no doubt she will readily get 1 l. a week, either by washing or needlework; they pay a deal better here than in England, they pay 4 s. 6 d to 5 s. a dozen for washing, they tell me; as to needlework, the work is worth the stuff itself.

99. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—No, I did not think of coming out afore.

100. What induced you to emigrate?—I thought to better myself; things are very dull at home, scarce enough to keep three parts out of four employed.

101. Were you in constant work in England?—Yes.

102. Did what you earn suffice to maintain you?—Yes, but I had to work hard for it; wages were very low.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

James Page.

28 September 1841.

103. Do you know the price of provisions here?—Mutton, 4½*d.* a lb.; bread, 10*d.* the 4 lb. loaf; tea, 2*s.* 9*d.*, very good, what would cost 7*s.* at home; sugar, 4½*d.*, it cost 9*d.* when we came away; meat at home was 8*d.* to 9*d.* a lb. Things are much cheaper here than at home; butter was cheaper there, and potatoes here are very dear; I cannot afford to get beer just yet, but I get a pint a day; it does a man good; we give 3*s.* a gallon from the house.

104. What comparison do you make of your circumstances here and in England?—I like the place very well at present; I like myself as well here as at home; I did not like leaving my father and mother at home; but it cannot be helped; we left two young ones at home; we intend to send for them by and bye.

105. Do you think you have done right in coming here?—Yes, I find myself very comfortable; if a man keeps himself steady and sober he can do very well.

106. What do you pay for your lodgings?—I have got a little house for 8*s.* a week, three rooms and a little back kitchen, a slip of a garden to it; I could get a better house at home for the money.

107. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Not quite so well as we expected; the meat was not good; we were to have had plums whenever we had flour, but we only got them once a week, and after a time we did not get them at all.

108. Did the captain behave well to you?—He hardly ever spoke to us.

109. Do you think any other persons of your trade could get employment here?—Yes, I have had hardly time to look about me; they seem to say times are rather dull at present.

110. Have you found any thing disagreeable by being associated with convicts?—No; they are very civil and obliging; they have not interrupted us at all.

111. Do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements, or without?—I think people would prefer coming here under engagements.

112. Do you think your engagement too long?—No; it is a long time, but it will soon rub round; I am in hopes I shall save a little money; when I get it I shall not let it lay idle; I look soon to put my wife into a little shop, and then we should both be turning money.

113. Would so long an engagement be generally objected to?—No, sir; there were many who wanted to come out in the same way when I left; trade was very bad indeed.

William Page.

William Page, an Emigrant by the "Andromeda;" arrived here about a Month ago.

114. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes, for four years, to Mr. Spencer, of Launceston, a timber merchant; I came as a sawyer.

115. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—Yes, sir, at present.

116. What wages do you get?—We get piece-work; I take between 2*l.* and 3*l.* a week myself.

117. Do you find that sufficient?—Yes.

118. What wages would you have received in England?—I should have 2*l.* a week there; work not constant; it was rather slack in winter; in summer we had more than we could do; I should have had to find board and lodging.

119. Are you a married man?—I am a single man; I pay 15*s.* a week for my board and lodging here; I am well found for that.

120. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—No, sir.

121. What induced you to emigrate?—I heard a good account of the place.

122. What comparison do you make between your circumstances here and in England?—I think we shall be comfortable enough by and bye; I do not think I have done wrong in coming out; I have hardly been here long enough to tell.

123. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Not very good; we had no proper nourishment if we were sick.

124. Did the captain behave well to you?—Yes, he behaved very well to us; he seemed a nice sort of man.

125. Do you think any other persons of your trade could get employment here?—Trade seems to be very dull just now about this town; there were two or three men to-day in our yard looking for work.

126. Do you think emigrants would prefer coming here under engagements or without?—I think emigrants would prefer coming without engagements.

127. Why?—They can go and work for who they like, and where they like; they could get the same wages as other people get.

128. Then do you think you are working under the wages got by others?—Yes, in some ways we are; we do not get measurement and a half as they do, we get only single measurement; that is the usual way of cutting in England; thus I should get for 100 feet I cut now, 150 feet.

129. Then as you find men out of work in the town, perhaps it does not pay to employ them on such terms?—There are many lazy people about every where, who won't work if they could.

130. Do you think your engagement too long?—No, I am very well satisfied.

131. Would so long an engagement be generally objected to?—People would rather come out on their own hands if they could.

132. Do you think there are many mechanics in England who would come out if they could?—Yes, there were many wanted to come out with us, but they had no engagement, and could not pay their passage.

Mary Petchey.

Mary Petchey, an Emigrant by the "Andromeda," from London to Launceston.

133. When did you arrive here?—On the first of this month.

134. Are you married or single?—Single.

135. Did you come out under any engagement?—Yes, as nursemaid, for four years, to Mr. Sprunt, he is a timber merchant or builder.

136. What wages do you get?—Sixteen pounds a year.

137. Are you perfectly satisfied with your present situation?—No, sir; I have been deceived throughout; I find the situation different from what I was told in England; I was told there were only three children, but I find there are six, and only myself in the nursery: I am dissatisfied with the situation altogether.

138. What wages did you get in England?—I got 14 guineas there.

139. Should you have come out as an emigrant if not under engagement?—No, sir.

140. What induced you to emigrate?—The idea of getting more wages, bettering myself.

Mary Petchey.

28 September 1841.

141. Have you heard what the wages of female servants are here?—I have heard that I could get 20*l.* to 25*l.* a year as a housemaid, and I have been in that capacity in England.

142. How came you to be engaged to come out here?—I saw an advertisement in the paper which induced me to apply to a Mr. Bell, who engaged me for Mr. Sprunt.

143. Do you think there are many females in your circumstances who would wish to come out here?—If they could better themselves they would.

144. Should you prefer coming with or without an engagement?—I would prefer having an engagement with a family I knew; my present mistress is not in the class I should wish to be with.

145. Has your master any other female servants?—One other; she is not free; she is a convict servant.

146. What are your feelings in associating with her?—She certainly conducts herself very civilly; my mistress makes no difference in her conduct to either of us; we reside in separate rooms.

147. What is the general conduct towards you of the convict persons you have met since you arrived?—Generally they have conducted themselves with the greatest civility.

148. Have you any prejudice in your own mind against them?—No, but I would rather be among free people. I am told by the prisoners that they look upon themselves as well off as the free.

149. Have you any idea what inducements would operate to bring female servants from England here?—Good wages and comfortable situations. Plenty would be glad to come.

150. Have you written to any of your friends at home, telling them the wages they could get here?—Yes, I told them they could get 20*l.* to 25*l.* a year, but to take care they made a good agreement beforehand; but I rather discouraged their coming, as I felt very uncomfortable myself.

151. Do you think your wages are sufficient?—No; things are much dearer here. My bonnet, which I bought here, cost me 11*s.*, I could get it at home at 7*s.*; my gown, a good chintz, cost 7*s.* 6*d.*, it would here cost 12*s.* or 14*s.*; shoes I bought here cost me 8*s.* 6*d.*, they may be got in London for 4*s.* 6*d.*; my ribbons were here 14*d.* a yard, and in London you may buy them for 7½*d.* a yard.

152. Do persons in your situation apprehend any danger in undertaking so long a voyage?—No, sir, I do not think they do. Previously to my engaging with Mr. Bell, I was offered a situation to go with a Dr. and Mrs. Abercrombie to the Cape of Good Hope, at 30*l.* a year; I did not go, because I did not see the lady, the gentleman only came. I should certainly not have come without an engagement.

153. Have you any complaints to make about the voyage?—None. The meat was very bad; the accommodations were not good, but I had them to myself; I was very ill when I arrived, but am now quite strong.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1841.

Richard Sterne, an Emigrant by the "Arabian," from Bristol.

Richard Sterne.

30 September 1841.

154. How long have you arrived here?—Better than a month.

155. Did you come here under an engagement?—Yes; as butler to Mr. Williams, of Launceston, for three years from the time engaged in Bristol.

156. What wages do you receive?—Fifty pounds a year.

157. Are you married?—Yes; my wife is engaged to Mr. Williams, as cook, at 25*l.* per annum.

158. Are you perfectly satisfied with the engagement you have made?—Yes, perfectly satisfied; I am quite comfortable.

159. What induced you to emigrate?—Expecting to do better in this country. I had intended to go to Sydney.

160. What induced you to prefer coming here instead of going to Sydney?—The ship I was to proceed by was so full, that I gave up the intention of proceeding by her; and, hearing of the advertisement of the "Arabian" at Bristol, I engaged with Mr. Williams there accordingly.

161. Then do I understand you that you were going out to Sydney, under the general system of immigration, and not under that of the bounty, as established in this colony?—Yes.

162. Which would you prefer, coming out under an engagement, or coming out without?—Certainly, with an engagement.

163. Do you consider your engagement too long?—No, sir, I do not.

164. What wages did you receive in England?—Forty-five pounds a year with Lady Chatterton, at Blackrock, near Cork, and forty pounds at the Rev. Sir Richard Wolseley, Cheltenham.

165. Do you consider that you have obtained any advantage in coming out to this country?—Yes, I do; I consider that having my wife with me is a great advantage; we here receive 75*l.* a year together, whereas in England it was difficult to obtain a situation where we could both be together.

166. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Our treatment generally was very good, until we got near the Line, then the heat changed the bread, which I mentioned to Captain Gardner; he said, "So long as there is good biscuit on board, you shall not eat bad bread;" I have no complaints to make.

167. Do you think many persons, in your circumstances, would be glad to emigrate here?—Certainly; I have been requested to write an account of the place, and they will certainly come out, if I report favourably.

168. Now what report will you give?—I think it is a beautiful country, and I feel comfortably settled with my wife, and more so than I should have been in England.

169. Can you save money?—Yes, I think I shall save all my own wages; and my wife's will suffice to meet all our expenses; we are found in board and lodging by our master.

170. Do you know the price of provisions here?—Beef is 7*d.* per lb., prime pieces; mutton 6*d.* per lb., the same; beer I do not know the price of; my master allows wine; we have abundance of all that we can require.

Ann Sterne, Wife of the foregoing Witness, came out with her Husband in the "Arabian," confirms all the foregoing Questions till No. 9, to which she replies,— Ann Sterne.

I WOULD rather be engaged, than to come without an engagement; but I have been informed I could get better wages if I had not been engaged beforehand.

171. What wages did you receive in England?—I received 5*l.* more wages, as lady's maid and housekeeper, than I do here; I lived with the Rev. —— Dickson, in Limerick.

172. Do

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

172. Do you consider that you have obtained any advantage in coming out to this country?—I hope we shall; as yet I cannot say my husband will; I consider it a great advantage living together, which we could not do in England.

173. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—I have no fault to find on board; the rations were small, but we knew what they were to be before leaving England; the provisions were good when we left, but the heat spoiled the bread.

174. Do you know the price of wearing apparel for females?—I cannot say, but hear it is much dearer than in England.

175. Do you think many persons, in your circumstances, would be glad to emigrate here?—Yes; I consider that females would be very acceptable here; they will get higher wages; and I think female servants generally are much in demand; I should recommend housemaids, laundry-maids, dress-makers, and good needle-women to come out; the wages of first-rate housemaids and laundresses, in England, would be 14 l. to 20 l. a year.

176. Can you save money?—I hope we shall; my husband's wages are high, and, living together, we may save in many things; we have no family.

Susannah House, Nursemaid, arrived by the "Arabian," from Bristol, about Five Weeks ago.

Susannah House.

177. WHAT wages do you receive?—Twenty-five pounds a year.

178. Did you arrive here under engagement, and for how long?—Three years to Mr. Williams, from the time I left England.

179. Are you quite satisfied with that arrangement?—Yes; I am quite comfortable and reconciled, but I expected to find more servants on the establishment.

180. Are you married?—No, sir.

181. What induced you to come to this country?—I had a brother coming out to Mr. Williams, and I did not like to be separated from him; I have a sister also who came with us, and we made a family party.

182. Would you prefer coming with an engagement, or without one?—Without an engagement, because it would have been hard if we did not like our places to have remained so long a time; I intended to have come out whether I had been engaged or not, but my only reason for coming was to accompany my brother.

183. What wages did you receive in England?—Twelve pounds a year, as lady's maid.

184. Do you consider you have obtained any advantage in coming here?—No, because I believe clothes are much dearer here than in England, and we require more of them; we are obliged to lend a helping hand to so many things here that we do not do in England.

185. What treatment did you receive on board ship?—Nothing to complain of; there were complaints, but I think without cause; one female was confined on board, and the captain said he would have given up his cabin to her, if I had not thought she would prefer having my accommodations in the upper cabin, which she took.

186. Can you save money out of your wages?—No, I do not think I can, but I can hardly say yet; I heard very flattering accounts of this place in England, but they are not realized as yet; I heard wages were much higher here, and I find they are so; we heard the climate was excellent, I have no reason to think it otherwise; I was ill all the voyage, but have been well ever since my arrival; my provisions are better here than they are in England, and lodgings as good; a poor man in England cannot get more than 3 lbs. or 4 lbs. of meat in the week, and many do not get any at all from month's end to month's end; here they may get half a sheep in the week.

187. How do you know what you now state?—I have been informed by the servants in the house.

188. Do you think there are many young females in England who would be glad to come out here?—Yes, very many; there were many more wanted to come out with us, but could not get engagements; I think females would do much better here than men.

189. Have you had any communication, since your arrival, with any female convict servants?—No, I have never spoken to one.

190. Upon the whole, what is your opinion of your circumstances here, because I find a contradiction in that part of your evidence wherein you say your expectations have not been realized?—My disappointment is, that having lived in large establishments in England, I have no servants here to wait upon me; I had always two or three servants under me.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1841.

Pearson Foote, Esq., and Magistrate, possessed of Land at Deloraine, in the District of Westbury.

Pearson Foote, Esq.

1 October 1841.

191. How many acres of land do you hold?—About 4,000 acres.

192. How many in cultivation?—One hundred and seventy acres.

193. Do you find that you have a sufficient number of men easily to be obtained?—At present, I have.

194. How?—Because, as yet, assignment has not ceased; but at times I have great difficulty, more especially during the harvest.

195. Do you think free labour is much required?—I do, to a great extent.

196. Do you draw any distinction between free labour and what is called ticket-of-leave labour?—Ticket of-leave labour is very precarious, because magistrates consider that they may withdraw this class of labourers for any misconduct, and send the men for punishment to road parties the same as convicts, when with free men they would be only regulated by the law of master and servant. The Government also consider it proper to order certain days for the ticket-of-leave men to muster, when they generally become disorganised by drink, and their services in the remote parts of the district cannot be depended on for some days after. While upon the subject, I think it right to say, that upon the muster of the ticket-of-leave men, to induce them to return to their work I always charge them for their absence 4 s. a day; and I have found that the free men always join in the meeting, so as to spend the rest of the day in drinking on these occasions. I charge the free men for their absence in the same way I do the ticket-of-leave men.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

Pearson Foote, Esq.

1 October 1841.

197. Do you consider that free labour could be introduced here with advantage by immigration?—I do; because I consider that wages ranging at the least from 25 l. to 35 l per annum for good agricultural labourers in English current coin is more than we can afford, giving board and lodging as we do.

198. What can you afford to give for agricultural labourers, good ploughmen, and for other farming purposes, supposing assigned service to cease?—At present 20*l.* per annum, but to be regulated by the influx of emigration; if I had all free men, I think I could give 15*l.* a year; but I should expect only the best farming men.

199. Do you consider there is a scarcity of labour in the country?—At present none at all; there are men in want of work, but they ask more wages than we can afford to give. A man, who was once my assigned servant for eight years, came to me the other day, and said he was earning 40 l. a year, and if he could get away from his master he could get 50 l.; he was a ploughman, and took care of horses. Another man, who was formerly in the same situation with me, has, to my knowledge, laid by nearly 100*l.*; he now receives 30 l. or 35*l.* a year, besides his food, as a general labourer upon a farm.

200. Do you know the price of labour generally?—I cannot say exactly; but a man lately refused to take work at 10*s.* a week to pull turnips; but I consider there has always been a combination to keep up the price of labour; the rate generally is not less than 9*s.* a week, with board, for common labourers.

201. Which system of emigration do you consider best applicable to this colony, that by which individuals can select the labour they require, or the general system of emigration proposed at home?—Certainly, the system as established here now; I have observed the inconvenience of the indiscriminate admission of emigrants in several instances; some persons with large families, quite useless to the colony, were introduced, and advantage was taken of sending out persons of property at the expense of the public, who could well afford to pay for their own passage. By the bounty system every one can introduce what kind of labourers he may require, without encumbering the colony with useless paupers.

202. When you came out to this colony some years ago, did you bring any free servants with you?—In 1830 I brought out two male and one female, the latter was married to one of them; they were indented to me for five years, at 12*l.* and 15*l.* a year.

203. Did you find soon after their arrival they became dissatisfied, and why?—They soon found they could get higher wages here; I had paid their passage out, which cost me 75*l.*, and I thought it better to part with them, upon which they obtained places at 50*l.* a year; they saved money, and are now tenants on a large farm; they have accumulated property, and are worth, I believe, 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* These people were farm apprentices about the time I left England, and they are bringing out the rest of their family, who have been on their parish in England; I attribute their success to their steadiness and good conduct. There are two or three instances equally remarkable of the same kind in this neighbourhood.

204. What class of labourers do you consider is most wanted?—I can only speak of farm servants; but I know that gardeners, ploughmen and agricultural labourers are always in demand, if they could be depended on as steady and sober; female servants of good character are seldom to be procured; dairy-women are much wanted, but they would not be required to milk.

205. What wages do you think female servants can obtain here?—From 15*l.* to 20*l.*, according to their value and character.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1841.

Mr. Thomas Simmons, of the Moat Farm, near Carrick, in the District of Norfolk Plains.

Mr. T. Simmons.

5 October 1841.

206. How many acres do you rent?—I have very near 600 acres on my farm.

207. What lease have you got of it, and what rent do you pay?—Fourteen years, at 200*l.* a year; I have another farm of 140 acres, for which I pay 140*l.* per annum.

208. How long have you been in the country?—I landed here in March 1831.

209. You came here originally as a servant to Lieutenant Foote, R. N.?—I came out with him under a written engagement for seven years, at 15*l.* per annum.

210. How long did you remain in his service after your arrival here?—Twelve months.

211. What induced you to leave him?—I thought I could better myself and get much higher wages; my master and I parted by mutual consent.

212. What wages did you get on leaving Mr. Foote?—Fifty pounds a year as farm overseer.

213. Are you a married man?—Yes; my wife was with me, and left at the same time I did.

214. What were your circumstances in England?—I was a farm servant, at 7*l.* or 8*l.* a year.

215. How soon after becoming an overseer did you obtain a farm on your own account?—A year after I had engaged as overseer I was offered a farm as tenant, at a rent payable in wheat.

216. Were you successful?—Yes; in three years I repaid Mr. Foote my own and my wife's passage-money; I also had to pay my landlord for the meat, grain and seed consumed on my farm; in the commencement of the fourth year I purchased a house, which cost me 350*l.*; I have since purchased four houses in town, but I have sold them all to advantage; about two years ago I was worth 2,000*l.*; the last year has been one of great distress; the times are very bad, and I have lost by failures 400*l.*

217. Do you find labour is scarce?—Not now; but it has been very much so.

218. What wages do you give to free labourers?—From 10*l.* to 12*l.* a week, with board and lodging; the last fortnight or three weeks I have hired at 10*s.* a week, but I do not think a man to be depended on to take charge of a team can be got readily so cheap; I know a person who is giving 15*s.* a week for such a man.

219. What can a man find himself in board, if not provided for by his master?—If he lived moderately, for 10*s.* a week; I charge 3½*d.* a pound for flour, and 5*d.* a pound for meat.

220. Do you think many farm labourers would do well here?—Yes, if selected from the right class, I mean hard-working, industrious men; such as I have seen come here are lazy, and will do no good either here or at home.

221. Do you think females are much required in the colony?—I think the same of the women as I do of the men; if they are steady and respectable, and know how to work, they would be very desireable; but such as have come here as emigrants are quite useless, and know nothing; such as I mean as people to be sent out get in Devonshire 4*l.* a year, and would here get 20*l.*, and we should be glad of an opportunity to get them; I paid 16*l.* a year to a free woman to wash and make herself useful, and she was drunk a third of her time.

222. Have

222. Have you any children?—Yes, five.

223. Do they go to school?—I keep a schoolmaster on the place; I had a man and his wife for the purpose; I paid him 40 l. a year; the wife was to make herself generally useful; they were boarded and lodged in my house; he had been a clerk in the commissariat office; the man I now employ holds a ticket-of-leave; he is not a working man, and I give him only 8 s. a week; as soon as he can better himself he will leave me; he is fit for nothing else.

Sir, Launceston, 30th September 1841.

Since writing to you by this post, I have been requested by Mr. Williams of this town, agent for the ship "Arabian," to forward the enclosed documents, which he hopes may be appendid to the Report upon the subject of immigration. As several of the statements of the witnesses I have examined seem to accuse the agent of the ship in England of supplying bad provisions, I think, in fairness, the committee should allow a counter-statement to be placed on their minutes to meet such injurious reports.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

To W. E. Nairn, Esq., Clerk of the Council. Your most obedient servant, Wm. Ashburner.

[This paper was produced to me on the 30th September 1841. There appears to be no dates to either of the documents.—Wm. Ashburner.]

We, the undersigned, having arrived as emigrants, per "Arabian," from Bristol, beg most respectfully to address you as the Immigration Agent, by laying a statement of the treatment we experienced during our voyage, trusting you will be kind enough to cause an inquiry relative thereto, in order that some redress may be made us, as well as to prevent others from being entrapped in a similar manner. The bread issued to us was so bad, that an inquiry was held, and the surgeon-superintendent condemned it. The whole of us intended to have left the ship at the Cape of Good Hope, when Captain Gardiner purchased a small portion, which only lasted three weeks, and then we were obliged to eat the bad again or go without, the captain having plenty of good bread on board at the same time; the meat also purchased there was perfectly in a state of decomposition; a large portion of flour, rice, sugar, spirits or wine, as we ought to have received according to the scale of rations exhibited to us at Bristol, has been denied us; in fact, some of the articles were not on board; this, together with the close and confined manner in which our berths were erected, reduced us to a weak state at the termination of our voyage, which we hope will engage your attention in our behalf.

We have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servants,

The bread issued to the steerage passengers was always of good quality; when found not to be so, it was condemned by Mr. Teush, surgeon superintendent, to the amount of three puncheons, just before making the Cape of Good Hope, at which place 10 cwt. was put in for their use, and that condemned was never again issued, and is now in the stores of Messrs. Williams, Campbell & Co. at Launceston. The meat, both from England and the Cape, was in every way perfectly good and proper for use, and the rations were served out by scale and weight daily, by Captain Hancock, whose peculiar duty it was to do so, as also having charge of all the steerage passengers' stores. I have enclosed for your inspection the printed form of rations, as also the stores put in at Bristol and the Cape. The space here left was for any observation which Captain Gardiner might make; but as he has not kept his appointment with me to-day, and not wishing to lose the day's post, I beg to remain,

Your obedient servant,
Fred^k E. Teush,
Surgeon Superintendent of the ship "Arabian."

Dear Sir,

You will now, I trust, permit me to make some observations respecting the allegations of Mr. Ritchie's men, which are totally devoid of truth, and as the best proof of that fact, I can and do assert, there were but two passengers who were not in infinite better condition and health when each left the ship than when they joined it; one is C. C. Dunning, who certainly lost weight, but much to his advantage, the loss being nothing but blubber, the result of his habits previous to joining the ship, and who was constantly requesting of Captain Gardiner and myself the indulgence of bottled beer and brandy-and-water; the other, William Bendall, whose habits of intoxication were very disgusting and disgraceful. I have this morning seen several of the indented servants of Mr. Williams, who all declare the statement of Mr. Ritchie's men as malicious and false, and if necessary, will not hesitate stating it to be so, as also, that several of those pessons were obliged to have their clothes let out in consequence of their increasing in bulk.

Your obedient servant,
Fred^k E. Teush.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 14 December 1840.

No. 1.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 14 December 1840.

MR. SCHOALES, from Western Australia, has requested information from us upon two points connected with his plans for introducing emigrants into that colony, which we are under the necessity of referring to Lord John Russell, in order that we may receive his Lordship's directions respecting them.

First, he wishes to be informed whether he may take out emigrants, and receive a remission in the purchase of land in proportion to the number of the emigrants who may be found suitable. This proposal is in accordance with the regulations established in the colony until the commencement of the year 1839. But at that time new regulations arrived from the Home Government, requiring that the lands in the Australian colonies should only be disposed of by sale. The Governor, however, does not appear to have clearly understood from this, that the old regulations, touching the remission of purchase-money on account of immigrants introduced by the land purchasers were repealed, and he accordingly wrote for directions on the subject from the Secretary of State; and when Mr. Schoales applied to him on the subject, he returned him an answer (of which we enclose a copy), which certainly, from the rules for carrying the system into effect which it gives, and from the confident expectation which it holds out that the Secretary of State would allow the regulation to be continued, is calculated to convey the impression which Mr. Schoales states that he received, that not much risk would be incurred, if the immigrants were introduced, that the remission of purchase-money would be allowed. We believe that an answer was not returned by the Secretary of State to Governor Hutt's despatch on the subject, and the old regulations remain, as we think they ought to be, repealed. Considering, however, that the letter which Governor Hutt addressed to Mr. Schoales was very far from amounting to a prohibition, and considering that the Governor clearly thinks that Mr. Schoales' undertaking will be very beneficial to the colony, and that this gentleman has arrived here for the purpose of carrying it into effect, and that he is engaged in collecting emigrants to the number of 115 adults, we would suggest that directions be sent to the Governor of Western Australia, to allow Mr. Schoales a remission in the purchase-money of any land which he may buy in the colony, in proportion to the number of suitable emigrants (not exceeding 115 adults) whom he may introduce, and at the rate fixed by the bounty regulations of 1839, viz. of 18*l.* per adult. When Lord John Russell's decision is made known to us, we will communicate it to Mr. Schoales.

25 September 1830.

Secondly, Mr. Schoales has received authority from Governor Hutt to take out emigrants for the benefit of the colony of Western Australia, at a cost to the public not exceeding 500*l.* A doubt has arisen whether the Governor had power to apply this sum out of the colonial funds to purposes of emigration; and Mr. Schoales wishes to know whether, upon his arrival in the colony, he shall be enabled to draw for it. This question, involving the extent of the Governor's authority over the colonial funds, we are unable to answer, and we therefore request to receive Lord John Russell's instructions on the matter. We have the honour to enclose a copy of Governor Hutt's order.

Perth, 28 February 1840.

Enclosure

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

(No. 330.)

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Perth, 25 September 1839.

Encl. 1, in No. 1.

I AM directed by the Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, which his Excellency has found exceedingly interesting.

The rules respecting labourers introduced into the colony, hitherto acted upon, have been, that for every married couple and family, a remission of 20*l.* has been allowed in the purchase of land from the Government; unmarried men being expressly excluded from this indulgence. But by a despatch lately received from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, it appears doubtful whether it is intended to continue this allowance. The Governor has, however, referred the subject to the Secretary of State, and from the very strong representation his Excellency has made of the deficiency of labour in the colony, a favourable reply may be anticipated.

With respect to unmarried men, also, the Secretary of State has been requested to admit a modification of the regulations to the following effect, that, provided an equalization of the sexes be preserved, that is to say, that for every male there is a corresponding female emigrant sent out, and that no single female is allowed to embark, except under the charge of some natural protector, parent, married sister, or brother, each such pair of emigrants may be regarded in the light of a married couple, and the stipulated abatement in the purchase of land be allowed accordingly.

I have, &c.

Colonial Secretary.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

RULES for the Selection of EMIGRANT LABOURERS to be conveyed to the Colony, and at the charge of the Government of Western Australia.

Encl. 2, in No. 1.

MR. SCHOALES undertakes to place himself in communication with the Western Australian Association, and to select his labourers (if the Association approve of his so doing), the cost of whose passage is to be defrayed by the colonial government, under the following rules:

1. The whole charge for conveying the labourers to the colony is not to exceed 500*l.*
2. The price of the passage, whether of adults or children, to be the same as that usually allowed by the Agent-general of Emigration in England.
3. The rations of the emigrants on board the vessel to be the same in quality and quantity as those allowed by the Agent-general for Emigration.
4. Each emigrant is to be allowed to bring, free of all charge for freight or otherwise, bedding, a moderate supply of clothing, and tools or implements of trade.
5. Married couples with large families not to be more than forty-five years of age, and couples without families not, on any account, to be more than thirty years of age.
6. Single men and single women are not to be more than thirty years of age; the single women must be under the charge of some responsible relative. The number of the sexes always to be maintained in equal proportions. Any extra man or men will not be allowed or paid for by the Government.
7. Widows or widowers not more than forty-five years of age, with large families, to be allowed, but the proportion of the sexes to be attended to as required by Rule 6.
8. Every individual above fifteen years of age to be considered as an adult.
9. The vessel to be provided with a surgeon.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 12 January 1841.

No. 2. Letter from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 12 January 1841.

I HAVE laid before Lord John Russell your letter of the 14th ultimo, in which, with reference to an application made to you by Mr. Schoales, of Western Australia, you request to receive his Lordship's directions on the two following points:

1. Whether he may take out emigrants to that colony and receive a remission in the purchase of land in proportion to the number of emigrants who may be found suitable, in accordance with the regulations established in the colony until the commencement of the year 1839; and

2. Mr. Schoales having received authority from Governor Hutt to take out emigrants for the benefit of the colony at a cost to the public not exceeding 500*l.*, you request to be informed whether the Governor had power to apply that sum out of colonial funds to the purposes of emigration, and whether on his arrival in the colony Mr. Schoales would be enabled to draw for the amount.

1. With respect to a remission of the purchase-money at the rate of 18*l.* per adult, Lord John Russell would wish to receive your opinion, it being always understood that any new purchase of land must be at the rate of 1*l.* per acre, according to subsisting regulations.

2. On the second point, his Lordship directs me to state, that it appears to him that the sum of 500*l.* cannot be granted to Mr. Schoales from the revenues of the colony on the introduction of emigrants, and that the precedent, if sanctioned, would be a dangerous one.

Sir,

No. 3.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 14 January 1841.

WE do ourselves the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, in which, with reference to the application from Mr. Schoales, of Western Australia, which we had submitted to Lord John Russell's consideration, you state that his Lordship would wish to receive our opinion with respect to the remission of the purchase-money of land at the rate of 18*l.* per adult, it being always understood that any new purchase of land must be at the rate of 1*l.* per acre, according to subsisting regulations.

In reply, we beg leave to state, that in naming the conditions upon which a remission of purchase-money should be allowed to Mr. Schoales, we thought that the most proper course was to take as our guide the Bounty Regulations, dated 12th October 1839, and actually in force for the colony of Western Australia. We do ourselves the honour to annex a copy of these. The amount of bounty which is there fixed for every adult is 18*l.*, and all purchasing under those regulations are expected to take the land, at whatever price may be fixed, at the time of their making the requisite deposit. We should propose to make the same rule applicable to Mr. Schoales; and in remitting to him the purchase-money in proportion to the number of emigrants whom he had introduced, and whose eligibility had been ascertained by the means prescribed in the 18th clause of these regulations, that the land should be valued at the present fixed price of 1*l.* per acre.

Enclosure in No. 3.

BOUNTY on EMIGRANTS introduced by Purchasers of Land in Western Australia.

Government Emigration Office, 2, Middle Scotland Yard,
12 October 1839.

Encl. in No. 3.

1. WITH a view to promoting the improvement of Western Australia, it has been determined, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, that all persons who may hereafter buy lands in that settlement shall be allowed, out of the proceeds of their purchases, a bounty on the introduction of useful labourers into the colony.

2. As there is no accumulated fund now existing in the colony, and the bounty can only be paid out of the accruing land revenues, its application cannot be made retrospective, or be extended to parties in respect of purchases already made in Western Australia; it will only be claimable in regard to all future purchases.

3. In order to enable parties resident in England to take advantage of the present measure, they will be at liberty to deposit money with Mr. Barnard, in this country, for the purchase of of land in Western Australia, upon which they will become at once entitled to propose a corresponding number of emigrants to go out to the colony upon bounty.

4. The proper course of proceeding, in acting upon the foregoing article, will be to attend at Mr. Barnard's office, No. 2, Parliament-street, to make such deposit as the party may wish, in sums not less than One hundred pounds, or a given number of hundreds of pounds, on which a receipt will be furnished for the payment; and advice will be sent to the colony, directing credit to be allowed for the same amount in any purchase of land effected in the regular way by the depositor or his agent.

5. In case, however, the depositor does not intend to make the purchase himself, it will be necessary, in order that the Government may not become involved in disputes as to agency, that the person to whom credit is intended to be given should be expressly named at the time that the deposit is made.

6. The present notice will take effect in England from the date it bears, and in the colony from the date of its reaching the Governor, when it is to be immediately published.

7. Purchasers or depositors are to be entitled to claim bounty on emigrants introduced by them, if coming within the description presently to be specified, at the rate of one adult person of fifteen years and upwards, two children between seven and fifteen, or three children between one and seven, for every 20*l.* which they pay.

8. The amount of the bounty is to be 18*l.* for every person of fifteen and upwards, 10*l.* for every child between seven and fifteen, and 5*l.* for every child between one and seven; infants less than twelve months old are not to be paid for.

9. The following is to be the description of people for whom bounty shall be claimable:—

They must belong to the class of mechanics, handicraftsmen, agricultural labourers, or useful domestic servants. Persons proposing to invest a small capital in land or in trade are quite inadmissible.

10. They must principally consist of married people and their families.

11. Single women without their parents are only admissible if they are emigrating under the immediate care of some married relatives, or else attached as domestic servants to ladies going out as cabin passengers in the same ship.

12. Single men can only be allowed in a number not exceeding that of the single women proposed by the same person under the preceding clause.

13. The age of the adults is not to exceed forty, unless in special cases where a large family, all of them grown up to useful ages, may appear to justify a relaxation of this rule in favour of the parents. The board named in Article 18, is to decide on the admission or rejection of this ground of exception in particular cases.

14. Good character, and decisive written testimonials, both to respectability of character and to capacity in the professed trade or calling, will be indispensable.

15. The bounty will only be payable for parties actually landed in the colony. No money can be issued for emigrants who may die on the passage.

16. The emigrants must arrive in the colony within the period of three years from the date of the payment, whether in the colony or at home, which constitutes the claim, and after that period the claim will be at an end.

17. It will be necessary that the purchaser or depositor or his authorized agent should, on the arrival of any emigrants introduced for his account, affix a certificate to a list of them, declaring that he applies for bounty to be paid for those persons.

18. The emigrants are to appear before such board or officer as may be appointed for the purpose by the Governor, in order to let it be ascertained that they fall within the preceding description, and that in all respects they comply with the regulations laid down in this notice; and the payment of bounty is to be absolutely subject to the conclusion of this authority that the parties are properly entitled to it. As soon as the board or officer, as the case may be, is satisfied that the emigrants are of the right characters, description and ages (which latter point should, as far as possible, be supported by baptismal certificates in all cases where doubts are likely to suggest themselves), a certificate will be given to that effect, stating the amount of the bounty claimable for the particular party of emigrants, and the same will be paid immediately to the master of the vessel in which they arrived.

19. This notice, so far as regards payments and deposits, to be in force in this country for two years from its date, and in the colony for two years from the date of its publication by the Governor.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Hutt to Lord John Russell, dated Western Australia, Perth, 14th July 1840.

No. 5.
Extract Despatch from Governor Hutt to Lord John Russell, 14 July 1840.

IT remains only that I mention more distinctly to your Lordship the source from which the sum of 1,264*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* under the head of Fines on Land, has been derived, and which forming, together with 223*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* the amount of the land sales, a total of 1,487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, I named to the Legislative Council, and submit to your Lordships, should be appropriated to the supply of labour.

When I took charge of the government, I found that the system which had been adopted and pursued in this colony, of granting lands to settlers on condition of certain location duties to be eventually performed, was a constant source of contention between the government and the landholder; the one striving to perform as small, and the other earnest to compel as large a share as possible of the contract. Wishing to relieve the government from the odium hereby entailed upon it, and considering that the truest policy consisted in leaving every individual to spend his money in the time and manner most consonant to his own self-interest, I turned my attention to the town allotments, held in occupancy, in order to ascertain the most feasible and equitable method of making them over in fee-simple to the occupiers, and yet not foregoing, without some compensation, the claims which the Crown legally had against them for improvements, such as building walls or houses, erecting fences, &c., which were accurately prescribed, both as to their nature and the time allowed for the performance of them, but which were scarcely ever attended to, the government finding it next to impossible to enforce its own regulations.

After much anxious thought and consultation, I determined, as the allotments had already severally cost to the occupiers 5*l.* on the first purchase, to allow that they should be redeemed by a fine of 10*l.* on each which might be totally unimproved, and a proportion of that sum when improvements had been partially effected, to be paid into the colonial treasury before the termination of the last finance year, or the allotment would be forfeited; and at the same time I raised the upset price of all town-lands in future, from 5*l.* with location duties, to 30*l.* in fee-simple.

The consequences of this Act have been, that 1,264*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* have been received in fines, and town lands have risen considerably in value, many allotments having lately realised from 50*l.* to 70*l.* at public auction; so successful, indeed, has been the result, that I regret now that I have put it out of my power, by my despatch, No. 42, of 31st May 1839, to deal in the same manner with the large country grants.

My hopes are strong that this measure will meet with your Lordship's approbation; and that in sanctioning the ordinance as now framed, you will confirm my proposal that 1,487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* of the revenue for 1839-40, be appropriated as a labour fund; part, 1,000*l.*, to be expended in bounty or passage-money for emigrant labourers, agreeable to the 18th clause of the new instructions, dated 12th October 1839, and signed T. F. Elliot, Agent-general for Emigration, and part, 487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in preparations to receive the emigrants on their arrival in the colony.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 19th May 1841.

I AM directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you the enclosed extract of a despatch from the Governor of Western Australia, containing a report of the measures which he had adopted for raising a land revenue, and of the mode in which which he proposes to appropriate it; and his Lordship would wish to receive any observations you may have to offer, before communicating on the subject with the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. The application of 1,487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* has been included in the provisions of the Appropriation Act for the present financial year.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,

Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 8 June 1841.

No. 7. Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to R. Vernon Smith, Esq., 8 June 1841.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo, transmitting for any observations we may have to offer, an extract of a despatch from the Governor of Western Australia, containing a report of the measures which he had adopted for raising a land-revenue, and of the mode in which he proposed to appropriate it.

We find it stated in the extract above referred to, that the conditions attaching to the occupation of town allotments had proved a constant source of contention between the government and the occupiers, and the Governor adds that, as in his opinion the truest policy consisted in leaving every individual to spend his money at the time and in the manner most consonant to his own self interest, he had determined to allow the occupiers to commute for a money payment to the Crown, their obligation to build houses and effect other improvements upon their allotments.

In the principle of this arrangement, as laid down by the Governor, we cordially concur; of the mode of carrying it into effect, we are, perhaps, from our ignorance of local circumstances, not fully competent to judge.

It is declared in the despatch before us, that the conditions upon which the occupation of these allotments had been granted, were accurately prescribed, both as to their nature and the time allowed for the performance of them; the situation of the allotments, moreover, necessarily brought them under the observation of the local government, while the individuals who were to execute the engagements in respect to them, were also on the spot. The ordinary difficulties, therefore, in enforcing these conditions, were to a certain degree obviated, and it would further appear, that according to the agreements under which they had been occupied, the allotments had already become liable to forfeiture. On the other hand, we find that the terms of these agreements required an outlay, in some cases, of not less than 200*l.* in building a house, and further expense in erecting the proper fences and party-walls. By the present arrangement, however, we perceive that occupants were to receive the fee-simple of their allotments upon paying 10*l.* where they had failed to effect any improvements whatever, and a proportionably less sum where the conditions have been partially fulfilled. The Governor adds, that the lots thus released from the obligation imposed upon the occupants, had realized from 50*l.* to 70*l.* at public auction. Under these circumstances, it is not obvious why so small a sum should have been considered a satisfaction of the claim which the Government had upon the allotments; the arrangement has, however, been carried into execution, and there does not remain any practical question on which it is our duty to report.

We entirely concur in the Governor's further determination to abolish the plan heretofore adopted in the colony, of selling conditional grants of town allotments; and understanding that the price of 30*l.* now put upon the grants, which are in future to be sold in fee simple, is only the upset price, and that the lots will always be offered to public competition, we are disposed to defer to the local knowledge of the Governor; but at the same time, observing the very high value realized for town allotments in the other settlements of Australia, we should be very glad that the attention of Mr. Hutt were drawn to the question whether the lowest upset price might not be increased to at least 50*l.* per acre in the town of Perth.

We also entertain no doubt that it would be desirable that the sum of 1,487*l.*, being the proceeds of the redemption fines above alluded to, and of the land sales, should be applied to purposes of emigration. But, upon the Governor's further suggestion, that one-third of this sum should be expended upon preparations for receiving the emigrants in the colony, we feel it difficult to express an opinion, as we are ignorant of the detail of the mode in which it is proposed that money should be expended. It would, of course, be proper that some trustworthy person should be appointed to meet the emigrants upon their arrival, and to afford them advice and assistance in forming engagements with persons willing to employ them; and this officer would require remuneration for his services on the occasion. Some expense might also be incurred in providing temporary accommodation for those who might be sick, or who should fail to obtain employment on landing, although from the accounts which have been received of the effective demand for labour, it cannot be anticipated that the latter contingency would occur. The greatest number which the sum of 1,000*l.* would enable us to send to the colony, would not, probably, prove to be more than fifty, including the women and children who would accompany the adult male labourers. And the sum of 500*l.*, or 10*l.* per head, would, we should hope, prove more than sufficient to meet the expense of any preparations which it may be necessary to make for the reception of so small a number.

With regard to the selection of the emigrants, we perceive that the Governor refers to the regulations issued by the late Agent-general for Emigration, and suggests that that their eligibility should be judged of by the officer or board named in the 18th clause. But it is to be observed that the regulations in question refer exclusively to emigrants named by purchasers of land who are not to be entitled to receive the passage money of their emigrants until it has been ascertained in the colony that they are of the proper description. In the present case there would be no land purchasers in England to propose the emigrants. We conceive, therefore, that the only course would be that the selection should be made by our Board, and hence it would be necessary that the contracts should be final, and that the people sent out under the responsibility of the public servants in this country should be paid for without the shipowners being liable to lose the passage money by any rejection in the colony. The description of people to be selected, would be in accordance with the regulations referred to by the Governor, which we believe would be generally satisfactory to the settlers. In providing for the passage of these emigrants, as their number would not be sufficient for the freight of a ship, we should invite competition from different owners having vessels trading to the colony, to ascertain the lowest rate at which they could be conveyed consistently with the usual precautions for the health and comfort of the individuals.

Having offered these observations upon the despatch referred to us, and expressed our concurrence with the Governor's proposal, that the sum of 1,000*l.* which he has named should be applied to the conveyance of useful emigrants, we shall await Lord John Russell's approval of the recommendation, and his Lordship's instructions to carry it into effect.

We have, &c.

No. 8. Despatch from Lord John Russell to Governor Hutt, 2 July 1841.

Sir, Downing-street, 2 July 1841.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 14 July 1840 (No. 33), transmitting copy of an ordinance for applying certain sums arising from the revenue receivable in the colony of Western Australia to the service thereof, for the financial year commencing 1 April 1841, and for further appropriating the said revenue, together with the documents in explanation thereof; and I have to acquaint you that Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confirm and allow that ordinance.

Having consulted the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury on the subject of your proposal that the sum of 1,487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* of the revenue of the colony for the year 1839-40 should be appropriated as a labour fund to defray the charge of introducing emigrants; part of the 1,000*l.* to be expended in bounty or passage money for emigrant labourers, and the remainder, 487*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*, in preparations to receive the emigrants on their arrival in the colony; and their Lordships having signified signified to me their concurrence in the proposed arrangement; I have instructed the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration to take the necessary measures for conducting such emigration on the principles stated in a report from them, of which I now enclose a copy for your information.

I AM directed by Lord John Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th ultimo, in which you report your opinion as to the best mode in which the sum of 1,000*l.*, which has been voted by the local government of Western Australia, for the introduction of emigrant labourers into the colony, should be expended for the attainment of that object; and to acquaint you in reply, that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have signified their concurrence in the proposed arrangements.

Lord John Russell, therefore, desires that you would take the necessary measures for conducting this emigration in the manner recommended in your report.

My Lord, Perth, Western Australia, 24 December 1840.

No. 10. Despatch from Governor Hutt to Lord John Russell, 24 December 1840.

For Lord John Russell's Despatch, 23 Dec. 1839, No. 15, vide Papers ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 10 March 1840, No. 113, page 43.

WITH reference to the copy of a notice enclosed in your Lordship's despatch, No. 15, of the 23d of December 1839, setting forth the terms on which bounties would be granted on the introduction of emigrants to the purchasers of land in this colony, I request your Lordship's instructions, as to how I am to act in the case of persons depositing money with Mr. Barnard, in England, for the purchase of land in Western Australia.

To such depositors, by the 4th clause of the notice, a receipt will be furnished for the payment, and advice will be sent to the colony directing credit to be allowed for the same in any purchase of land, which is a matter of easy arrangement; but by the 7th clause it is declared, that depositors can claim bounty on emigrants introduced by them; this, if allowed to depositors of money in London, can only be done on the credit they have thereby obtained; and that such persons are entitled to claim this bounty seems evident from the whole drift of the notice, which is to give the greatest possible encouragement to the introduction of labour into the colony.

But if bounty can be claimed from the local government, on the credit of deposits made in London, the state of our finances renders it highly probable that we may be called upon for payments which we have no funds to meet.

Money payments for land in Western Australia are extremely rare; and although the Treasury account shows a balance under this head, which has been reserved for a labour fund, ten deposits of 100*l.* each with Mr. Barnard, for which the colony should be called upon to give credit on bounty, would exhaust the whole sum, and our ordinary revenue is only sufficient to meet the current expenses.

Under these circumstances, what I would propose to your Lordship is, that when credit for bounty is claimed for deposits made in London, having received information from Mr. Barnard of the money being really paid to him, I may be authorized to draw for the amount of that deposit.

This will prevent our funds from being over-drawn, and it will insure to the colony, when needed, the receipt of those sums to which it is entitled, if required to make the final payment.

Sir, Downing-street, 23 August 1841.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 24th of December last (No. 57), on the subject of the payment in Western Australia of bounties, in respect of emigrants sent out by virtue of deposits made by land purchasers in this country.

You state that if the purchase-money is to be deposited in this country, and the bounties on the importation of emigrants to be paid in the colony, the local funds at your disposal may not be adequate to meet the demands which will be thus made upon them.

You, therefore, suggest that on the arrival of the emigrants sent out under this system, you may be authorized to draw on this country for the amount of the deposit.

That arrangement appears to me the most convenient mode of rendering the money available for the service of the colony; and I have, therefore, to convey to you my authority to draw on the agent for the amount of such deposits made in this country. You will, however, on no account draw on the agent to an extent exceeding the amount of such deposits.

No. 12. Despatch from Governor Hutt to Lord John Russell, 4 March 1841.

My Lord, Perth, Western Australia, 4 March 1841.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship, that George Fletcher Moore, esquire, the advocate-general of Western Australia, having obtained leave of absence to proceed to England on urgent private affairs, has offered, when there, to use his endeavours to procure a supply of labourers for the colony, whose passage shall be paid out of our emigration fund.

The stake which Mr. Moore has in the country, the interest he feels in its welfare, combined with the thorough information he possesses respecting its means and prospects, fit him for the task he has kindly and voluntarily undertaken. But the funds of the colony cannot be placed at the disposal of a private individual, unless with your Lordship's sanction.

I had the satisfaction of reporting in my letter (No. 33.) of 14 July 1840, that 1,000*l.* applicable to the purposes of a labour fund, had been received from land sales and fines, into the treasury, in the course of last year; and on the strength of this sum, I authorized a gentleman, Mr. Schoales, who was on the point of sailing for England, to make application to your Lordship for permission to select and superintend the embarkation of emigrants for this colony.

The revenue derived from the land sales and fines amounts, in the current year, up to this date, to upwards of 2,500*l.* The colonists placing great reliance on Mr. Moore's judgment, are very anxious that his services should be taken advantage of, and I would request, in their names, therefore, that he may be allowed to select and despatch to this country such a number of emigrants, as under the regulations established for the guidance of persons in this matter, can be procured for the above sum of 2,500*l.*; or, should nothing have been done either by Mr. Schoales, or by the Board of Land and Emigration Commissioners, prior to Mr. Moore's arrival in England, towards furnishing us with labour, that he may have leave to incur an expenditure for this purpose on account of the colony, equal to the joint sums of—

1840–41	2,500
Making a total of	£.3,500

The

The difficulties and inconvenience incident to a want of labour, which press so heavily upon all classes in the colony, and which are monthly increasing, induce me to catch at any means whereby the evil may be obviated; and I trust that this proposal may meet with your Lordship's approbation.

Mr. Moore will have the honour of delivering this letter to your Lordship in person.

Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 17 August 1841.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, transmitting to us, for our report, the copy of a despatch from the Governor of Western Australia, announcing a further increase of the fund applicable to purposes of emigration, and recommending that an offer made by Mr. George Fletcher Moore of his services in selecting and despatching the emigrants to be taken out by this fund, should be accepted.

We find it stated, in the despatch before us, that, in addition to the sum of 1,000*l.*, which Mr. Hutt had on a former occasion declared to be applicable to emigration, and which, by your letter of the 19th ultimo, we have been directed to expend in the conveyance of emigrants, there has accrued, as land revenue, a further sum, which, at the date of Mr. Hutt's despatch, amounted to upwards of 2,500*l.*

We are not aware whether the expenditure of this sum in the manner contemplated by Mr. Hutt has been authorized by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury. Whenever we shall be instructed that it has been so authorized, we should then propose to employ it, or at least a part of it, in conjunction and at the same time with the 1,000*l.* already allowed for the service; because we find upon inquiry that it would not be desirable in the present case, if it could be avoided, to send out so small a number of emigrants as could be conveyed for the sum of 1,000*l.*

The ships engaged in the Western Australian trade are, we are informed, comparatively small and incommodious, and are compelled to wait for a long and indefinite period before their cargoes are complete. So small a number as fifty emigrants would not enable a vessel to dispense with a freight of goods, and the persons whom we selected would, therefore, be exposed, at great loss and inconvenience to themselves, to the delay which we have alluded to. If we had money, however, at our disposal sufficient to freight a vessel, or nearly to freight one, tenders would doubtless be made for other ships, besides those regularly trading with the colony, and we could fix with certainty the time of sailing. Moreover, as the remuneration to medical superintendents varies according to the number of emigrants, by increasing the number sent out by the same opportunity, we should be better able to secure the services of a skilful and experienced practitioner.

We take the liberty, therefore, of requesting that Lord John Russell may cause us to be informed whether the further sum of 2,500*l.*, being part of the land revenue of Western Australia, and declared by the Governor to be applicable to purposes of emigration, may be used in the service of emigration to that colony.

With respect to Mr. Moore's offer of selecting and sending out the emigrants, we have only to remark, that this duty necessarily devolves upon our board. We should, however, be happy to place ourselves in communication with that gentleman, and to profit by any information which he may be so good as to afford us respecting the description of labour most needed in the colony. Should he also be willing to further the transmission to this office of emigrants' certificates for approval, he would be rendering much service to the colony, and save the expense which must otherwise be incurred of a paid agency for selection.

No. 15. Letter from J. Stephen, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 17 Sept. 1841.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 17 September 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to acquaint you that he has had under his consideration your communication of the 17th ultimo, reporting your opinion relative to the mode of applying the sum of 3,500*l.* to emigration to Western Australia; and I am to convey to you his Lordship's authority, with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, for proceeding on the plan recommended in your report, in selecting and sending out emigrants to the extent commensurate with the funds available for that purpose.

Lord Stanley has intimated to Governor Hutt his concurrence in the observation which you have made, that the duty of selecting and sending out emigrants properly devolves on you, although you may, no doubt, derive much advantage from the assistance of Mr. Moore in the selection of the emigrants.

No. 16. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Governor Hutt, 17 Sept. 1841.

Sir, Downing-street, 17 September 1841.

I HAVE to acquaint you, that your despatch, No. 18, of the 4th of March last, has been received at this department, in which you state, that the revenue derived from the land sales and fines in the colony amounted in the current year, at the date of your despatch, to 2,500*l.*, making, together with the sum realized from the same source during the preceding year, a fund of 3,500*l.*, applicable to the conveyance of emigrants from this country. You further propose, that the emigrants should be sent out through the agency of Mr. Moore, the advocate-general.

That despatch having been referred to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, I now enclose a copy of their report. I concur in the remark which they have made, that the duty of selecting and sending out the emigrants properly devolves on their board, although they may no doubt derive much advantage from the assistance of Mr. Moore in the selection of the emigrants; and, with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, I have authorized the Commissioners to proceed on the plan proposed in their report.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,

Sir, Westminster, 26 October 1841.

No. 17. Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq. 26 October 1841.

WITH reference to your letter of the 17th ultimo, authorizing us to expend the sum of 3,500 l. upon emigration to Western Australia, and with reference also to your former letter of the 6th August, forwarding a despatch from Governor Hutt, recommending that the application of this sum to purposes of emigration should be made by or in conjunction with Mr. Moore, the advocate-general of the colony, we have now the honour to submit to Lord Stanley's notice the enclosed copy of a letter which we have received from that gentleman.

Mr. Moore, at personal interviews, had already called our attention to the fact, that the demand for labour in the colony had been unusually supplied during the past year by means of emigration, conducted by private parties. In his present communication he distinctly states, that a fresh arrival of labourers, with no corresponding introduction of capital, might prove a source of embarrassment both to the local government and to the colonists; and he adds, that if sent during the months now immediately ensuing, they would arrive in the colony at a time when there would be the smallest amount of agricultural employment.

We think that these objections are not without force; and adverting to the high terms in which Mr. Moore is spoken of by Mr. Hutt, and to the earnest desire of the colonists, conveyed through the Governor, that from the great reliance which they placed on his judgment, advantage should be taken of his services, we think it would not be prudent, in opposition to the strong opinions he has expressed, to employ the funds placed at our disposal in sending out at the present moment any additional number of emigrants.

We therefore beg leave to submit, for Lord Stanley's consideration, the expediency of postponing till the spring the emigration in question; and should his Lordship approve our suggestion, we would further recommend that a copy of Mr. Moore's letter, with our present communication, should be forwarded to the Governor for his information.

Enclosure in No. 17.

Gentlemen, 22, Craven-street, Strand, 5 October 1841. Encl. in No. 17.

IN reference to the question, whether it would be more advantageous to the colony of Western Australia to send out a number of labourers to that place immediately, or to defer their sailing for a few months, I here put down, at your request, a few thoughts which have occurred to me on the subject, for your consideration.

That colony has hitherto been so unaccustomed to receive any liberal supply of labour, that the arrival of a comparatively large number of labourers in a short period of time might be attended with some embarrassment, both to the local government and to the colonists, and might possibly create an unfavourable reaction.

A little more than two months ago, a gentleman connected with that colony sailed from this country, taking with him at least 100 servants; I do not know the precise number. Though these persons were all pre-engaged, the effect of their arrival will be to render available many who had been working at job-work, or hired for short periods, with those who were waiting for the arrival of their engaged servants.

Again, the Australian Company are sending, at the end of this month, at least 120 labourers. It is not likely that many of these will be required in that locality on their arrival. Of the spare hands, some will find their way to Swan River, and some will supply the wants of the southern parts of the settlement, namely, the Murray River, the Williams and Kojenup districts, and the Vasse, the Augusta and Albany districts, all of which places formerly were supplied by labour from the neighbourhood of the Swan River.

If the number intended to be sent out by the Government should be forwarded in six weeks, as contemplated, this would make about 400 servants which would arrive in the colony in about five months, which number would be entirely dependent upon those settlers already in the colony, as they do not appear to be accompanied by any capitalists who would require them or employ their labour, and if not immediately employed, they must necessarily and properly be maintained by the Government until their services are required.

With regard to the likelihood of immediate employment on their arrival in the colony, if they sail in six weeks, or, say two months, from this time, and that they arrive in April, it is a time of year when there is not any urgent demand for labour. The corn has been threshed, and it is the season for ploughing only. This is a season in which extra hands are not much required, unless there be fresh ground to be cleared for cultivation, which is not likely to be the case to any great extent.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

If the ship sail from this country so that the labourers may arrive about the beginning of September, the most important operations of the colony are just commencing, as the sheep-washing and shearing, hay-harvest and corn-harvest, threshing, fencing, building, &c.; besides, at that time, vegetables, so useful to persons after a voyage, are abundant. I have just put down these thoughts, rather hurriedly and crudely; should you, after a perusal of them, still adhere to your original intention, I shall, nevertheless, be most happy to co-operate with you in carrying it into effect.

COPY of a LETTER from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 31 May 1841.

WITH reference to that part of the arrangement entered into by Her Majesty's Government with the New Zealand Company, in which Mr. J. Pennington is mentioned as the referee between the Government and the Company, I am directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you, for your information and guidance, copies of two reports from Mr. Pennington in that capacity, in regard to the amount of expenditure on account of which the Company are entitled to receive land in New Zealand, in pursuance of the agreement in question.

17 April 1841.
8 May 1841.

Note.—These Enclosures, as they related to the past accounts of the New Zealand Company, and not to any practical question of Emigration, are not printed.

The result of Mr. Pennington's investigation is to show, that, under such arrangement, the Company are entitled to receive 531,929 acres of land at present, and that they may hereafter be entitled to a further portion of between 400,000 and 500,000 acres.

Captain Hobson has accordingly been directed to make the necessary assignments of land to the agents of the Company, in pursuance of the terms of the agreement.

Lord John Russell further directs me to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the Governor of the New Zealand Company, reporting, with reference to paragraph 4 of head III. of the terms of arrangement, that the Company have taken up two ships for the conveyance of emigrants to Wellington at Port Nicholson, to sail on the 1st and 15th of June respectively.

10 May 1841.
The "Arab."
The "Gertrude."

The money which it is proposed to apply to that object is stated to be part of the unexpended portion of the sum of 21,078*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* mentioned in Mr. Pennington's award, under the first head of engagements and liabilities entered into by the Company; and although the Company consider that the mere letter of the arrangement does not require that the removal of the emigrants should be conducted under your superintendence, and with your concurrence, they request to be informed in what mode the superintendence of your board may be most effectually exercised on the present and on all future occasions, in order that they may make their arrangements accordingly.

Lord John Russell would wish you to consider this question, and furnish his Lordship with an early report thereon.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 10 June 1841.

I AM directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you, for your information and guidance, copies of a correspondence between this department and the New Zealand Company, relative to an application which they have made to be allowed the discount on the purchase of 50,000 acres of land—the money to be expended by them in emigration; to which arrangement his Lordship has assented, on the conditions specified in Mr. Vernon Smith's letter to Mr. Somes, of the 4th instant.

Enclosure 1, in No. 2.

Encl. 1, in No. 2.

My Lord, New Zealand House, 18 May 1841.

With reference to paragraphs 2 and 4 of head III. of the arrangement forwarded under cover of Mr. Vernon Smith's letter of the 18th November last, I have the honour to inform your Lordship, that the directors of the New Zealand Company desire to purchase from the Crown a block of land to the extent of 50,000 acres.

Under the arrangement above cited, it is necessary, in order to the Company's obtaining discount upon the purchase-money of this land, that the payment to the Crown should be made "in ready money." But as it is the object alike of Her Majesty's Government and of the Company that the whole of the sum paid for the block of land now tendered for should be expended in emigration, which the directors desire to conduct themselves under the superintendence and control of the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration, it is presumed that it is not your Lordship's wish that any money should actually pass in the transaction. The directors suppose that your Lordship will be satisfied that the spirit of the rule in question has been sufficiently observed, if a sum equivalent to the price of 50,000 acres of land, at 1 l. per acre, less the stipulated discount, be expended by the Company in the conveyance of emigrants to New Zealand within such a reasonable compass of time as may give a sufficient character of unity to the transaction; that an expenditure of this nature would be accepted, in short, as a payment "in ready money."

Under this impression, with regard to your Lordship's views on the point, I beg to state, on behalf of the directors of the New Zealand Company, that they propose to make the outlay in payment of the purchase-money of the 50,000 acres now offered for, in the following manner:

First, in conveying emigrants to the settlement of New Plymouth (founded by the Plymouth Company of New Zealand, which has now been incorporated with this Company), in the Oriental, of 600 tons, which is engaged to sail from Plymouth on the 15th of June next, and in other vessels which it is proposed to despatch to the same destination in the course of August and September next.

Secondly, in conveying emigrants to a second settlement of this Company, which it is intended to call Nelson (and for the selection and survey of a site for which an expedition sailed from Gravesend in the Whitby and Will Watch on the 27th ultimo), by vessels, the first of which will sail in August next, and which will follow each other in rapid succession.

It is impossible to bring arrangements of such magnitude, and demanding also such attention to detail as are necessary for the conveyance of many hundred emigrants to New Zealand, within a narrow compass of time. An attempt to despatch such a body at once would occasion much inconvenience, and probably an unprofitable increase of expense in this country, and a great hazard of serious distress to the emigrants, involving discredit to the Company and the Government in the colony. It is on this account that the directors have not attempted to specify the number of vessels in which it is intended to despatch the emigrants, on whose conveyance the price of the 50,000 acres, a title to which is now solicited, is to be expended, or the precise date of their sailing respectively; but they pledge themselves that the transaction shall be completed before the close of the month of November next.

I take this opportunity of apprizing your Lordship, that from oversight, for which the directors trust that the want hitherto of an organized system of report and supervision will plead their apology, no notice was given, either to the Colonial Department or to the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration, of the sailing in the Whitby and Will Watch on the 27th ultimo, of 77 emigrants; of these 75 were men selected with great care, and with special regard both to physical qualifications and to character, for the purpose of performing the most toilsome parts of the task of surveying the new settlement.

They are all married men, and, with a single exception, under 30 years of age. They have been promised that their wives and children shall follow them in the first ships that are despatched with colonists, to take possession of the site selected by the preliminary expedition. Under this explanation, of the correctness of which the directors will be happy to furnish any proof that the Commissioners may think requisite, they trust that credit will be allowed them in the purchase of 50,000 acres now tendered for, on account of the expense of conveying the 77 emigrants above mentioned to New Zealand.

I have, &c.

Lord John Russell, &c. &c. &c.

(signed) Joseph Somes, Governor.

Enclosure 2, in No. 2.

Encl. 2, in No. 2.

Sir, Downing-street, 4 June 1841.

I am directed by Lord John Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, in which, with reference to paragraphs 2 and 4 of head III. of the arrangement between the Government and the New Zealand Company, you intimate the desire of the Company to purchase a block of land to the extent of 50,000 acres; and you request a relaxation relaxation of that part of the agreement which provides, that the payment to the Crown fo the land should be made in ready money, in order to obtain for the Company the discount to be allowed on such payments.

You assume that it is the object alike of the Government and of the Company, that the whole of the sum paid for the block of land now tendered for should be expended in emigration; which, you state, the directors desire to conduct themselves, under the superintendence and control of the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration.

You assume, therefore, that the Government will be satisfied that the spirit of the rule has been sufficiently observed, if a sum equivalent to the price of 50,000 acres, at 1 l. per acre, less the stipulated discount, be expended by the Company in the conveyance of emigrants to New Zealand, within such a reasonable compass of time as may give a sufficient character of unity to the transaction, that an expenditure of that nature would be accepted by the Government as the payment in ready money.

Lord John Russell considers that it will be difficult to adopt such an arrangement without incurring some risk of confusion and misapplication in the proposed appropriation of funds. Still, however, his Lordship will consent to adopt the proposal of the Company in this instance, on the understanding that such concession is not considered a precedent, if it can be so arranged that the actual outlay of the money by the time which you specify shall be established to the satisfaction of the Land and Emigration Board, who shall be entitled to employ Mr. Pennington, at the charge of the Company, to investigate the accounts and vouchers of the expenditure, and to report that it has actually been made for the objects and within the meaning of the agreement.

Under all the circumstances, his Lordship further consents that the expense of sending out the 77 emigrants who have already sailed should be taken into account in the same arrangement.

Lord John Russell directs me to take this opportunity of stating, that after the emigration of the present season 50 per cent. of the produce of land sales in this country, both from the Company and individuals, will be retained for expenses of survey, aborigines, and other necessary charges of the local government.

I have, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 15 June 1841.

No. 3.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 15 June 1841.

WE have the honour to acknowledge your letters, dated the 31st ultimo, and 10th instant, the latter acquainting us with the terms on which a new purchase of 50,000 acres has been made by the New Zealand Company; and the former desiring us to report, for Lord John Russell's information, in what manner the superintendence of this board over the emigration conducted by the Company may be most effectually exercised.

We beg leave to state, in reply, that we apprehend that the principal objects to which our superintendence should be directed must be, first, to see that there is no objection to the manner in which the emigrants are collected and sent out to the colony; and, secondly, that the emigrants themselves are of the kind for whom it is the purpose of the agreement that the Company should have credit in its account for land.

We believe that the former class of objects may be provided for by the existing regulations on the subject of passengers going on bounty to New South Wales, of which regulations a copy is herewith enclosed. We think that, in conformity with the arrangements therein laid down, it would be desirable that the rules of the Company for the selection of emigrants, and their publications distributed among the labouring classes to induce them to emigrate, should be inspected at this board; and that the fitting out of the ships should fall within similar regulations, and the victualling scale be approved at this office, as in the case of the other class of emigrant vessels.

One difference, however, would be necessary as to the surgeon. We think that his confirmation ought to be subject to approval by an examining physician named by us. In the ships going on bounty, it is the rule that payment shall only be made on the passengers landed alive; and, in pursuance of the spirit of this arrangement, it would hardly be fit that we should interfere further than to require our officer to be satisfied that the surgeon is duly qualified by law to practise. But, under the circumstances of the agreement with the Company, we presume that credit will be given for all expenses incurred, without reference to the question whether the emigrants are landed alive; and seeing that a proper choice of the surgeon is perhaps the most important measure for the welfare of the passengers, we should wish in this case to have the security above proposed, of a reference to an examining physician of our appointment. All surgeons formerly named by ourselves to vessels sent out by this board were subjected to a like examination.

The second of the ends we have alluded to, namely, the fit description of the emigrants, may also, to a great extent, be provided for by regulations similar to those in force under the bounty. The correctness of the emigrants' certificates as documents may be ascertained in the same manner; and with regard to fitness of the persons, assuming that the provisions of the Company on selection had been previously agreed to at this office, as above proposed, it would only be necessary to see that the description in the certificates corresponded with the rules of the Company itself. The documents would then be returned, and be finally countersigned on departure by our officer at the place of sailing, unless any such discrepancy should appear between the certificate and its bearer as to render it clear that there was a false personation,—a fraud which of course the Company would be as desirous as ourselves to defeat.

The foregoing suggestions accord, in all essential respects, with rules already in extensive operation under the bounty system, and which we find to be practicable and unexceptionable.

Besides, however, the two classes into which we have divided the principal heads of any superintendence to be exercised by us, it will be necessary to furnish proper evidence that all emigrants for whose conveyance credit may hereafter be claimed have duly passed under that superintendence. We would suggest for this purpose that the Company's servants should deliver to our officer present at the time of departure a nominal list of the emigrants, with a summary at the end of the number of adults and children, divided into the classes according to which they are victualled. A somewhat similar document is now furnished to us in respect of ships which sail on bounty. Our officer would deliver the same into this office, certified by himself, and at the proper time it would serve as a voucher for the number of approved emigrants sent out by that opportunity.

We presume that it will be understood that the fees to the examining physician, and any other incidental expenses of the Company's emigration, should be chargeable to the amount of purchase-money remaining in the Company's hands, inasmuch as the same expenses would have become chargeable to that fund had it been paid in cash to Government for land.

In conclusion, we have only to say that if the regulations we have submitted, in obedience to Lord John Russell's directions, should meet his Lordship's approval, we should be very happy to communicate with the proper officer of the New Zealand Company, and to do any thing in our power to promote the easy and satisfactory working of the details.

My Lord, New Zealand House, 29 July 1841.

No. 5.
Letter from J. Somes, Esq. to Lord John Russell, 29 July 1841.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Vernon Smith's letter of the 8th instant, giving cover to a report which your Lordship has received from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, stating their opinion in what manner the superintendence of that board over the emigration conducted by the Company may be most effectually exercised, and to submit as follows in reply:

The directors of the New Zealand Company trust that they shall be able to comply with the requirements of the Commissioners in every respect, and they beg to forward herewith the several documents which the board desire to inspect.

The Enclosure, No. 1, embodies the Company's regulations for labourers wishing to emigrate to New Zealand, and their instructions to their agents for the selection of emigrants. No. 2 is a pamphlet which has recently been compiled for distribution "among the labouring classes to induce them to emigrate;" this is the first publication of the sort which has appeared under the authority of the Company. No. 3 is a form of a tender for the hire of a ship to convey passengers, stores, &c. from London to New Zealand, which embraces the victualling scale, which the directors have uniformly observed in providing for emigrant labourers.

No. 4 is the form of application for persons desirous of obtaining a free passage to New Zealand, which has hitherto been used by the Company; the object of the certificates appended to the form used by the Commissioners in the case of applicants for free emigration on colonial bounties having been effected, in the practice of the Company, by letters addressed from their office (Enclosures, Nos. 5 and 6) to the employer of the applicant, and to the minister whose place of worship he has been in the habit of attending. If the Commissioners prefer the system under which their operations have been conducted to that which the Company have followed, the directors are willing to adopt the former for future observance; but they trust that no objection will be raised to passing those emigrants whose applications have been actually received and approved, under the vouchers hitherto in use in this office, and deemed not only sufficient, but (as the directors are still persuaded) a better safeguard against imposition than the apparently more complete body of certificates prepared by the Commissioners. If new certificates be insisted on in regard to the parties above mentioned, much inconvenience in loss of time and expense would be thereby entailed on the Company and the emigrants.

The directors cheerfully accede to the following proposals of the Commissioners, that the fitting out of the emigrant ships should be under the inspection and subject to the approval of the board; that the certificates and the parties to whom they are alleged to relate should be compared by the Commissioners' officer at the place of sailing, in order to his countersigning the document in question, "unless any such discrepancy should appear between the certificate and its bearer as to render it clear that there was a false personation;" and that the Company's agent should deliver to the same "officer present at the time of departure a nominal list of emigrants," in order that that document, certified by the Commissioners' officer, and filed in their office, may serve at the proper time as a voucher for the number of approved emigrants sent out by the vessel to which the list relates.

It remains only that I should notice the recommendation of the Commissioners to your Lordship, that the confirmation of the surgeons appointed by the directors to the charge of their emigrant ships should be subject to approval by an examining physician named by the Commissioners.

The directors of the New Zealand Company have been so fully sensible of the great importance of securing the services of duly qualified persons for the care of the health of the emigrants who have committed themselves to their charge, that they have availed themselves, from the first formation of the Company, of the abilities of a highly qualified and distinguished member of the medical profession, Sir John Doratt, and have appointed no surgeon to any of their vessels until his qualifications, as well as his previous reputation and moral character, have been inquired into and certified by that gentleman. Further, Sir John

NEW ZEALAND.

Doratt, accompanied by the surgeon when appointed, under the security above stated, has uniformly examined all the labouring emigrants previously to their embarkation in the vessel to which the surgeon is attached; and on such occasions, whenever thought necessary, the operation of vaccination has been performed on the spot. I mention this circumstance to your Lordship, because it not only demonstrates the attention which the directors have invariably paid to this important branch of the public duties which devolve upon them, but because they cannot but think the system under which they have acted in this respect superior to that adopted by the Commissioners, which merely requires the filling up of a formal printed certificate in regard to the health, vaccination or otherwise of the applicant for a free passage, and the like, by some necessarily unknown country practitioner.

Such being the state of things as regards the practice of the Company, they should be very unwilling to dispense with the valuable services of Sir John Doratt, as must, they fear, necessarily be the case, if the examination of the surgeons nominated by them be intrusted to a physician selected by the Commissioners, unless, indeed, as they would hope would be deemed an unobjectionable course, the duty could be intrusted to Sir John Doratt, who has hitherto given them the most entire satisfaction. The directors leave the matter, after this statement of their feelings regarding it, in your Lordship's hands, not doubting that every practicable consideration will be manifested towards a gentleman so eminent in his profession as Sir John Doratt.

In conclusion, the directors desire to express the satisfaction with which they have observed the declaration of the Commissioners, that they will do all that lies in their power to promote the easy and satisfactory work of the details of the system of superintendence which they have been instructed to organize; and to assure your Lordship that they will not fail to act in furtherance of the great public objects which all parties have in view in a corresponding spirit.

I have, &c.

WITH reference to your report, dated the 15th of June last, respecting the manner in which the superintendence of your board over the emigration conducted by the New Zealand Company may be most effectually exercised, I am directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you, for any observations which you may have to make, the enclosed copy of a communication from the Governor of the New Zealand Company on that subject.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., dated Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 19 August 1841.

No. 7.
Extract Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 19 August 1841.

WE beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, transmitting to us for our report the copy of a communication from the Governor of the New Zealand Company, relative to the mode in which we had proposed to excerise our superintendence over the emigration conducted by the Company.

In

In reply we have the honour to state, that we have examined the documents forwarded by the Governor in explanation of the system of management which the Company is prepared to adopt, and that we find them in essential particulars to be perfectly satisfactory. We shall proceed to offer a few remarks upon those points on which a deviation is proposed from the usage established by this board.

1. The form of application for a free passage differs from that which is in use by the bounty agents, in this respect, that it contains no certificates of skill, character and health, from the employer of the intending emigrant, from his minister, and from a medical attendant. In the form used by the New Zealand Company, all that is required is the address of each of those persons. And the practice of the Company has been to write to those persons, or rather to the employer and minister—for we observe no letter to the medical attendant—and ask directly from themselves for necessary information concerning the applicant. Mr. Somes states that the Company prefers this method, and we see no reason why it should be disallowed. It is, in fact, the course adopted by ourselves, whenever our local agents have not been able to attest, upon personal inquiry, the validity of all the statements contained in the emigrant's application. We would recommend, therefore, that the Company should continue the use of their present forms. All that we should think it right to require is, that to each application transmitted to our office for examination there should be appended the answers which the Company had received from the parties to whom letters of inquiry had been addressed, and who had certified to the eligibility of the applicants. We also think it would be desirable that some evidence should be furnished as to the bodily condition of the intending emigrants; for though we observe that a medical gentleman attached to the Company examines all the emigrants previously to their embarkation, yet we think that at the moment of departure it would not be proper that an individual, perhaps the head of a family, and having certainly abandoned his employment, should be rejected on account of infirmities which may have existed and rendered him ineligible at the time of his selection, when no bad consequences would have resulted from his rejection.

2. In the pamphlet on New Zealand, "published for the information of the labouring classes," which forms one of the enclosures to Mr. Somes's letter, we only observe one sentence upon which we would offer any remark; it occurs at page 4, and is as follows:—"Of these colonies, New Zealand, the finest country in the Southern Ocean, though the last founded, is certainly not the least attractive. * * * It has a better climate, more certain seasons, more rain, and therefore better average crops than Australia, and there are no convicts to diminish the demand for free labour." This passage would necessarily give offence to persons connected with the Australian colonies, and especially, perhaps, to those connected with New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land. Our rule, in respect of all publications inducing the labouring poor to emigrate at the public expense which are submitted to us, is never to allow the praise of one colony to follow from the disparagement of any others. Comparisons of this kind appear to us unsuitable where the Government exercises control over publications in which they are made, and they tend to foster the spirit of rivalry and hostility among the colonies whither emigration is directed, which unfortunately has been found to exist. We would therefore suggest that the passage we have quoted be omitted.

3. With regard to our proposal that the qualifications of the surgeons who are to accompany the emigrants to the colony should be certified by a physician named by us, we observe that the Company is anxious to retain the services of Sir John Doratt, whom they at present employ, and whom Mr. Somes describes as a highly qualified and distinguished member of the medical profession.

It appears that no surgeon is ever appointed by the Company to a vessel until his fitness in all respects has been ascertained and certified by this gentleman, who is further serviceable in examining all the emigrants previously to their embarkation.

* * * * *

Under the circumstances we do not feel at liberty to object to the continued employment of an officer who must have acquired considerable experience, and who has given so much satisfaction to his employers.

NEW ZEALAND.

We would therefore submit that the wish expressed by Mr. Somes be complied with, and that Sir John Doratt remain the medical examiner to inquire into the fitness of the surgeons superintendent of the Company's vessels.

We should, of course, require that his certificate of approval, together with the diplomas and testimonials of the surgeon in each case, should be submitted to our Board before the appointment was confirmed.

We are not aware that there is any other point touched upon in Mr. Somes's communication on which it is necessary that we should offer any observations.

Enclosure 1, in No. 10.

Sir, Auckland, 20 July 1841. Encl. 1, in No. 10.

FROM a conversation I have had with the Governor, I have reason to believe that his Excellency would be disposed to encourage the immigration of some of the inmates of the Incorporated Society of the Refuge for the Destitute at London. As a Life-Governor of that corporation, and when in England a member of the managing committee, I think I can take upon myself to say, that if his Excellency would guarantee 10 l. sterling towards the passage-money of each immigrant, that that body would at once supply this colony with 20 males and 20 females from their institution; the former having all of them learnt something of the trade of a tailor or shoemaker, and the latter qualified to become household servants.

I would suggest that these persons should not exceed the age of 16 at the period of his or her arrival in this country; that they should be articled here for five years to such masters or mistresses as would be willing to pay a premium of 10 l. sterling to indemnify the Government here for so much of the expense for their passage out; that they should be clothed and wholly supported by the several persons to whom they may be so apprenticed, and at the expiration of the term a sum, not less than 25 l., be paid to each immigrant by such master or mistress, subject, nevertheless, to such regulations as his Excellency the Governor shall deem right.

My immediate departure from Auckland will excuse my impressing upon you the necessity of taking his Excellency's pleasure upon this subject as soon as possible; and I have respectfully to request I may be favoured with an early reply.

Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, to J. Stephen, Esq., 29 January 1842.

WE beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, transmitting for our report the copy of a despatch from the Governor of New Zealand on the subject of a proposition made by Mr. Halswell, a Governor of the Society of the Refuge for the Destitute, for the introduction into the colony of some of the inmates of that society.

Before making a report upon this communication, we caused a letter to be addressed to the Secretary of the Refuge for the Destitute, asking whether the proposition in question had been made under express authority from the managing body of the society, and adding that, if so, we requested some further insight into the detail of the plan, and to be furnished with any printed rules and regulations of the society. We have the honour herewith to forward a copy of this letter, and of the replies which were made to it. By the latter it will be seen that the Committee of the Refuge for the Destitute do not consider that Mr. Halswell was authorized to make the proposal, and that it is one which they decline to sanction.

Such being the decision of the Committee upon the plan itself, we have only to say, that it is the conclusion which would have appeared to us also most desirable to be adopted.

Encl. 1, in No. 12. Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 21 January 1842.

I AM directed by the Commissioners of Land and Emigration to acquaint you, for the information of the managing committee of the society, that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has referred for consideration at this board a correspondence which has taken place between the Governor of New Zealand and Mr. Edmund Halswell, a Life Governor of the Society of the Refuge for the Destitute, on the subject of the emigration to New Zealand of some of the inmates of the society.

Mr. Halswell states, that he thinks he can take upon himself to state, that if the Governor would guarantee 10*l.* towards the passage-money of each immigrant, the society would at once supply the colony with 20 males and 20 females, the former having all of them learnt something of the trade of a shoemaker or a tailor, and the latter qualified to become household servants. He further suggests, that these individuals should not exceed the age of 16 at the time of their arrival in the colony; that they should be articled for five years to persons who could clothe and wholly support them, and, at the expiration of the term, pay to each the sum of not less than 25*l.*

The Commissioners fear that there is reason to doubt the expediency of sending out to new settlements young persons whom there are special grounds to wish to guard from temptation. But before making a report on the subject to the Secretary of State, the Commissioners would request to be informed if Mr. Halswell was correct in considering himself authorized to make this proposal on behalf of the society, and if so, whether it would be proposed to send those individuals of whose characters, during their residence in the society's establishment, a favourable opinion had been formed, and whether they would go under the care and protection of any officer or matron belonging to the society. Should there be any printed rules and regulations of the society, it is requested that a copy may be forwarded for the use of the Commissioners.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 21st instant relative to Mr. Halswell's proposal (on the part of this society) to send out 20 youths and 20 females as emigrants to New Zealand, on certain conditions.

This communication I shall have the honour to lay before the managing committee at both our establishments, at their next meetings, and have no doubt they will think it deserving their special consideration.

In the mean time, permit me to take the liberty of stating, that as to any official or specific authority that Mr. Halswell may have conceived he had to make such a proposal, as I, in my capacity of secretary and also chaplain, am ignorant of it, I have therefore ground to doubt it. Perhaps as Mr. Halswell was aware that the committee are in the habit of sending considerable numbers to Canada (from the male establishment) annually, and that some years ago they tried the experiment of sending many of their female objects to Sydney and Van Diemen's Land, that therefore they probably would willingly send them to New Zealand.

For my own part, I much doubt the practicability of the plan. But of that it is for the committee to judge; and the result of their deliberations I shall have the honour to transmit to you for the information of the Commissioners.

I have the honour to send you herewith some of our reports and regulations.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the enclosed copy of a despatch* from the Governor of New Zealand, containing a report of the result of a land sale which took place at Auckland on the 19th of April last, realizing the gross sum of 24,275*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* I also enclose for your information a copy of the reply* which Lord Stanley has returned to that despatch, and I am further to acquaint you that, under the circumstances reported by Captain Hobson, Lord Stanley is prepared to recommend to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to authorize an advance of 6,000*l.* from the Parliamentary estimate on account of the land revenue of New Zealand, to cover half the expense of conveying to Auckland emigrants under your selection, the remaining moiety of the charge being payable in the colony. Lord Stanley conceives that the accounts now received from Captain Hobson warrant the conclusion, that, on the principle which has already been adopted of 50 per cent. of the net produce of the land revenue of the colony being applicable to emigration, at least 12,000*l.* is at present available for that purpose.

No. 1.
Letter from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers to J. Stephen, Esq. 27 January 1841.

WE have the honour to report, for the information of Lord John Russell, and with a view to its being communicated to the proper authorities in the North American provinces, that we have instructed our naval agents to transmit through the post, by the earliest mail-steamers leaving this country after every passenger vessel has cleared for sea at their respective ports, a duplicate list of her passengers, addressed to the immigration agent of the colony to which the ship is bound.

We have adopted this measure under a belief that it would be equally advantageous to the emigrants and to the colonists. From a knowledge of the number of passengers to be expected before the arrival of the vessel in which they embarked, the colonial authorities would be enabled, whenever they should deem it advisable, to make timely provision for their reception and disposal, and to take the necessary precautions against the evils which usually attend the sudden influx of large bodies of poor people, not possessed of accurate information, into places where no adequate preparation has been made for their arrival. Capitalists also, and others in want of labour, would be enabled, by reference to the immigration agent, to know what supply they might shortly expect; and the agent himself would be enabled to exercise a check on the lists furnished by the master, and more immediately to detect any improper addition to the number on board, after the vessel had left the port from which she cleared at the custom-house.

These are some of the reasons for which it has appeared to us that the early transmission to the colonies of duplicate passenger lists would not be without utility; and from the inquiries we have instituted on the subject amongst the several Government emigration agents in this country, we see no reason to suppose that the execution of the measure will be attended with any practical inconvenience.

We beg to enclose, for transmission to the colonies, a list of the officers to whom we have given the instructions alluded to in this letter, and of the ports at which they are resident.

(No. 16.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-General Sir R. D. Jackson, K.C.B. to the Right Hon. Lord Stanley.

Government House, Kingston,

My Lord, 5 October 1841.

IN compliance with the directions contained in Lord J. Russell's circular despatch of the 11th March last, I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith two letters from the emigration agent at Quebec, accompanied by such of the returns prepared by the Land and Emigration Commissioners as he has been able up to the present time to complete.

I regret the delay which has taken place in compiling these returns, but they are so exceedingly minute and voluminous that it would be impossible, without increasing very greatly the establishment of the emigrant agent at Quebec, to avoid it. A great deal of the information indeed it would be impossible for him to obtain even at any amount of expense; such for instance as the number of persons engaged in particular callings, with the places to which they have proceeded, and the manner in which the cost of their journey has been defrayed. A moment's reflection will show that in a colony extending on a straight line upwards of 1,000 miles, and bordering throughout its entire length on a foreign country, inhabited by people speaking the same language, descended from the same stock, and supplied by immigrants immigrants from the same source, the most perfect system of passes would not enable the Government to answer the questions of the Emigration Commissioners; and even if they could be answered, it is not very clear that the information would be of any value in England. It must be remembered also that the emigration season in this country is very short; the great bulk of the emigrants, who this year have exceeded 28,000, arriving in the first three months after the opening of the navigation; that a very small proportion only remain at Quebec and in its vicinity, the remainder dispersing themselves over the whole province, and mostly proceeding to the westernmost districts. It is therefore physically impossible for the emigrant agent at Quebec to keep an accurate account of such large bodies of persons, many of whom do not even land there; none of whom probably remain above a few hours.

Under these circumstances, I would submit to your Lordship whether it might not be sufficient that the emigrant agent should continue to furnish the weekly returns and the annual report which have heretofore been customary, adding information on any particular points which the experience of the Emigration Commissioners may point out as useful to intending emigrants.

I have endeavoured to answer all the questions in these returns, as far as I have had the means of so doing, with correctness. Several I find impossible to furnish, unless by guess; I allude to number of labourers hired at place of landing, ditto who left, mechanics engaged in erecting buildings, and tradespeople making articles of clothing or consumption.

I regret I have not been able to furnish these returns at an earlier date; the remaining returns to this date, amounting to 130, are in a state of forwardness and will be transmitted as early as possible.

I have delayed this a few days in hopes of meeting with a private hand to avoid postage.

Answers to Queries.

1. What is the expense of erecting a country dwelling suitable to an agricultural labourer?—From 5 l. to 12 l. 10 s. a log-house, covered with shingles, and such as is generally erected by new settlers; it is warm and comfortable, and answers every purpose.

2. What is the rent of a town lodging suitable to a mechanic and his family?—From 7 l. 10 s. to 12 l. 10 s. currency.

3. What funds have been placed at your disposal during the past quarter for the relief of immigrants?—A discretionary power; authorized by the Governor-general to assist the sick and destitute, and those who are unable to work.

4. Is there any fund in the colony for the relief of the destitute poor?—None at present, except the limited relief given by private societies and the clergy.

5. State the description of labour which is in request in the colony?—During this last quarter the demand for common labourers in the vicinity of this city and Montreal has been very good on the roads and other public works, and which will continue so long as the season will permit. Agricultural labourers who would be satisfied with the established rate of wages in this section of the province, would have little difficulty in obtaining employment, provided they would take the trouble to seek it; but it is almost impossible to induce them to leave the neighbourhood of the towns and to go into the country settlements, where suitable employment is certain; their object in remaining here is merely to acquire sufficient means to take them further up the country, either to friends or to obtain higher wages. Wages in the month of May and June were unusually high, in consequence of the arrival of a large fleet, and many of the emigrants obtained from 4 s. to 6 s. per day in loading vessels; this only lasted during a fortnight or three weeks, and cannot be depended on in future. Masons have been much required on the King's works, as also carpenters. So few of the latter class of tradesmen bring their tools with them, that they are often disappointed in getting employment. Tailors and shoemakers were in good demand in the early part of the season, but work is now getting scarce. Coopers have been much required in different parts of the country, and I received a notice in the early part of this season, offering employment to from 20 to 30 hands in one establishment. Blacksmiths have also done well. Other tradesmen, to a limited extent, do well, but employment in the neighbourhood of the town soon becomes overstocked.

6. Would the rate of immigration of the last quarter satisfy the existing demand for labour?—It is much more than satisfied in and about this city and Montreal, the St. Lawrence being the great thoroughfare to the western part of the province; all emigrants arriving must pass through these places, whether they are bound to the western section (Upper Canada) or to the United States. But in many other parts of this and the Montreal district labourers and mechanics are much wanted, and if a proper distribution of them could be effected, and they would be willing to work for the established rate of wages of the country, many thousands could be absorbed. I should say four-fifths of the emigrants who land here have a fixed destination in view, either to join their friends or relations in different sections of the province, or to proceed with a similar object to the United States.

7. Could it be safely increased with reference to the supplies of food in the colony?—To any extent with perfect safety.

8. State

NORTH AMERICA.

8. State any particulars relative to immigration, and the demand for labour which you think may be useful?—The most important measure is, first to endeavour to undeceive the emigrants in the very erroneous ideas which they almost all entertain as to the remuneration which they will receive for their labour on arrival in this country. Instances occur almost daily of persons, who in their own country (Ireland) were glad to work for 10*d.* to 1*s.* per day, refusing employment here at 3*s.*; and they do not consider that, for the first season, until they become acquainted with the labour of the country, their services are worth little more than one-half to the farmer. Many, to my certain knowledge, have been offered advantageous engagements in this neighbourhood, but refused permanent employment, preferring to proceed in hopes of better wages, but in which very many are disappointed. Wages for agricultural labour in the eastern townships, and in almost every section of the western division of the province, are higher than in the neighbourhood of this city or Montreal. Six to seven dollars per month is as much as farmers will or can afford to give to newly-arrived emigrants, with board and lodging. Good hands, after a year or so residence, will generally command from 10 to 12 dollars, and found. Labourers who board themselves receive here from 12 to 15 dollars per month. Day labourers always get 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.*, and this season oftener the latter than the former; but if they possess the means of proceeding further, they will seldom work for this. It is most desirable to impress on the intending emigrants the necessity of their being in possession of sufficient means to enable them to proceed to where a demand for their labour exists, as it is extremely difficult, I may say impossible, that when from 2,000 to 3,000, and in some instances 5,000 people arrive here in a week (as was the case this season for several weeks in succession), that employment can immediately be found for all who stand in need. Facilities have occurred this season which were not formerly to be obtained in the neighbourhood of this city and Montreal, viz. immediate employment to all classes of emigrants on the public works and road improvements. This, however, cannot be relied on in future beyond another season.

Letter from J. Stephen, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners. 6 November 1841.

No. 16, Oct. 5.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 6 November 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the copy of a despatch from the officer administering the government of Canada, enclosing various returns which have been furnished, for your information, by the emigrant agent at Quebec, relative to the number and disposal of the emigrants who have arrived in the province during the present year; and I am to request that you will submit to Lord Stanley any observations which you may wish to offer with reference to Sir R. Jackson's proposal that the agent at Quebec should be relieved from the duty of supplying the above-mentioned returns.

Letter from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers to J. Stephen, Esq. 19 February 1842.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 19 February 1842.

As no long period will elapse before emigrants will again be enabled to proceed to Quebec, we beg leave to refer to your letter of the 6th November last, in which you forwarded to us the copy of a despatch from Sir Richard Jackson, submitting to Lord Stanley the expediency of relieving the immigration agent at Quebec from the duty of preparing certain returns according to forms which had been suggested by our Board, and sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

The forms in question were framed intentionally in the most comprehensive manner, in order that they might be adapted to the circumstances of all the different colonies to which emigration is directed, and uniform returns be thus obtained, so far as the circumstances of each colony would allow. It was not desired that any attempt should be made to supply returns to those heads of inquiry which were not applicable to the emigration of any particular colony, or upon which information could not be obtained. We were aware also that much less information could be obtained respecting the voluntary emigration which takes place to Canada, than respecting that to other colonies which is supported by public funds, and consequently is under the control of public officers. The specific points indeed which Sir R. Jackson mentions as those upon which information could not be obtained at any amount of expense, are the trade or calling of the immigrants, their place of destination upon arrival, and their means of proceeding to it. But as regards the first, it is possible that the fact may not have been adverted to, that the list of passengers which is made out at the port of embarkation is required by law to state the professions or occupations of all on board; and from this list, it may be presumed, that the required returns could be furnished. Inquiry as to the second point was made, because it appeared that the immigration agent at Quebec was in the habit of reporting upon it in his weekly returns of the arrival of ships, and it was only expected that he would continue to furnish in these returns similar information, and to the same extent. Thirdly, we would hope that the difficulty in obtaining information as to the number who proceed into the interior of the country by means of public assistance, or by their own resources, will not be considerable, inasmuch as it will be the immigration agent to whom every application for relief will be made, and who will necessarily know the persons to whom, and the objects for which, it is afforded.

Adverting, however, to the more general objections urged to these forms, and having waited also for the actual returns that we might mark those inquiries to which no reply was made, we have prepared other forms, which we beg leave to submit to Lord Stanley's consideration. In these it will be observed that we have limited the subjects of inquiry, and excluded, as we hope, all points upon which it would be impossible, or even difficult, to afford the requisite information.

The proposed forms are two in number. The first is for a return of particulars connected with each ship, which will be substantially the same as that hitherto made by Mr. Buchanan in his weekly reports. The alterations introduced are principally such as would, we hope, increase the means of detecting infractions of the Passengers' Act, and enable us to ascertain generally the mode in which this emigration, over which it is so difficult to exercise control, was being conducted throughout the season.

The second form is only for a quarterly abstract of the foregoing returns, together with certain general questions connected with the state of the colony as bearing upon the prospects of emigrants, which it is desirable should be from time to time answered from authentic sources, for the information of the public in this country.

If Lord Stanley should think proper to forward these forms to Canada, with a view to their adoption, we would recommend that they should also be transmitted for the same purpose to the Governors of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

COPY of a LETTER from G. W. Hope, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 5 March 1842.

I HAVE laid before Lord Stanley your letter of the 19th ultimo, with the forms of returns which you propose the emigrant agent at Quebec should furnish for your information, in lieu of those which, at your suggestion, he had been required to send home.

His Lordship directs me, in answer, to acquaint you that he does not see any objection to the new forms, and that he approves of your proposition to forward them to the Lieutenant-governors of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for their adoption. For this purpose a number of copies should be printed, as on the former occasion.

COPY of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Honourable E. E. Villiers to James Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 10 Nov. 1841.

WE beg to state, for Lord Stanley's information, that under the sanction of his Lordship's predecessor, we are in the course of printing an abstract of the statistical information recently furnished by the Governors of the North American colonies in reply to certain queries prepared by our Board relative to the settlement of land and employment of labour in those provinces. We shall have the honour, shortly, of submitting the proof-sheets of this publication for his Lordship's approval. But the immediate object of our present letter, is to request permission to include under the information we give to the poorer class of settlers the material parts of two letters which have been addressed by the British consuls at New York and at Boston to the Governor of New Brunswick, and upon which we have submitted our observations in our letter of this day's date.

It has always been considered desirable for the sake of the North American colonies, that the emigrants arriving annually from this country should permanently settle and remain in them. It now appears that the emigrants themselves may fail in bettering their condition by removing to the United States, and that indeed in very many instances they become subject to want and misery, especially in the large towns, to which they are usually attracted.

The statements contained in these letters appear to us to be of an important character, and to bear upon a point upon which, perhaps, beyond all others connected with emigration to North America, it appears desirable that the people of this country should possess information derived from authentic sources. We hope that the returns which we are now about to publish may be extensively circulated amongst all parties interested in the subject, and the publication of them therefore appears to offer a favourable opportunity for making known the information which has been furnished by the British consuls.

WITH reference to our letter of the 10th ultimo, we have now the honour to enclose, for Lord Stanley's consideration, a printed copy of the information respecting the North American colonies, which we prepared and digested principally from returns furnished by the colonial authorities, and of which his Lordship's predecessor had already, by your letter of the 30th August, sanctioned the publication. In Appendix (No. 12.), will be found the extracts from the despatches of the British Consuls at New York and Boston to the Governor of New Brunswick, which, by our letter of the 10th ultimo, we requested permission, as containing valuable information, to add to the present work.

Enclosure in No. 9.

Encl. in No. 9.

INFORMATION for Emigrants to *British North America.

* This Enclosure has been printed in the form of a pamphlet, and published by Knight & Co. Ludgate-street.

Preliminary Notice.

Office of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

WITH the view of obtaining information which might probably be useful to persons proposing to settle in the British provinces in North America, the Commissioners of Land and Emigration some time since prepared, in order to be transmitted to the authorities of these colonies, two sets of questions, one embracing the points having reference to emigrants taking out capital, the other those which appeared more especially to relate to the welfare of the labourer.

The colonial authorities circulated these questions amongst Government officers, public bodies, and private individuals, and digested the answers which were obtained into separate returns for each province. These returns, except with regard to Nova Scotia, from which replies have not arrived, are now published in the following pages, as far as possible in the words in which they were received from the colonial authorities.

The Commissioners take the opportunity of the publication of these returns to prefix some other statements and tables which they believe may be of use or interest to parties contemplating emigration. They will be found enumerated in the annexed list of contents.

By order of the Board,

9, Park-street, Westminster, January 1842.

Stephen Walcott, Secretary.

NORTH AMERICA.

(No. 1.)

Colonial Land and Emigration Commission.

As this Commission has only been recently constituted, it may perhaps be useful to give a short outline of the nature of its powers and duties, in order that the public may be the better aware in what manner and to what extent it can avail itself of the establishment.

The Board was appointed by commission under the royal sign manual, and its proceedings are directed by instructions from the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

The practical duties of the Commissioners may be divided under three heads:—

1. Sale of Colonial Lands.
2. Superintendence of Emigration.
3. Diffusion of Information in respect to the Colonies.

1. The Commissioners are enabled to contract for the sale of waste lands in certain of the colonies. They furnish the parties depositing money in this country with certificates of payment available for the purchase of land in the colony, and apply the money to the conveyance of emigrants nominated by the depositors. They have, however, no authority to perform this office in respect of lands situated in the North American colonies.

2. Whenever persons of the labouring class proceed to the colonies at the public expense, it is intrusted to the Commissioners to see, first, that they have not been induced to emigrate by publications improperly representing the advantages which await them. Next, that they are of the description required in the colony to which they are going. Thirdly, that they are forwarded in vessels fit for the voyage, and having on board a sufficient supply of provisions, water, and all other articles requisite for the health and comfort of the passengers. And when the expense of emigration is defrayed by private funds, it belongs to this Board, as far as possible, to protect the poor from imposition, and from the effects of improvident arrangements on their part; and to see that the provisions of the Passengers' Act are duly carried out and enforced.

3. It is the province of the Commissioners from time to time to make public any authentic information which they may receive on matters connected with the settlement of waste lands in the colonies, and affecting the interest of any description of persons who propose to settle in them. They likewise answer all applications from individuals, and afford them, so far as may be in their power, such information as may be adapted to their particular cases.

The office of the Commissioners is at No. 9, Park-street, Westminster, and all communications should be addressed to their secretary, Stephen Walcott, esq.

(No. 2.)

List of the Government Emigration Agents in the United Kingdom.

Lieutenant Lean, R.N. London (office, East Smithfield).
Lieutenant Henry, R.N. Liverpool (office, 33, Union-street).
Lieutenant Forrest, R.N. Leith.
Lieutenant Hemmans, R.N. Greenock.
Lieutenant Hodder, R.N. Dublin.
Lieutenant Friend, R.N. Cork.
Lieutenant Starke, R.N. Belfast.
Mr. Lynch, R.N. Limerick.
Lieutenant Shuttleworth, R.N. Sligo.
Lieutenant Ramsay, R.N. Londonderry.

These officers act under the the immediate directions of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, and the following is a summary of their duties:—

They correspond with any magistrates, clergymen, parish officers, or others who may apply to them for information as to the facilities for emigration from their respective stations. They procure and give, gratuitously, information as to the sailing of ships, and means of accommodation for emigrants; and whenever applied to for that purpose, they see that all agreements between ship-owners, agents, or masters, and intending emigrants are duly performed. They also see that the provisions of the Passengers' Act are strictly complied with, viz. that passenger-vessels are sea-worthy, that they have on board a sufficient supply of provisions, water, medicines, &c., and that they sail with proper punctuality.

They attend personally at their offices on every week day, and generally they afford, gratuitously, all the assistance in their power to protect intending emigrants against fraud and imposition, and to obtain redress where oppression or injury has been practised on them.

REMARKS.

(1) Water, cooking-hearth, fuel, and medicines, are found in all ships, but ship-owners are not obliged to find a surgeon to North America.

(2) The price of intermediate and steerage passages entirely depends on the number of ships going, and of the applications for passages. The prices given for the cabin passage are those charged in packet ships according as passengers are, or are not, supplied with wines. By packet ships, intermediate and steerage passengers are charged 5 s. to 20 s. more than by ordinary vessels. Intermediate and steerage passengers to North America generally victual themselves.

(3) The prices here charged are for private traders. Ships laid on for emigrants take them a little cheaper.

(4) The steerage rate was that paid for the passage of Crown prosecutors in 1840.

(5) Passengers from this port generally find their own provisions.

(6) Some few vessels sail during the summer months, but April is reckoned the best period of departure for emigrants.

(7) But few persons proceed to Halifax.

(8) Same remark as No. 2.

(9) The rates here given are those to New York. The charges to Halifax are about the same.

(10) No passages taken from this port.

(11) Ditto.

(12) Passages very seldom taken.

(13) Very few passengers from London.

(14) No emigration from Liverpool to this colony.

(15) The prices to Miramichi are a trifle lower.

(16) Passage to Miramichi higher.

(17) Prices to St. John's and Miramichi are about the same.

(18) Ditto.

NORTH AMERICA.

(No. 5.)

THE superficies of what before the union of the two provinces was termed Lower Canada (a) has no defined limits to the north; but it has been estimated by Mr. Evans and Mr. Montgomery Martin to contain, exclusively of the surface of the river and part of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, 132,000,000 of acres. The surveyed portion is divided into seignories and townships. The land comprised in the former is upwards of 8,000,000 of acres, and has been all granted by the Crown (b). It is occupied chiefly by the French portion of the population. The surveyed lands in the townships amount to upwards of 6,000,000 of acres, of which about 3,500,000 have been alienated by the Crown (c). The estimated quantity of wild lands, surveyed and unsurveyed, remaining to be granted, which may at present be considered accessible, is about 4,000,000 of acres (d).

The whole area of the upper division of Canada has been estimated at about 64,000,000 of acres (e). The surveyed portion is between 17,000,000 and 18,000,000 of acres; and of this, rather more than 1,000,000, exclusive of the usual reserves, are still at the disposal of the Crown, besides what remains to be surveyed (f).

The area of land in Nova Scotia may be estimated at 8,000,000 of acres, of which about 5,750,000 acres have been granted, and of the remaining 2,225,000, not more than about 280,000 are supposed to be fit for cultivation (g).

The area of New Brunswick is about 16,500,000 of acres. Upwards of 12,000,000 remain ungranted, of which about 11,000,000 are supposed to be fit for cultivation (h).

The area of Newfoundland has been estimated at about 23,000,000 of acres (i), of which 15,000 acres have been appropriated; but there exists no official return of the surveyed and accessible land which still remains at the disposal of the Crown.

Subjoined is a table of the population, according to the last census, in each of the British provinces in North America.

Average of the five years, 86 ½ days' rain; quantity 26 inches, 98 parts. Day on which most rain fell, August 16, 1833, three inches. Average of the five years on which snow fell, 40 days. Average of fair days in each year 240, less by a fraction. The number of fine days was greatest in the harvest months, July, August, and September of the years 1832 and 1834. In the former it was 63, and in the latter 61 days. In 1833, and 1835 particularly, the harvests were unfavourable.

NORTH AMERICA.

NOVA SCOTIA.

The climate of Nova Scotia is much milder in winter than in either of the divisions of Canada; and in summer the heat is not so great; but the weather is said to be more changeable, and more inclined to fog than in Canada.

The following Meteorological Table is for the Town of Halifax:—

MONTHS.	Thermometer.
	Max.	Med.	Min.
January - -	42	20	2	Some clear days.—Some rain and snow.
February - -	40	18	10	ditto - - some rain; cloudy.

* Although this is the current value assigned to the sovereign in the "Blue Book," and by Mr. Young, it generally passes for more, say about 24 s.; but the value of all English coins fluctuates from time to time.

† In New Brunswick the sovereign seldom passes for less than 24 s.; and in June 1841, it was current at 25 s.

NORTH AMERICA.

The rates of exchange vary in the North American colonies from about 6 per cent. to 14 per cent. premium. This, with the difference in value between sterling money and currency, renders 100*l.* sterling generally equal to 120*l.* currency. It usually requires, therefore, that amount in currency to pay 100*l.* sterling in England.

In Nova Scotia promissory notes of the provincial treasury, of the value of 1*l.* and of 10*s.* are in extensive circulation. They are not redeemable in specie, but are received in payment of provincial duties, &c.

Irredeemable treasury notes are also current in Prince Edward's Island, and pass at the rate of 30*s.* for 20*s.* sterling.

The currency of Newfoundland consists almost entirely of British money and Spanish dollars, passing current at 5*s.*

The real value of the Spanish dollar in sterling money is about 4*s.* 2*d.* In commissariat transactions 4*s.* 4*d.* is the value assigned to it.

INFORMATION COLLECTED FOR EMIGRANTS WITH CAPITAL.

N.B.—In these Answers, when money is not stated expressly to be sterling, it is inferred that Halifax currency is meant.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS.
	EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.
1. What is the smallest quantity of land which can be bought of the Government in the colony?	1. Fifty acres.	1. The smallest quantity of farm land usually sold is 50 acres, but town or building lots are sold in smaller portions, as well as park lots in the neighbourhood of towns.*	1. 50 acres. Smaller tracts may be purchased, but the cost for such would be the same as for 50 acres, the expense of the grants to Government being alike in both cases.	1. Town lots in George Town and Prince Town, quarter of an acre each; pasture lots of eight acres each; and township lands in lots of 100 acres each.
2. What is the upset price? and, if this varies, what is the average?	2. 4*s.* 9*d.* sterling, or 6*s.* currency, per acre for lands in the country of Ottawa and on the south bank of the St. Lawrence, to the west of the Kennebec road, and 3*s.* 1*d.* sterling, or 4*s.* currency, per acre for all other lands. N.B. These are fixed prices, the land not being sold by auction.	2. The upset price of government lands is generally 8*s.* currency per acre; clergy reserves are higher, averaging 12*s.* 6*d.* currency per acre.	2. Generally 3*s.* currency (2*s.* 8*d.* sterling) per acre, but varies according to situation, &c.	2. Town lots average 5*l.*, pasture lots 8*l.*, and township lands 12*s.* per acre.
3. What is the average price actually fetched by ordinary country lands?	3. From 4*s.* 2*d.* sterling to 6*s.* 6*d.*; but this depends of course very much upon situation.	3. This question cannot be answered with any certainty; much of course depends upon situation, and many other circumstances. In the back townships, say 4*s.* or 5*s.*, and in others it varies from 10*s.* to 50*s.* and upwards.	3. From 5*s.* to 10*s.* currency (4*s.* 6*d.* to 9*s.* sterling), for uncleared lands near settlements, according to situation and value, &c.	3. From 10*s.* to 14*s.* per acre.
4. What is the average price of land partially cleared and fenced?	4. About 20*s.* per acre.	4. With regard to land that is cleared and fenced, an addition of from 3*l.* to 4*l.* per acre should be made to the value of wild land.	4. This also depends upon situation and quality, varying from 10*s.* to 10*l.* currency (9*s.* to 9*l.* sterling) per acre.	4. A farm of 100 acres, with one-fourth part cleared and fenced, will fetch from 150*l.* to 200*l.*
5. Is it easy, and not expensive, to ascertain the validity of titles to private lands?	5. Heretofore there has been considerable difficulty, but this will be to a great extent removed by the late Registry Ordinance.*	5. There is no difficulty whatever in this respect. Each county has a registry office, where all transfers of land are recorded. The charge for a search is 1*s.* 6*d.*	5. Very easy, and not expensive, as there are registry offices in every county.	5. There is a registry office in which titles to lands are recorded, and these records are open to the inspection of the public upon the payment of 1*s.*
6. What is the cost per acre of clearing waste lands for the drag or harrow?	6. About 2*l.* sterling, but varies with the nature of the soi and the quality of the wood.	6. About 3*l.*, and from 3*l.* 10*s.* to 4*l.* 10*s.* for clearing and fencing. In remote and unsettled parts of the province, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring labourers, the cost is necessarily greater than in others.	6. Average 3*l.* to 4*l.* currency (2*l.* 14*s.* to 3*l.* 12*s.* sterling) for cutting and clearing off the trees, leaving the stumps standing.	6. The cost of clearing lands depends upon the growth of the wood upon it, and varies from 2*l.* to 4*l.* per acre.
7. What kind of land costs most in clearing.	7. Swampy land, growing soft timber, such as pine, hemlock, &c.	7. Swampy lands, and lands covered with heavy timber, pine or hemlock.	7. Swampy land.	7. Lands producing black birch and maple-wood are most expensive to clear, but they are reckoned the best description of lands.
8. Can a capitalist, on arrival, immediately see by list and charts in the office of the Crown Land Commissioner, or the Surveyor-general, what lands already surveyed are open for sale?	8. Yes.	8. Yes, and also at the office of the different district agents, together with any other information relative to Crown lands he may desire. Crown lands open for sale and settlement are advertised in the Gazette.	8. Yes, on application at the Crown Land-office in Fredericton.	8. Plans of all lands which are in the Crown are kept in the office of the Surveyor-general, where the public have access to them, and can see what lands are for sale, and these lands are generally surveyed before sale.
9. If the lands applied for be not surveyed, can they be occupied first and surveyed afterwards?	9. No.	9. No.	9. No, but reserved lands will be prepared for emigrants.	9. No.
10. Will the survey be commenced as soon as the land is applied for?	10. It would not be possible to make a survey on a single application, but in the event of a considerable number applying for land in the same locality, a survey would be at once ordered.	10. Same as Lower Division.	10. Immediately on application.	10. When land is applied for, it is advertised for 30 days, and then sold at public auction. A plan and description thereof is furnished by the Surveyor-general, and a grant is made to the purchaser.

* This Ordinance was passed by the Special Council on the 9th of February 1841.

* The smallest quantity of land that can be obtained of the Canada Company is 100 acres.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS.
	EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.
11. How long after having chosen a lot amongst lands already surveyed is a purchaser liable to be detained before he can effect his purchase and obtain possession of the land?	11. Possibly a fortnight.	11. When lands are advertised for sale, the purchaser, on payment of the price, can obtain a patent as soon as the description can be perfected in the Surveyor-general's office, the Attorney-general's fiat obtained, and the patent completed by the Provincial Secretary.	11. From a week to a month. Measures are in progress to obviate this delay to the purchaser, by surveying and laying out locations in favourable situations.	11. There is no delay from the purchase to the possession.
12. Are any rights in the land reserved to the Crown?	12. Mines of gold and silver, with the rights of working them. The right of making roads and erecting buildings for military defence.	12. Gold and silver mines are reserved to the Crown, as well as white pine trees; but no instances have occurred in which the reservation has been made available.	12. Coal and precious metals.	12. All mines of gold, silver, and other precious metals, and all coal are reserved to the Crown.
13. Are there established charges upon the land?	13. To make roads and bridges.	13. There are no other charges upon the land than the taxes imposed by the Legislature, which average about per acre per annum, for cleared lands, and for wild lands.*	13. None, except the charges for surveying the land.	13. There are no charges upon lands sold by the Crown, except what are made from time to time by local assessments.
14. Should the settler take out all his property in money? or would it be better to invest as much as he can spare in farming stock, or in furniture, clothes, ironware, saddlery, &c., before leaving this country?	14. In money or credit on a London banker; in clothes also, but in nothing else.	14. It would be better for him to convert his money at home into letters of credit, and draw for it as he requires it in the province. He will thus gain the exchange, which is always against the province, and frequently at a high rate. As a general rule, it is better for the emigrant to be as little encumbered with luggage as possible; and the working farmer, whose wants beyond those of necessity are few, should bring nothing with him but bedding and clothing. Owing to the high wages given to workmen, clothes, boots and shoes, &c., are much dearer here than in England, and a good stock of these things will be found of much use. Ironware and almost all the farming implements he will require can be procured in the country better adapted for the colony. Persons with greater means may, however, as soon as they have selected their farms or the land on which they intend to settle, bring with them many articles which will be of great convenience; although this is not absolutely necessary, for almost all their wants can be supplied in the province at an expense not very greatly exceeding the cost at which they can bring them out. In addition to ready-made clothing and bedding, they may bring some crockery, saddlery, carpets, &c., which are manufactured in England, and can be procured there cheaper and better. They must not, however, even of these things, bring too much, the freight on bulky articles being very high. Furniture, for this reason, should not be brought.	14. In money, either British gold and silver or Spanish dollars, taking only clothes and bedding with him. Farming stock and the other articles can be easily obtained in the province.	14. It would be advisable for the settler to take out his property in money, or to lodge it in some safe bank. The bank of British North America affords great facilities for that purpose; and to draw for it as he may want it. Stock and farming implements may be procured in the colony upon as good terms as in England. Plain furniture is manufactured in the colony at a cheaper rate than in England, but clothes are more expensive, and so is ironware. Saddlery of all kinds is reasonable.
15. Is the great proportion of cleared land under tillage?	15. In the seigniories the greatest proportion is under tillage; in the townships, in pasture.	15. There are no farms in Upper Canada devoted exclusively to one or the other of these pursuits. Generally speaking, the greater portion of the farm is under grass, &c., to provide food for the cattle during the winter, except in new farms on which the clearings are not extensive, in which case the farmer usually first raises such crops as he may require for his own consumption or that will meet with a ready sale.	15. Not easy to be determined. In many situations the greater proportion is appropriated to the growing of hay.	15. Yes.
16. Are there parts in which grazing is chiefly used? and if so, name the districts, and the advantages for that pursuit?	16. Grazing is very general throughout the eastern townships, as affording the easiest method of sending produce to market under the present means of communication, and as avoiding the heavy expense of labour.	16. See Answers to Questions 15 and 17, and also Appendix (A).	16. None where grazing is exclusively pursued. After the hay harvest, the cattle are turned upon the meadow lands.	16. The properties of the soil are better calculated for tillage than for grazing.

* It appears from a report of Captain Pringle to the Governor-general of Canada, dated Toronto, 20th January 1840 (printed in Parliamentary Paper, No. 68, for that year), that the taxes annually payable on cultivated lands amount to 1*d.*, and on wild lands to three-eighths of a penny currency per acre.

17. What are the comparative gains of grazing and tillage?	17. Tillage when in the neighbourhood of a market; grazing when distant.	17. In the present imperfect mode of farming in this province, the science being little understood or attended to—and as grazing exclusively has not been tried—it may perhaps be difficult to speak with any certainty as to the comparative profits of tillage and grazing. Many farmers, however, are of opinion that the advantages of the latter are not sufficiently understood, and recommend its adoption. See Appendix (A.).	17. Cannot be stated; no comparison having been made.	17. Grazing is but little attended to, for the reason given above.
18. What is the usual mode of letting; and if by lease, state the conditions, and for what term of years?	18. Land is seldom taken on lease; but where it is, it is generally on condition of receiving half the produce, and supplying half the seed and all the implements and stock.	18. Leasing farms is not usual in Upper Canada; land being so cheap that farmers generally purchase farms for themselves. The rent, when paid in cash, is from 10*s.* to 20*s.* per acre for good cleared and fenced farms, having the necessary buildings, and near a principal market; and from 5*s.* to 10*s.* per acre for farms more removed from a market. But the most common mode is "farming on shares," the proprietor receiving either one-half or generally one-third of the produce, without sharing with his partner either in the labour or the disbursements. The system of leasing by Government has been found inconvenient, and for some years has been discontinued.	18. By lease for short terms, from three to five years, sometimes for money rent, but generally upon shares of half the produce.	18. The usual mode of letting is by lease for from 40 to 999 years; the latter is most common, at an annual rent of from 1*s.* to 2*s.* per acre, with the option of purchasing the freehold at 20 years' purchase. These terms apply to lands let in their wilderness state only, the tenant or settler being at the cost of clearing them.
19. What is the rate of profit on farming operations generally?	19. The money rate is difficult to ascertain; but an industrious farmer will always obtain a comfortable living.	19. It is difficult to state what rate of profit is made by the farmers of the country generally—say 30 per cent. (See answers to questions 15, 16, and 17.) With industry and perseverance, an industrious farmer is sure of securing a comfortable living, particularly if he has sons and daughters to assist him in his labours in the field. Many farmers who commenced with only limited means are now independent.	19. No settled rate of profit. Farmers who perform the labour by their own families obtain a liberal profit; but if they have to hire labour, the profit is small.	19. The colony is not sufficiently advanced in improvement to admit of a correct calculation; but, upon the limited scale of capital employed, the profit may be rated at from 20*l.* to 25*l.* per cent.
20. Are failures of crops common?	20. The wheat crop has failed of late years, from the fly.	20. No. Partial failures of wheat crops from smut, &c. sometimes occur; but the harvest, even in the most unfavourable seasons, has always been more than sufficient to supply the consumption of the province. Last year, in some of the remote settlements, although the quantity of wheat produced in the country was much below average, half the crops remained in the ground from the great expense of transport, owing to the badness of the roads; and wheat was supplied at Kingston and Toronto much cheaper from the state of Ohio than it could be brought a distance of 40 miles through the province. Potatoes, peas, Indian corn, &c. are always a sure crop in Upper Canada.	20. Not more common than in other countries.	20. By no means. Wheat crops are sometimes subject to be attacked by the Hessian fly and by rust; the latter proceeds from heavy night-dews, followed by a scorching sun of a calm morning.
21. What is the rate of interest for money lent on mortgage?	21. Six per cent.	21. Six per cent. is the legal interest of the country: and the best security can always be obtained almost for any amount at this rate; but few lenders content themselves with 6 per cent.,—10 to 12 per cent. is usually obtained for money lent on mortgage by payment of a bonus or other well-known means.	21. Six per cent. is the legal interest.	21. Six per cent.
22. What is the expense of erecting a suitable house for a small farmer, and also of a barn and stables for three horses?	22. House about 20*l.* sterling; barn 20*l.*; and stable 10*l.*	22. A good log-house from 35*l.* to 60*l.*; barn and stables for about 35*l.* to 40*l.* Many houses, however, occupied by the farmers of the country cost much less.	22. A comfortable frame-house from 150*l.* to 200*l.* currency; (135*l.* to 180*l.* sterling;) a frame-barn from 30*l.* to 50*l.* currency, (27*l.* to 45*l.* sterling.)	22. A suitable house for a small farmer may be built for 120*l.*; a barn for 40*l.*; and a stable for three horses for 25*l.*
23. What is the usual rate of money wages to labourers by the year, and by the month, or by the day?	23. From 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* sterling per day, or 2*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.* sterling per month, with board and lodging; without them, about 4*l.* sterling.	23. By the year 25*l.* to 30*l.*; by the month 2*l.* to 2*l.* 10*s.*; by the day 2*s.* to 3*s.* During harvest 4*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.*, with board and lodging.	23. Average about 24*l.* currency (21*l.* 12*s.* sterling) per annum; 40*s.* currency (36*s.* sterling) per month, with board. Day labourers, without board, 3*s.* currency (2*s.* 8*d.* sterling) per day; but in harvest 4*s.* currency (3*s.* 7*d.* sterling).	23. With board, &c. 16*l.* to 18*l.* per annum; 30*s.* to 40*s.* per month; 2*s.* per day.
24. Are there any laws peculiar to the Colony regulating contracts between masters and servants?	24. The relations of master and servant are regulated by Provincial Act (6 Will. 4, c. 27, rendered permanent by Ordinance 3 Vic. cap. 6.)	24. No. The English laws are in force.	24. None peculiar. Similar to the laws of England.	24. Yes; affording equal protection to masters and servants.
25. What is the ordinary price of articles named in the annexed Table?	25. See Table, Appendix (B.), page 224.	25. See Table, Appendix (B.), page 224.	25. See Table, Appendix (B.), page 224.	25. See Table, Appendix (B), page 224.

	EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.
26. Are there places of education for the children of the middle classes?	26. In the towns and townships some means exist, but in the seigniories they are very deficient.	26. Yes, in the towns. In the country the means of education are at present very indifferent; but instruction in the elementary parts of education is afforded throughout the country by means of the district and common schools. Every district is required by law to erect a school-house, and a salary of 100 l. per annum is provided from the funds of the province to the master of such school.	26. There are numerous elementary schools in every parish, and a grammar-shool in each county, towards the support of which the Legislature contribute liberally; and there is also a well-endowed college at Fredericton, where a liberal education may be obtained at moderate expense.	26. There are at present 58 district schools, in which a plain English education may be obtained; and one academy, in which the higher branches of education are taught.
27. Is it cheaper for persons paying their own passage to go to Upper Canada by New York than by Quebec?	27. Much cheaper by Quebec.	27. Quebec is the cheapest route. Many vessels bound to that port, only coming out in ballast, will charge passengers much less; besides, the immigrant, during his journey from thence to Upper Canada, will see more of the country, and have many opportunities of making himself acquainted with particulars respecting it. He will pass through the eastern parts of the province, which are generally lost sight of altogether by persons arriving at Toronto from New York. New York is a more expensive route, and a stranger is liable to have many impositions practised upon him.	27. St. John's (New Brunswick), Miramichi, and St. Andrew's, are ports to which considerable numbers of emigrants annually resort, there being great facilities from the number of vessels returning to the province, which are employed in the export of timber to Europe. Average cost of the passage 3 l. to 6 l. currency (2 l. 14 s. to 5 l. steriing). Many emigrants to the United States come out in ships bound to St. John's and St. Andrew's; and it may be hoped that, when the advantages of a settlement in this province are more generally known and appreciated, many of them will be encouraged to remain.*

The Canada Company in reply to this question state, that "The route from New York is cheaper and more expeditious than from Quebec. The following is a note of the expenses from New York to Toronto, for a gentleman.

"The whole journey from New York to Toronto, including stoppages, is performed in three days. One cwt. of luggage is allowed free; above this quantity is charged freight 5 s. per cwt. of 112 lbs. The expense of living at New York and Quebec is about the same."

* It is right to mention that recent despatches from the Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick state that, in consequence of the check which has been sustained in the timber trade, and of the occurrence of two destructive fires at St. John's, commercial distress was prevailing, and a large number of mechanics and labourers had been thrown out of employment. Every exertion, however, was being made by the local government, with a view for the revival of prosperity, and the developement of the resources of the Colony.

INFORMATION COLLECTED FOR EMIGRANTS OF THE LABOURING CLASS.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS. EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.
1. Is it desirable for agricultural labourers to take with them any implements either for their ordinary occupation or for clearing land? and if so what are they?	1. No.	1. No. The labourer when he arrives and knows exactly the implements he will require, can easily purchase them here, and better adapted to the country.	1. Not desirable, as the necessary implements can be readily procured in the colony.	1. Spades, shovels, West India hoes, and scythes will be found useful for the labourer to take out with him.
2. Is it desirable for artisans to take with them the tools of their trade?	2. Yes.*	2. They may bring such as they already have in their possession, if not very bulky, but all articles of the kind can be obtained in the country.	2. Desirable, but not absolutely necessary.	2. Yes.
3. Should bedding be taken out from England, exclusive of what is necessary for the voyage?	3. Blankets and any light articles of bedding. The emigrant may take out with him a supply of articles of clothing and bedding, because these things can be got cheaper and better in England, but it is by no means necessary to do so, as the province is generally very well supplied by the merchants, with British goods of all kinds.	3. It is not absolutely necessary to do so, as everything can be procured in the country, but if convenient, enough can be brought to supply the wants of the family when they settle. An extra supply of good heavy blankets will be of use for the winter.* Domestic servants can bring out supplies of clothing with advantage.	3. A moderate quantity, especially should the emigrants leave home late in the season.	3. Yes, a supply of blankets is desirable for the labourer to take with him.
4. Should cooking utensils and crockery be taken out?	4. Not beyond what may be required for the voyage.	4. These articles can all be got in the province, as also everything that is imported from England, at an advance on the original price of about 40 per cent. when landed at Toronto, to cover the charges of freight, &c. and the difference of exchange. It is better therefore that the emigrant labourer should come as lightly laden as possible.	4. Not unless required for the voyage.	4. These are to be obtained upon easy terms in the colony.
5. Should warm clothing be provided, or could it be procured more cheaply in the colony?	5. Warm clothing can be procured cheaper and better in England.	5. Clothing cannot of course be procured in Upper Canada cheaper than in England; and if the labourer can afford it, he may bring with him a supply, but it would be as well for him, perhaps, to purchase what he requires in the colony. At all events he should not bring much, for it will be inconvenient to carry about with him. Some woollen stuffs are made in the country, which, though dearer at first, are more durable.	5. It had better be provided, as it cannot be procured so cheaply in the province.	5. Warm clothing is indispensable, but it can be procured of the material manufactured in the colony at low prices.
6. Is there any kind of constitution to which the climate may be considered peculiarly hurtful or unsuitable?	6. No.	6. None. The climate of Upper Canada is very changeable, but certainly peculiarly healthy. Out of two regiments now stationed at London, only six men are in hospital. The ague prevails in new clearings, in old settlements it is rare. Mr. Moodie, the sheriff of the Victoria District, says he does not consider the ague a positive evil, but that when judiciously treated, it prevents more dangerous diseases.	6. None, excepting to persons who have a tendency to pulmonary consumption.	6. The climate is considered to be prejudicial to complaints of a pulmonary nature.
7. What class of country labourers is most in demand?	7. Agricultural labourers.	7. Agricultural labourers; persons who have some experience, and who can make themselves useful on a farm. Young men without families would more readily find employment, as the employer generally provides board and lodging for them. Good house servants bringing with them satisfactory testimonials as to character will also quickly find employment.	7. Agricultural labourers.	7. Agricultural labourers of all descriptions are in great demand.

* So few carpenters bring their tools with them, that they are often disappointed in getting employment.—(From a Return furnished by the immigration agent at Quebec, dated 31 July 1841.)

* See answer to question 14, page 214.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS.
	EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISDAND.
8. Do the wives and children of agricultural labourers readily find employment?	8. Children of 12 years old and upwards; and women during the summer months.	8. Young persons over 15 years of age, and perhaps the women also, if not encumbered with children; but the wife of a labourer can always employ herself usefully at home. On a farm even little children can make themselves of use, and learn habits of industry. In the winter season they can go to school. Women do not generally, in Upper Canada, work in the fields. The growth of tobacco, however, in the western district, is said to furnish employment more suitable for them.	8. They do, especially in seed time and harvest, but it is not so much the practice to employ them in field-work as in the mother country.	8. Yes, particularly during the seasons of planting, haymaking, and harvest.
9. What kinds of mechanics and artisans are most in request?	9. Masons, millwrights, wheelwrights, carpenters, plasterers, bricklayers, blacksmiths, tailors, shoemakers, and good tradesmen of all kinds.	9. Mechanics and artisans of all kinds will readily procure employment. It will be difficult to name any in particular, but perhaps if any distinction is to be made, bricklayers, carpenters, and joiners, cabinet-makers, coopers, millwrights, millers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, shipwrights, boatbuilders, stonemasons, tanners, tailors, and wheelwrights, may be said to be most requisite.	9. There is an ample field, and good wages for almost every kind, but perhaps house carpenters, masons, bricklayers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, and tailors are most in request; and ship-builders at the seaports.	9. House carpenters, blacksmiths, shoemakers, and tailors.
10. What is the best time of year for labourers to arrive at Quebec?	10. As soon as possible after the opening of the navigation,—say in May.	10. In the month of May for agricultural labourers, or at any time before the commencement of the harvest, at which period very high wages are given by farmers, the emigrants can obtain employment, and the emigrant agents can then easily distribute them over the country, which is a very important object. Before the month of May the roads are very bad. If it be the intention of the emigrant to settle on land immediately on his arrival, he must come out by the first ships, so as to commence his farming operations in April. It is better, however, for him, before he works a farm of his own, to commence as a labourer, which will enable him to gain a knowledge of the mode of farming best adapted to the country—learn to chop—and the mode of clearing land, &c., and also enable him by his summer earnings to provide for his wants during the winter, when labour is less in demand.	10. Latter part of April and beginning of May is the best time to arrive in this province.	10. The early part of May is the best time to arrive in this province.
11. Are domestic servants much in demand, and what are their wages?	11. Very much in demand in the towns. Wages for women from 12 s. to 32 s. a month; men from 1 l. to 2 l. per month.	11. Very much, particularly good female servants. Men servants get 2 l. 10 s. and women from 15 s. to 30 s. per month, including board and lodging.	11. Much in demand. Wages for men, 35 s. to 40 s. currency, (31 s. 6 d. to 40 s. 6 d. sterling), per month; women 15 s. to 20 s. currency (13 s. 6 d. to 18 s. sterling), with board, &c.	11. Domestic servants are much in demand: the wages of men servants are 12 l. to 16 l. per year: women servants 6 l. to 8 l.
12. Is there a capitation tax on emigrants, and what is the amount of it?	12. None at present.*	12. No. A tax of 5 s. was levied on each emigrant arriving at Quebec, and applied for relieving the wants of those in distress; but the law has expired.	12. There is a tax upon the masters of vessels of 5 s. currency (4 s. 6 d. sterling) for each adult, when the ship is properly sanctioned to carry out emigrants, and 10 s. currency (9 s. sterling), when not,—two children under 14, three under seven, or one under 12 months, with its mother, being classed as one adult. Province Act, 2d Will. IV. c. 36. This is probably included in the passage-money paid by the emigrants.	12. There is no capitation tax on emigrants,
13. In what shape and under what circumstances is relief afforded to emigrants out of the proceeds of this tax?	13. Answered by preceding.	13. Answered by preceding.	13. It is applied by legislative grants towards relieving the destitute and diseased, and assisting them to reach their places of destination.—See Province Act, 2d Will. IV. cap. 36.	13. See answer to No. 12.

* Since this answer was given, a bill for re-imposing the tax has passed the Canadian Legislature, and now awaits the Royal Assent.

14. Has every emigrant to go to the quarantine station, whether there has been infectious disease on board during the passage or not? If so, how long is he detained there, and at whose cost is he maintained?	14. Vessels having 13 or more steerage passengers, or having disease on board, are required to stop at the quarantine station. The detention, however, does not, on an average, exceed two days, and healthy emigrants are allowed to proceed immediately after the vessel has been cleared. The expense of the quarantine establishment is borne by the Government, and convalescents are forwarded to Quebec free of expense.	14. See answer for the Lower Division of the Province.	14. The vessel, on its arrival, is detained at the station about 48 hours for inspection, and when no infectious disease appears, is then permitted to enter and the emigrant to land.	14. Emigrant vessels are visited by the health officer on their arrival, and if the emigrants be reported healthy, they are allowed to land forthwith, unless the vessel shall have come from an infected port.
15. When the emigrant lands from his voyage, does the Government agent meet him and give him advice as to his future proceedings, and inform him where he is likely to obtain employment?	15. Yes. Printed handbills are always circulated as soon as they arrive at Grosse Isle,* and the emigration agent boards the vessel as soon as it arrives at Quebec.	15. Printed notices are distributed on board, informing them where and to whom to apply, and every information will be given at the offices of the different emigrant agents. The Canada Company has also an agent at Quebec to afford information to emigrants.	15. He can obtain the information on application at the office of the emigrant agent, and also from the Committees of Emigrant Societies.	15. There is no Government agent in the colony, but advice is readily afforded by the agents of the proprietors who reside in Charlotte Town to the emigrants as to the best means of obtaining employment.
16. At what places are these Government agents, and what are their names?	16. At Quebec, A. C. Buchanan, chief agent; Montreal, James Allison; Bytown, George Burke; Kingston, John Roy; and at Toronto, A. B. Hawke, chief agent for Upper Canada. There are also agents for the commission of Crown lands in the different districts, who will furnish emigrants with information of the lands for sale.	16. See answer for the Lower Division.	16. St. John's, Alexander Wedderburn; Fredericton, Edmund Ward, assistant. Others will be appointed.	16. See answer to No. 15.
17. State the length and cost of the journey, noting the difference for children, from the usual port of disembarkation to the principal town or district to which the bulk of emigrants proceed in Canada, especially from Quebec to Toronto. Return the names of the chief intermediate stations, the time consumed in going from the one to the other, and in making the whole journey. The means of conveyance, distinguishing each change from river to canal, from steam-boat to barge, or from water-carriage to cart or stage-coach, and the expense, pointing out the places in which maintenance is included in the fare or has to be paid for by the emigrant, and estimating the charges of lodging and subsistence at those places where the travellers have to stop for a night, so that the sum total may exhibit the entire cost of the whole journey?	17. See Appendix (C. 1.), page 225.	17. See Appendix (C. 2.), page 225.	17. The expense of a journey from any of the seaport towns in New Brunswick to the neighbouring settlement districts cannot exceed 20*s.* or 30*s.* currency (18*s.* to 27*s.* sterling) for one individual; and even should he go first to the seat of government, Fredericton, to select land, and then to the situation chosen, the actual travelling expense would not exceed from 2*l.* to 5*l.* currency (1*l.* 16*s.* to 4*l.* 10*s.* sterling). Many, however, get immediate employment in the seaport towns, and very many (some from having friends there, others in the hope of getting higher wages, go to the United States, which they can readily do at a trifling expense by water. It is to be regretted that emigrants, on their arrival, demand the highest wages, though the generality of them are completely ignorant of the labour of the country, and are thereby often kept out of employment. This may be attributed to the inducement of high wages upon their arrival held out to them by ship-captains, &c. to get the passage-money, and by false friends in the colony, who are desirous of keeping up the rate of wages, and who, having become acquainted with the work required, thus maintain a monopoly.	17. On the emigrant's landing at Charlotte Town, a trifling expense will take him to any part of the colony.
18. When he leaves water-carriage, as, for example, in Canada, the great line of the St. Lawrence, or the Rideau and the Lakes, what means are there for the transport of himself and his family to the place where his labour is required?	18. Waggons can be hired at a moderate rate—say 3*s.* sterling per cwt. for 50 miles.	18. The emigrant agents at Bytown, Kingston, and Toronto, have hitherto had it in their power to grant assistance to indigent emigrants to proceed to their destination—the expenses being defrayed from the Crown Revenues of the Province. The fare by the various stages, &c., is moderate.	18. New Brunswick is intersected by numerous rivers and rapidly-improving roads, by which the settler can with facility transport himself and family to the interior of the province.	18. Answered in No. 17.
19. Is it customary to pay money wages? State the average wages of mechanics and labourers named in the annexed Table, Appendix (D.)*	19. Yes. See Table, Appendix (D.), page 227.	19. Yes. (See Table, Appendix (D.) page 227.) Sometimes the farmers pay part of the wages in produce.	19. Generally speaking it is; but in some parts of the colony a proportion is paid in clothing and provisions, &c. See Table, Appendix (D.), page 227.	19. Yes. See Table No. 1, Appendix (D.), page 227.

* See also page 229.

* Grosse Isle is the quarantine station.

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS. EASTERN (LOWER) CANADA.	WESTERN (UPPER) CANADA.	NEW BRUNSWICK.	PRINCE EDWARD'S ISLAND.
20. When public works are in progress, are the wages generally at a higher or a lower rate than those paid by farmers?	20. Somewhat higher.	20. The wages paid by Government are nearly the same. They are paid always in money at 3*s.* 9*d.* per day, the labourer providing himself with board and lodging. Being employed on the works is of no advantage to the emigrant beyond the sum he receives for his labour. He learns nothing of the country or of agricultural occupations, and is much more tempted to give way to intemperate habits. Besides, as there is seldom a steady demand for labourers of this description, he may be thrown out of employment.	20. Generally higher, as it increases the demand for labour.	20. There are no public works in progress in the colony.
21. If the public works are at a distance from the towns, does Government provide lodging for the labourers?	21. No; but "Shanties" are commonly provided by the contractors.	21. The labourers generally put up temporary buildings near the works for themselves and families, sometimes the contractors of the work by whom the labourers are engaged provide the houses for them.	21. None have been undertaken of any note in this province at any considerable distance.	21. See the answer to No. 20.
22. What is the usual period of hiring for farm labourers?	22. By the month and year.	22. They are sometimes hired by the year, but oftener by the month, receiving higher wages during the summer months.	22. Frequently by the year, but generally by the month.	22. In the months of May and November.
23. To what extent do the wages of labourers vary in summer and in winter?	23. About one-third less in winter, except in the case of lumberers.	23. For three months in the summer season the wages are about one-third higher than during the other nine months: in the towns the wages do not vary.	23. About 5*s.* currency (4*s.* 6*d.* sterling) per month less in winter, except in the lumbering districts.	23. From 9*d.* to 1*s.* per day, and from 10*s.* to 15*s.* per month.
24. What are the usual wages by week or month to farm labourers during harvest?	24. From 3*l.* to 4*l.* sterling per month, with board and lodging.	24. During harvest expert agricultural labourers generally receive 4*s.* 6*d.* and 5*s.* per day, with board and lodging.	24. 3*s.* currency (2*s.* 8*d.* sterling) per day if fed, or 4*s.* currency (3*s.* 7*d.* sterling) if not, and from 2*l.* 10*s.* to 3*l.* currency (2*l.* 5*s.* to 2*l.* 14*s.* sterling) per month with board, lodging, &c.	24. 20*s.* per week.
25. State the average retail prices in summer and winter of the articles named in the annexed Table, Appendix (E.)	25. See the Table, Appendix (E.), page 228.	25. See the Table, Appendix (E.), page 228.	25. See the Table, Appendix (E.), page 228.	25. See Table, Appendix (E.), page 228.
26. Does the price of provisions increase much in the settlements which are distant from towns?	26. Groceries are dearer, but other provisions are not so.	26. All farm produce is cheaper in settlements remote from a market; but groceries and all imported articles are dearer in consequence of the cost of transport.	26. In proportion to the distance from the town and the land carriage.	26. Not materially.
27. Is beer the common drink of the labourers? and if so, can it be procured all the year, and at what price?	27. No; except in cities and towns. Native whiskey and rum are their common drink.	27. Beer is not the common drink of labourers out of the towns, but it is coming more into use. It is brewed of an excellent quality at about 1*s.* per gallon.	27. It is not used in the country districts, but may be obtained in the towns, price from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* currency (1*s.* 4*d.* to 1*s.* 9*d.* sterling) per gallon. The labourers, however, generally prefer West India rum. There are temperance societies in the province.	27. Spirits are in too common use. There are two breweries in Charlotte Town where beer can be procured all the year, varying in price from 9*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* per gallon.
28. Will land be granted by the employers of labour on which to erect a dwelling? and what extent of garden allotment is usually added?	28. Such an arrangement is not usual.	28. The practice has not been introduced into Upper Canada, but no doubt a sufficient quantity of land would readily be allowed to a labourer's family for the purpose of erecting a dwelling and for a garden allotment. It would prove besides an advantage both to the employer and the immigrant, and the latter with such accommodation would accept lower wages.	28. It will, if required, with ample extent of garden, but labourers generally board with the farmers. Those with families, except in towns, readily get land of their own on which to build.	28. It is not the custom to grant lands for these purposes in the colony.
29. What is the expense of erecting a log-hut.	29. 5*l.* to 20*l., according to the size, &c.	29. It varies from about 3*l.* to 10*l.*, or more, the price of course depends altogether upon the description of dwelling required. The usual mode of putting up buildings by a settler in the country, and which cost but little, is to obtain the assistance of all his neighbours, which is called a Bee; he has to provide provisions for them while they are thus employed.	29. A very comfortable one from 15*l.* to 20*l.* currency (13*l.* 10*s.* to 18*l.* sterling. But much less when the work is chiefly performed by the emigrant himself.	29. 20*l.*

* From 5*l.* to 12*l.* 10*s.* is the expense of erecting a log-hut covered with shingles, and such as is generally erected by new settlers. It is warm and comfortable, and answers every purpose. The rent of a town lodging at Quebec, suitable to a mechanic and his family, is from 7*l.* 10*s.* to 12*l.* 10*s.* currency.—(From a Return furnished by the immigration agent at Quebec, dated July 31, 1841.)

30. Does this log-hut afford sufficient protection against the weather in all seasons?	30. Yes, if properly constructed.	30. A log-hut, if properly constructed, can be made a very comfortable dwelling, and much warmer than a frame-house.	30. When properly built, it is extremely warm and comfortable.	30. Yes, and are considered to be very warm, in the winter.
31. Should locks, hinges, latches, bolts, &c. be taken out from England?	31. No.	31. By no means; if wanted they are easily to be got in the country; but few houses of farmers and labourers have any other than wooden hinges, bolts, &c., which answer every purpose.	31. Quite unnecessary.	31. These articles can be purchased in the colony on easy terms.
32. Is there a clergyman in each of the settled districts?	32. Generally there is.	32. Yes; but in many parts of the country many more are required to supply the wants of the inhabitants of all denominations.	32. Many of the settled districts are destitute of clergymen, but almost all are occasionally visited either by clergymen or dissenting ministers.	32. Each settlement is within a convenient distance of a place of worship, but not of the Church of England; there are only three clergymen in the colony of that denomination.
33. Are there the means of education in the rural districts?	33. There are, but not adequate to the wants of the people.	33. The means of education in the country are at present very indifferent, but instruction in the elementary parts of education is afforded throughout the country by means of the district and common schools. Every district is required by law to erect a school-house; and a salary of 100*l.* per annum is provided to be paid from the funds of the province to the master of the school.	33. Yes; several elementary schools in each parish, supported by local contributions, aided by grants from the Legislature.	33. Yes, in the greator part of them.
34. Are there any savings banks? and if so, what interest on deposits is allowed?	34. In the towns only. Interest three per cent.	34. There is a savings bank at Toronto which pays five per cent. on deposits. The amount of deposit for each individual is limited to 50*l.* currency.	34. There are two savings banks, one at St. John's, New Brunswick, the other at Fredericton. Interest five per cent. The deposits invested in public securities.	34. There are no savings banks.
35. Are there any hospitals or infirmaries?	35. In the towns only.	35. There is an hospital at Toronto and at Kingston.	35. There are alms and workhouses for the poor in the counties of St. John, York, St. Andrew's, and Northumberland, and overseers of the poor in every town and parish; also a penitentiary and lunatic asylum at St. John. Marine hospitals for the reception of sailors, and establishments of boards of health at the chief seaports.	35. There are no hospitals or infirmaries.
36. Are there any benefit societies?	36. In the towns only.	36. The national societies devote what small funds they have to charitable purposes, but the relief thus afforded is not very considerable.	36. None but the national ones of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick, which expressly afford relief to emigrant settlers.	36. There are no benefit societies.
37. Is there any fund for the relief of the destitute?	37. There are charitable societies in the principal towns, and grants are made from the public funds to certain benevolent institutions, but there is no tax whence to form a general fund.	37. There is a house of industry at Toronto, supported by voluntary contributions. Its disbursements last year were 800*l.* There are between 70 and 80 inmates, who are lodged, boarded, and clothed, and about 250 out-door pensioners receiving relief.	37. There is a rate raised in each parish for relief of the poor, and a fund derived from the payment of 5*s.* currency (4*s.* 6*d.* sterling) on each emigrant on arriving, to be applied to relieve them, and assist them in removing to their locations. There are also funds raised with these objects by the several emigration societies, which are formed and forming, assisted by legislative grants. *	37. There is no regular fund for that object. In the few cases which arise, relief is afforded by the Legislature.

Appendix (A.)

(Referred to in the Answer to Question 16, page 214.)

MR. WIDDER, one of the Commissioners of the Canada Company, has furnished the two following statements; the first, with reference to tillage, he states he procured from a very intelligent and respectable yeoman, settled in the London District:—

"Cost of clearing 10 acres of heavy timbered land, in the usual Canadian fashion, with an estimate of the crops to be produced therefrom during the first three years after clearing,—

	Dr. £. s. d.	Cr. £. s. d.
FIRST YEAR.
Chopping, clearing and fencing 10 acres, 7 rails and riders, i. e. a substantial fence, at least 8 feet high, so as to leave it fit for the drag, and sowing it, at 4*l.* per acre -	40 – –
Seed, 1½ bushel wheat to the acre, say 15 bushels, at 5*s.* - - - - - - - - - -	3 15 –
Sowing and dragging at 5*s.* per acre - - - -	2 10 –
Harvesting at 7*s.* 6*d.* per acre - - - -	3 15 –
The value of the straw, tailing wheat hulls, and on the farm, are supposed to be equal to the threshing and cartage to the barn.
Cr. by 20 bushels wheat per acre; 200 bushels at 3*s.* 9*d.* - - -	- - -	37 10 –
SECOND YEAR.
To timothy and clover seed, at 2*s.* 6*d.* per acre - -	1 5 –
Mowing and taking off hay, at 7*s.* 6*d.* per acre - -	3 15 –
Cr. by 1½ ton per acre of hay, at 6 dollars per ton - -	- - -	22 10 –
THIRD YEAR.
To mowing and taking off the hay, at 7*s.* 6*d.* per acre -	3 15 –
Cr. by 1½ ton hay per acre, at 6 dollars per ton - -	- - -	22 10

Balance - - - -	23 15 –	—
£.	82 10 –	82 10 –

"In this case the value of the after-grass is not taken into consideration, although it is of great value to the farmer, it being the object of this statement to make every allowance for extra expenses, and as it might possibly be thought that the prices of labour were stated at too low a rate, the value of the after-grass is thrown into the scale to compensate for any deficiency in the statement of expenses.

"The same quantity of land cleared by slashing:—

	Dr. £. s. d.	Cr. £. s. d.
FIRST YEAR.
Slashing 10 acres, at 4 dollars per acre - - -	10 – –
This is to be allowed to lie three years: interest on 10*l.* for three years at 6 per cent - - - - -	1 16 –

Ploughing twice, at 15*s.* per acre, 7*s.* 6*d.* each time -	7 10 –
Dragging and seed - - - - - - - -	6 5 –
Harvesting - - - - - - - -	3 15 9
Cr. by 25 bushels wheat to the acre; 250 bushels at 3*s.* 9*d.*	- - -	46 17 6

SECOND

Harvesting - - - - - - - - -	3 15 –
Cr. by 20 bushels rye per acre, at 3*s.* 9*d.*: rye in Zorra always brings an equal price with wheat for distilling; but say, to be quite certain, at 3*s.* 1½*d.* - - -	- - -	31 5 –
THIRD YEAR.
To timothy and clover seed, at 2*s.* 6*d.* per acre - -	1 5 9

"The mode of clearing land for slashing, although more tedious from having to wait two or three years after the trees are cut, is attended with less personal labour; and all the trees being cut in the height of summer, never again sprout, and the stumps rot out two or three years earlier than by the common mode. The description of crop, too, is more saleable and better for persons who have not capital to buy stock to feed off the hay with.

"In the foregoing statements it is not meant to assert, that in the back townships cash can be got for hay, but it is rated at the price mentioned, which it is fully worth for feeding cattle.

"It will be observed, that in these statements no mention is made of the profit to be derived from the feeding of cattle, this is left out purposely in order to show that the actual produce in wheat and hay, taking it under every common disadvantage, would, in three years, pay for the clearing, &c.

"It also appears that the clearing of wild land, and thus forming what is called in this province a fallow for wheat, is not more expensive than for preparing a fallow for wheat in the old country.

"The farmer who furnished the data upon which these statements are made, went into the different items, and satisfactorily proved that three or four ploughings, marling, chalking, or both, manuring and otherwise preparing an acre of land in England so as to make a good summer fallow of it, and ensure a profitable crop of wheat, was, without taking rent, poor rates, and taxes into consideration, fully equal to the price of clearing (not taking into account the fencing) an acre of land in Canada.

"In both instances the crop is nearly the same; if any difference, the advantage is in favour of Canada, as the average of the wheat crop throughout Canada is considerably greater than the average of the wheat crop in England; and, although in Canada the price is much less for the produce, yet there is neither rent, rates, nor taxes to pay.

"It must be borne in mind, in making a comparison between Canada and Britain, that in the case of the latter a fallow is prepared for the crop, or at most the crop and the succeeding one, while in Canada, when once an acre of land is cleared, it ranks in the farmer's lists of assets for ever at the value of its cost of clearing, as it is in fact so much reclaimed from the forest, which for eight or ten years at least will require scarcely any expense in the way of manure or fencing.

"The preceding accounts show that the farmer would have 10 acres of cleared land, substantially fenced, the fence of which will last without repair from 12 to 15 years, and with repair, for 20 years at least; and it must also be borne in mind, that in case the farmer does the labour with his own hands and the assistance of his family, the whole amount of the debit side, with the exception of the cost of seed, is swept off, leaving the clear profit in the first case 77*l.* 10*s.*, and in the latter 91*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*; that, at the end of the time before mentioned, the land is actually better than it was when it was first cleared, and that every year afterwards it goes on improving until the stumps rot out, when it should be gradually levelled, and then it will be advisable to adopt the usual course of good English farming.

"As to profits upon grazing, they are very considerable. The demands for cattle for the use of the colony cannot be supplied, except by importation from the United States, where considerable numbers of sheep are raised for the wool. In the Huron tract and Wilmot, the pasture afforded to cattle in the woods is so excellent that, without any assistance, they get remarkably fat and fit for slaying. In Wilmot, the Huron, and Waterloo, the number of sheep is much on the increase, and large flocks are seen. In Waterloo several fulling mills are erected, and large quantities of woollen yarn spun by the women and children, which is made into a durable flannel, stockings, and coatings.

NORTH AMERICA.

"PROFITS UPON GRAZING.

"From the statement of a respectable and intelligent individual, residing in Zorra, whose veracity I have no reason for doubting, it appears that the value of stock in that township is as follows:—

"Sheep (store), after shearing, 10*s.* a-piece.
"Working cattle, per yoke, 50 to 60 dollars.
"Year-old hogs, 12*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* each.
"Horses, from 30*l.* to 40*l.* the span (the pair).
"Cows, 16 to 20 dollars each.

"It appears that stock farms are much more profitable than merely grain farms, on account of the great increase in the value of cattle in the first three or four years. The following is a fair statement of what may be done with them:—

"In the fall of the year ox calves, calved in the spring, may be purchased for 20*s.* currency per head, generally at something less. The next autumn, when two years and a half old, they are worth 80*s.* each; and the spring following, are fit to break in, and then are worth 5*l.* each, or 10*l.* per yoke. The stock farmer should not keep them longer, as they will not continue to increase in the same proportion. Heifer calves are equally profitable to keep."

The western parts of Upper Canada, on account of the winters there being shorter and milder, would no doubt answer far better for rearing stock of all kinds than the eastern districts, and the practice would be taken up more generally were the productions of the neighbouring states prohibited from being imported. The farmers throughout this province complain loudly that the American people are permitted to bring their produce for sale into Upper Canada, whereas the produce of their own country cannot be introduced into the States without paying a heavy duty.

On the arrival of the emigrant vessel at Quebec, the emigrant, if he intends to proceed to Upper Canada, should on no account leave the vessel except it be to go with the long-boat direct with his luggage to the steamer for Montreal; and not unfrequently the steamer comes alongside the emigrant ship, and thus facilitates the re-embarkation of the emigrant. The captain of the ship can easily arrange this with the steamer. Very little difficulty is experienced by the emigrant at Quebec; a few hours suffice to provide his family with the necessaries of life, if his supplies are run out. The steam-boat goes up the river to Montreal in about 24 hours, a distance of 180 miles. The charge for deck passengers is 7*s.* 6*d.* † and no charge is made for luggage - - - - - - - - - - -	– 7 6
The fare is reduced when there is any competition to 5*s.* and less. Next year it may be reduced much more, as new steamers are preparing for this route. The emigrant, before going on board the steamer, should boil as much pork or beef as will serve him for a day or two, which he can do before leaving the ship; in a few minutes he can procure fresh bread; and if he has a large tin tea-pot, with a few tins, he can with ease get hot water in the steamer to make some tea, to refresh the members of his family

* In Table at page 205 the distance from Quebec to Toronto is stated to be 570 miles, and towards the bottom of page 226, at 606 miles. This difference arises probably from different routes being taken.

† Mr. Widder says 5*s.* (for every adult.)

family on the way up. On his arrival at Montreal he should, with as little delay as possible, get his luggage transported to the barges of the forwarding company. He will find many carters in readiness for this purpose, and must take care not to be imposed upon by them; 1*s.* 6*d.* should be sufficient to take all his things to the station of the barges. Here the fare is, from Montreal to Bytown, per adult 8*s.* Allowance for luggage, 1 cwt. or 1¼ cwt., free; and for any quantity over and above this, 2*s.* per cwt. The barges arrive at Bytown about 72 hours after leaving Montreal. The same barges continue through to Kingston. The fare from Bytown to Kingston is, per adult, 10*s.*; same allowance of luggage as above, and 2*s.* 6*d.* for each cwt. extra: add 1*s.* per day for meals from Quebec to Bytown, say eight days - - - -		1	6

When the emigrant gets on board the barge at Montreal, his luggage need not be moved until he reaches Kingston. He will find utensils for cooking, and the female part of his family will find shelter in the cabin of the barge. In case of foul weather, he can get his family on board of the steamer at Lachine, (seven miles from Montreal,) where the barges are taken in tow to Carillon, about 40 miles from Lachine. The barges there take seven or eight hours in getting through the locks, and getting up to Grenville. On the way, the emigrant can buy a few potatoes from the farmers on the canal. The prices of provisions do not vary from Montreal to Kingston; potatoes 1*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* per bushel; pork 5*d.* to 7*d.* per lb.; butter 8*d.* to 10*d.*; flour 5 dollars to 6 dollars per barrel; tea 3*s.* to 4*s.* per lb.; sugar 6*d.* per lb.; eggs 8*d.* to 10*d.* per dozen; butcher's meat 3½*d.* to 5*d.* per lb. according to the quality. All these articles are easily procured on the way. From Grenville to Bytown is about 65 miles, and the barges are towed by a steamer, and reach in about 15 or 16 hours. On their arrival at Bytown the barges have again to pass through locks, which causes a detention of some hours. The passage from Bytown to Kingston is rather tedious; but as it affords to the emigrant various opportunities of seeing the country, and many of engaging as a farm servant, he should not look upon it as altogether lost time.

A greater error is committed by the emigrant in asking exorbitant wages on his arrival; he should content himself at first with 3*s.* or 4*s.*, and take the first employment that offers. Many emigrants on arrival at Quebec and Montreal have not the means to carry them forward, but they find no difficulty in getting work about the coves at Quebec, and are very soon enabled to lay up sufficient to carry them up the country. They should on no account remain in Quebec or Montreal during winter, as they will assuredly have much privation and hardship to contend with. However high the wages may be in the busy season, the winter presents to them a barren field.

At Kingston there are steamers for Toronto, distant 170 miles, and for Hamilton, at the head of Lake Ontario, distant from Kingston 210 miles. The time occupied at Toronto is 24 hours; the deck fare is usually 7*s.* 6*d.* Last season it was only 5*s.* for each adult, exclusive of provisions. Two children under 14 years of age are charged as one passenger. The distance from Quebec to Toronto is 606 miles;* time occupied in performing it last season about 10 days, and the total expense for each adult, including provisions, is, including two days' provisions from Kingston to Toronto - - - - - - - - - - - -		7	6

CAUTION to Emigrants against refusing Offer of Good Wages.

The following is an Extract of a Report from the Chief Immigration Agent at Quebec, to the Governor-general of Canada, dated 31 July 1841.

"The most important measure is, first, to endeavour to undeceive the emigrants in the very erroneous ideas which they almost all entertain as to the remuneration which they will receive for their labour on arrival in this country. Instances occur almost daily of persons who, in their own country (Ireland) were glad to work for 10 d. to 1 s. per day, refusing employment here at 3 s., and they do not consider that for the first season, until they become acquainted with the labour of the country, their services are worth little more than one-half to the farmer. Many, to my certain knowledge, have been offered advantageous engagements in this neighbourhood, but refused permanent employment, preferring to proceed in hopes of better wages, but in which very many are disappointed.

"Wages for agricultural labour in the eastern townships, and in almost every section of the western division of the province, are higher than in the neighbourhood of this city or Montreal; six to seven dollars per month is as much as farmers will, or can afford to, give to newly-arrived emigrants, with board and lodging. Good hands, after a year or so of residence, will generally command from 10 to 12 dollars, and found. Labourers who board themselves receive here from 12 to 15 dollars per month. Day labourers always get 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.*, and at this season oftener the latter than the former, but if they possess the means of proceeding further, they will seldom work for this.

"It is most desirable to impress on the intending emigrants the necessity of their being in possession of sufficient means to enable them to proceed to where a demand for their labour exists, and it is extremely difficult, I may say impossible, when from 2,000 to 3,000, and in some instances 5,000 people arrive here in a week (as was the case this season for several weeks in succession), that employment can immediately be found for all who stand in need.

"Facilities have occurred this season which were not formerly to be obtained in the neighbourhood of this city (Quebec) and Montreal, viz., immediate employment to all classes of emigrants on the public works and road improvements. This, however, cannot be relied on in future beyond another season."

(No. 12.)

CAUTION against Re-emigrating from the British Colonies into the adjoining States.

The following are Extracts of Despatches from Her Majesty's Consuls at New York and Boston, in reply to Inquiries on the subject of Emigration from the British Provinces into the United States, recently addressed to them by the Lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick.

EXTRACTS of DESPATCH, dated 30th September 1841, from the Consul at New York to the Lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick.

"I BEG to say that my office is daily beset by numbers who have landed at Quebec, St. John, and other ports from the United Kingdom, who merely remain as long in Her Majesty's possessions as they can either earn by their labour, or as they can obtain without labour, as much money as will pay their passage to the States. I may state that in nine cases out of ten the poor people deplore how they have been duped, while, from their having left Her Majesty's possessions, I do not feel it my duty to render them any pecuniary aid.

"Several emigrant associations have been formed in this city, but they have been short-lived from being so borne down with applicants, and one established last year, will, I presume, expire with the year.

"It may appear extraordinary to your Excellency that more persons receive charitable aid in this city than in Dublin, or any city in Her Majesty's dominions of the same extent of population. The numerous charitable institutions have entailed this evil upon the city.

"There is continually arriving in this city a class of British emigrants, whose condition here is truly distressing; viz., persons above the rank of the labouring class, the sons and daughters above the scale which furnish servants, some of whom have been well educated; some of them are well qualified to act as teachers in various branche, sbut all such are miserably disappointed; not a few are provided for by death in the unhealthy climate of the Southern States, to which they have to resort, while many enter the service of the United States army.

* * * * *

"For above 25 years I have witnessed the misery and disappointment of thousands who have arrived here, while the most deplorable sufferers are females, and those men who will not labour. I know not how it is in New Brunswick, but in Upper Canada females are sure of employment, and if prudent and well conducted, certain of getting comfortably married, while here distress drives hundreds to the most degrading haunts of prostitution. If females are good looking, and out of employment, they are picked up at the offices for servants and carried to the South for prostitution, without their being aware of it, until entangled in a net from whence they cannot extricate themselves, and houses of ill fame are generally supplied by girls from these offices.

* * * * *

"A labouring man may work hard all his life in the United Kingdom, or Ireland, and never will acquire 50 acres of land, while five years of such labour, if he avoids spirituous liquors, will enable a labouring man in Canada, and I presume also in New Brunswick, to acquire 50 acres, if not more, with a dwelling. I speak from actual observation. Labouring with the axe and hoe is so different, I may say so gentlemanly a description of labour, that our respectable young men do not view it as working with a spade and reaping-hook in Ireland is considered, while in a short time an active young man may obtain 3*l.* per month, steady wages, with board, and be regarded as one of the farmer's family."

EXTRACT of DESPATCH dated 2d September 1841, from the Consul at Boston to the Lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick.

"To your various queries relative to the situation of the Irish emigrants in this city and neighbourhood, I can state—

"1st. That the numbers are unquestionably in excess of the demand, and that there is by no means sufficient employment for them.

"2d. The rates of wages for labour are at present fluctuating, and depending in a great measure on locality. A dollar a day has been considered until lately a fair and general price, but there are great numbers of men now here, altogether out of employment, and I have good reason to think that the labouring Irish would willingly compound for 50 cents (half a dollar) per day, to be guaranteed constant work.

"3d. Wages are in all cases, I believe, in this neighbourhood paid in money, and I have known but few instances of complaint for want of punctuality.

"4th. The summer season cannot be considered by any means unhealthy or uncongenial to the emigrants.

"5th. Very few return direct to Europe from this port, and as no vessels are employed in the transport of emigrants from the United Kingdom direct to Boston, it is only from the province of New Brunswick that they come here in any numbers. Some stragglers arrive from New York, or come down from Canada. Those who leave Massachusets and the other New England States, after vain attempts to get employment, invariably remove to the West, through New York State. Numbers are now temporarily engaged on the Western Railroad, which has been completed beyond the boundary of the State of Massachusets, in that direction. I may also mention, that all the other railroads radiating from this city, with the exception of one in the direction of Maine, have been carried beyond the limits of Massachusets, and the demand for Irish labour is consequently much limited in this quarter.

"The strong prejudice which exists in this part of the Union against the labouring Irish, tends much to make them discontented; could encouragement be held out to them with the certainty of employment in New Brunswick during the whole year, I have no doubt that numbers would be induced to return to that province, or to proceed to Canada on the same terms."

COPY of a LETTER from G. W. Hope, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 29 December 1841.

I HAVE laid before Lord Stanley your letter of the 17th instant, with the proof copy of a pamphlet which has been prepared by you for the information of intending emigrants to British North America, and I am directed to acquaint you that his Lordship does not perceive any objection to the proposed publication, but he thinks that the information contained in the despatches recently received from the Lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick, of which extracts are enclosed, will render some caution necessary to persons who may propose settling in that province, to prevent their indulging in expectations which they might be led to form from the perusal of No. 13, and which it is to be feared that the present state of New Brunswick would not justify.

Enclosure 1, in No. 10.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Sir Wm. Colebrooke, to Lord Stanley, dated Fredericton New Brunswick, No. 75, 12 November 1841.

Encl. 1, in No. 10.

"The system of statute labour, which imposes on the labouring classes an obligation to render annually four days' labour gratuitously in the repairs of the roads, is generally complained of, and the attempts which have been made in the legislature to amend this system by substituting a uniform rate upon the granted lands have hitherto failed. Such a measure, by subjecting proprietors to a moderate charge for those improvements by which the value of their property is sustained and augmented, is so equitable that I hope it may be adopted.

"With the exception of the statute labour for annual repairs, there are no local appropriations for roads or bridges, which wholly depend on the grants of the Assembly, nor are these provided for by the application of the public credit to these indispensable works, but they constitute a direct charge on the annual revenue, and a burthen on the people for opening and improving a country of which but a small portion has hitherto been reclaimed.

"If a portion of this revenue were to be specially appropriated to defray the interest of funds to be raised for the execution of reproductive works, negociable securities might be issued for this object, and applied in aid of local appropriations. By the settlement of the country the revenue would be progressively augmented, and the charge might be ultimately liquidated without imposing an undue burthen on the people.

"The present appropriations must be regarded as of the nature of capital invested in improvements, the amount of which is inadequate to the object, while the charge is imposed on a revenue which can only be improved by augmenting the resources of the province through the influx of settlers.

"With these views I repeat my hope that the measures I have recommended in my former despatch may be carried into effect.

"The observations which I before made as to the large importation of agricultural produce, chiefly from the United States, and the discouragement to agriculture by the employment of the farmers and peasantry in lumbering, demand immediate attention, from the commercial distress now prevailing at St. John's through the check which has been sustained in the timber trade.

"The occurrence of this distress at so late a period of the year has defeated the efforts of the Government, supported by the emigrant societies, to promote the settlement in the country of a number of mechanics and labourers who have been thrown out of employment, and who have emigrated to the United States.

"That the capital invested in mills may be rendered again productive by increased attention to agriculture, I entertain no doubt, and that corn may be raised not only in sufficient quantity for the consumption of the province, but for the exportation of flour in exchange for West India and other supplies.

"The mines and fisheries may also become a valuable resource, to which I hope that the capital and enterprize of the province will be applied."

Enclosure 2, in No. 10.

Encl. 2, in No. 10.

(Extract.) (No. 80.)

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 27 Nov. 1841.

IN my despatch, No. 75, dated the 12th instant, I adverted to the commercial distress prevailing in the city of St. John, which, having occurred at this late season of the year, had fallen with unusual pressure upon that community. The sudden failure of employment in a sea-port, where the building and equipment of vessels has ordinarily been carried on throughout the year, had thrown large numbers of mechanics and labourers out of employment.

A destructive fire at Portland, which adjoins the city, had aggravated this distress, in the destruction of shipping and of a great number of the habitations of the working people, some thousands of whom, at the near approach of winter, had been induced to emigrate to the southward.

Considering that it might tend to check this emigration, I made overtures to the common council to promote the settlement of the newly-surveyed locations in that quarter, but from the lateness of the season none were disposed to take advantage of it; some found employment in the country, but a considerable number of families with no prospect of employment were wholly dependent on the daily relief afforded to them by the guardians of the poor and by charitable societies.

In the midst of these difficulties, another fire broke out in the city, which, notwithstanding the exertions of the city authorities, aided by the troops, could not be arrested before the recently-erected exchange buildings and a considerable pile of new warehouses were entirely destroyed, with a large quantity of winter supplies.

The panic occasioned by this last calamity diffused itself amongst all classes, and it was represented to me that the taxes and rates on which the employment of the people and the support of the poor depended, could no longer be collected.

Having invited the common council to point out in what manner the assistance of the government could be made available in averting the consequences so generally apprehended,

NORTH AMERICA.

I repaired to St. John's on the 22d instant, and having assembled the principal inhabitants, I was gratified to find an unanimous opinion in favour of measures which might afford immediate relief, and which would at the same time be calculated to lead to prospective improvement.

The enterprising spirit of the inhabitants of St. John's has long been acknowledged; but it has become evident, that in a port so admirably situated for general commerce, and with the natural advantages which the province possesses, the exclusive attention to ship-building and the trade in lumber has aggravated the distress at this period of stagnation; and that if equal encouragement had been held out to the developement of the agricultural and mineral resources of the province and to the fisheries, the suspension of any one branch of commerce would not have proved so disastrous.

In the hope that these views will be impressed on those on whom it depends to give effect to them, and that the support of the Legislature will be given where it is required, it became an object of immediate and pressing importance to continue such useful works in the city as might be advantageously carried on during the winter; and the subject having been referred to the common council, I received on the 25th instant the resolutions, of which I inclose a copy, and I have summoned the executive council to meet here on Monday, the 29th instant, to advise in regard to the temporary advance of the funds required.

I shall hope to report by the next mail the measures which may be adopted, and the course it will be necessary to pursue, with a view to the revival of prosperity, and the developement of the resources of the province.

The Right Hon. Lord Stanley,
&c. &c. &c.

AT a Common Council holden at the Council Chamber on the 24th day of November, in the Year of our Lord 1841;

Resolved, That the Board feel under great obligations to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor for the lively interest evinced in his Excellency's communication to the Common Council, on the subject of affording employment to the great mass of the labouring population during the approaching winter; and at the same time this Board beg to assure his Excellency that they are only expressing the unanimous feelings of their fellow citizens, whom they have the honour to represent, when they offer to his Excellency their best thanks for the paternal solicitude he has manifested in visiting the city, so immediately after the recent calamitous conflagration, to devise measures for giving relief in the present exigency.

Resolved, That this Board fully concur in the suggestions of his Excellency, as to the necessity of undertaking some public work of utility, by which the labouring poor may obtain employment; but in the present unexampled pressure in the money market, arising from commercial embarrassments, and other causes, and the consequent total impossibility to realize the ordinary revenues of the corporation, as well as the great difficulty, under existing circumstances, of collecting a large portion of the assessed taxes, this Board have not, as heretofore, the funds at their disposal requisite to carry into operation a measure so highly beneficial to the public weal.

Resolved, That it is not practicable for this Board to decide hastily what particular works of utility could be undertaken with advantage at this inclement season; but as the main object is the employment of the labouring poor and relieving distress, and as there are only certain works which most of that class of persons can perform, it must remain for further consideration what shall be undertaken, according to circumstances; they would, however, mention, that many rocks may be excavated on the streets, and improvements made on the public squares, on which some may be set to work, but a very large portion can only be employed beneficially in breaking stone for M'Adamizing the streets of the city, or it might be used for M'Adamizing the great road of communication over the Marsh, or if it were practicable to lay down the water-pipes with advantage at this season of the year, this Board would cheerfully give their assent in anticipation of the water company's works being made over to this corporation at the next Session of the Legislature, that part of the money which may be obtained by this Board should be appropriated for that very important undertaking.

Resolved, That this Board cannot discover any source from which the necessary means can be furnished for the important contemplated object, unless a temporary advance can be afforded from funds which may be at the disposal of Her Majesty's executive Government of this Province, and therefore that an humble address be presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor, praying that his Excellency will be pleased to adopt such measures for affording relief as to his Excellency may seem meet.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Board, an advance of a sum not exceeding 5,000*l.* would be sufficient to carry into effect the object contemplated, and in the event of his Excellency acquiescing to furnish that amount, this Board do pledge themselves to repay the same when called upon by the Government so to do.

Resolved, That the great increase in the number of sick, indigent, and distressed emigrants, as well as in the inmates of the temporary lunatic asylum, the expense of which has hitherto hitherto been defrayed by the overseers of the poor, and reimbursed annually by provincial grants, from the difficulty previously referred to in collecting taxes, will call for a larger advance from the public authorities here for the support of those objects before the usual reimbursements take place, and thereby will embarrass the funds appropriated and destined for other purposes.

Resolved, That this Board most heartily concur in the suggestions of his Excellency in his general recommendations for the improvement of the city, and that they will gladly avail themselves of the valued co-operation of his Excellency, in bringing the subject, through his Excellency, under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, with a view of obtaining funds for so important and beneficial an object.

And further Resolved, That his worship the Mayor be requested to communicate the foregoing resolutions to his Excellency.

(signed) William Black, Mayor.

By order of the Common Council.

(signed) James Peters, Jun. Com. Clerk.

Dear Sir, City Parish, St. John, 24 November 1841.

AGREEABLY with your request, I now beg leave to furnish herewith the substance of my communication made before the late calamitous fire relative to the existing means of relief provided in this city and parish for succouring the sick and destitute. Having kept no paper copy of the former statement, the one now furnished is derived only from memory, but I believe embraces very nearly the same matter.

It is almost needless to mention that the parish burthen of all classes depending on the overseers of poor for support at this present time may be considered as corresponding with the highest numbers stated in the list furnished; and in addition to this great burthen, to an extent appalling in prospect, cannot fail to exhibit itself during the inclement season now at hand. How this mighty mass of individuals is to be carried through the long and severely trying period of winter, while the citizens are so little able, even now, to pay their ordinary poor-rates, is a matter of the deepest anxiety to myself; and I will be most happy to learn that the present opportune visit of his Excellency to the city has resulted in some extensive measure of relief, by employment being provided for the labouring poor, on a scale commensurate with the existing necessity, as well as some financial arrangement being entered into by which the hands of the overseer of poor can be strengthened and supplied with the funds necessary on so extraordinary an exigency as the present.

I have, &c.

(signed) Geo. Matthews, Overseer of Poor.

Honourable W. Black, Esq. Mayor.

LIST of the Public Institutions, Societies, &c., established for the Relief of the Sick and Destitute in the City and Parish of St. John, exclusive of the Hospital at the Health Station on Patridge Island, and the Marine Hospital in the City.

Public Institutions, under the Superintendence and Care of the Overseer of Poor, as follows:

Common poor-house and hospital for white individuals, emigrants, and parish poor, usually containing	100	to 200	souls.
Ditto, ditto for blacks	25	– 30	—
Lunatic Hospital	65	– 75	—
Auxiliary Emigrant Hospital, for sick only	50	– 100	—

Note.—Additional to the mass of individuals succoured in the various parish houses above mentioned, it is always customary for the overseers of poor to give out-door aid to a large number of parish poor and emigrant families residing in private houses in the city; the number of such families relieved is rarely less than 75, and sometimes range up to 150, generally averaging about four persons to each family.

The whole number of individuals annually succoured by the overseers of poor in hospitals and other parish houses in the city usually amount to 600 or 700, and the number of families assisted out-doors 500 or 600, comprising not less than 2,000 or 2,500 souls.

To give some idea of the stores, &c. annually provided to give support to such a host, it is only necessary to state that the winter supply of three articles only now laid in, namely, firewood, fish, and potatoes, amounts to 300 cords fire-wood, 300 quintals dry fish, and 2,000 bushels potatoes.

The overseers of poor being universally looked to as the proper source of relief for all the sick and destitute within the bounds of the parish, have therefore to provide all the supplies required for the relief and support of the sick and destitute emigrants in the hospitals, &c. at the health station in Patridge Island, as well as for the prisoners in the county gaol. At Patridge Island, particularly, a great number are supported during the whole of the six months' passenger season, no part of whom are included in the account of numbers given in the preceding part of this statement.

The proportion which the emigrants alone form of the whole number assisted amounts to about one-third inside poor-house, and nearly the same outside.

Benevolent Associations.

Open Charities:

St. George, St. Andrew's, and St. Patrick's Societies.

Ladies' (Episcopal) Sewing Society; employed making up and distributing garments to the poor.

Ditto (Presbyterian) ditto, ditto, ditto.

Ditto (Methodist) ditto, ditto, ditto.

Gentlemen's (Ditto) Merciful ditto, for administering general relief.

Orphan Benevolent Society.

Close, for mutual protection only:

Albion Friendly Sons of Erin, and the Roman-catholic Abstinence and Relief Society, and, I believe, some societies amongst the trades.

The committee of the St. Andrew's Society for attendance to cases of real need and distress will have funds at their disposal during the winter to extent of over 300 l., and it may be presumed that the other national societies may be enabled to do likewise; but the writer has not had an opportunity of ascertaining the amounts at the disposal of the St. George and other Irish societies, nor those of the several religious associations, but a great deal is done by them at all times, and especially during the severity of the winter.

Immigration Society's Rooms, St. John, 3 Nov. 1841.

Present:—Honourable W. Black, President; Honourable Charles Simonds, Vice President; Mr. Woodward; Mr. Thurgar; Mr. Payne.

Mr. Payne reported that he had forwarded James Coghlan, wife, and three children, to St. Stephen's, county Charlotte, by order of the president, for the purpose of settling in the Tryon settlement, and had addressed a letter to N. Marks, esq., requesting him to forward their views through the influence of the Charlotte County Society; that a note of hand for 30 s., payable on demand, had been given by Coghlan for the advances so made, which he recommended should be lodged with the treasurer.

The president stated he had authorized Mr. Matthews to forward Widow Gillespie and three children to her friends at Woodstock.

Ordered that the sum of 30 s. be paid by the treasurer to aid Patrick Dinneau, wife, and six children, immigrants per brig "Barbadoes," in getting on land allotted to them near Richibucto.

An application was made to the Board, while sitting, by an immigrant, who wished information relative to land in the Victoria settlement, stating that he wanted to obtain 50 or 100 acres for settlement, and also wished to be allowed to pay the interest of the purchase-money for a year or two, as he had only 15 l., which he would require to support himself and wife while chopping and clearing. The plans were then shown him and the land pointed out, and he was informed that he would probably obtain any lot that he would select, but as the land had to be offered at public auction, he must make his application according to the regulation of the Crown Land Office, as the land under the present law must be put up at public auction.

Mr. Payne proposed that public notices should immediately be issued calling the attention of ship carpenters, labourers, lumberers, and other able-bodied and industrious persons who had been thrown out of employment by the derangement of commercial affairs, as well as immigrants of the present year, to the great advantages to be derived from settling on Government or other lands in this province, (especially those lately surveyed) in preference to emigrating or passing on to a foreign country for the purpose of seeking adventitious employment or settlement, and from which many of them would fain return after having expended all their means.

And recommended that they should be advised to form themselves into associations or committees of ten or a dozen families, and make application for land to be allotted to them, that they may proceed immediately to chopping and clearing during the ensuing winter, and have the same ready for burning off in the spring.

Also

Also, that a provisional committee should be appointed to receive application from persons who might be inclined to form themselves into associations for settlement, and whose duty it should be to direct and advise the applicants, and forward them in obtaining land and settling the same. No distinct resolution on either of the aforegoing propositions: the opinion of the meeting appeared to be generally, that although the members of this association may feel anxious to induce persons to settle on those vacant Crown lands, yet as few of them can comply with the terms of paying the purchase-money in hand, and retain the means of supporting themselves during the first stages of settlement, little can be done, as the society cannot incur the responsibility of encouraging settlement thereon until the law has been fully complied with.

Order that the subject stand for further consideration.

Adjourned.

Letter from J. Stephen, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners. 12 February 1842.

122. February 1.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 12 February 1842.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the copy of a letter from Mr. Hoskyns, suggesting, with a view to increase the usefulness of the emigrant agents employed in British North America, that a regulation should be enforced on board all passenger ships, requiring the exhibition of a placard at certain periods during the voyage, notifying the names and addresses of those agents.

I am directed to state that Lord Stanley considers this suggestion worthy of attention.

His Lordship would therefore be glad to receive your opinion of it, with a view to its adoption.

Enclosure in No. 11.

My Lord, 4, Merrion-row, Dublin, 1 Feb. 1842.

As I am credibly informed that you have the subject of emigration just now under your particular consideration, I am induced to address you; and I hope your Lordship will not deem the suggestion that I am about most respectfully to submit to you, impertinent.

In the course of a journey during the past summer through the Canadas, and part of the United States, I was frequently accosted by distressed emigrants, lately arrived from various parts of Great Britain, requesting of me, sometimes assistance, but oftener information as to their prospects of success in the business that they respectively proposed embarking in, at the places that they had been induced to fix on for the site of their operations; and the tales of distress told me by many of them, led me to question them respecting the sources whence they had derived their generally erroneous information, and more particularly why they had not taken advantage of the advice and good offices of the emigration agents provided for that express purpose by the care of Her Majesty's Government; when I found that in far the greater number of cases they were wholly ignorant even of the existence of such functionary as the emigration agent, and that their distress could generally be traced directly to that cause, as for want of such simple knowledge they had become the dupes of designing speculators, lodging-house keepers, and others interested in misleading them.

I will not occupy your Lordship's time by descanting upon the amount of misery daily in process of consummation from the above causes, in large towns where numbers of poor and uninformed emigrants are continually landing. The office of emigration agent would not have been instituted, had not the want of it, arising from such causes, been felt; and while great numbers of emigrants are ignorant of its existence, it is plain that it can but imperfectly perform the benevolent object for which it was instituted.

But I beg, with the greatest respect, to suggest for your Lordship's consideration a means, the adoption of which would, in my humble opinion, prevent much of the disaster that should result from ignorance on the part of the poorer class of emigrants of the fact that emigration agents have been provided in the principal transatlantic towns to advise and relieve them.

It is, that every ship leaving a British port, and having on board ever so small a number of that class of emigrants who go out as steerage passengers, should, for a certain number of days after leaving port, and on her arrival at her destination, carry a printed placard, to be placed in a conspicuous part of the vessel, informing the emigrants of the fact of there being such a functionary as the emigration agent; as also of the nature of his duties, and the places of residence of the principal amongst them.

And I beg to express to your Lordship my conviction that such a measure, simple and economical in its application, would avert an infinity of calamity that should otherwise await on many poor emigrants, beset as they are on landing by the emissaries of all sorts of persons interested (as I have already said) in misinforming and leading them astray; and it would moreover afford the additional gratification of rendering available, to the utmost, so beneficent an institution of a humane Government as that of emigration agent.

Letter from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers to J. Stephen, Esq. 19 February 1842.

IN reply to your letter of the 12th instant, respecting a suggestion from Mr. Hoskyns, which Lord Stanley considers worthy of attention, that a regulation should be enforced on board all passenger-ships requiring the exhibition of a placard at certain periods during the voyage, notifying the names and addresses of the Colonial Emigration Agents, we have the honour to state for his Lordship's information, that we believe the object may be most conveniently carried into effect by an administrative rather than a legislative provision, and that we would beg leave accordingly to recommend that a sufficient number of notices, in large characters, be printed in this country, containing lists of the principal agents in the North American colonies, in order to be distributed through the department of Customs amongst all vessels which clear for North America under the Passengers' Act; and that the agents at the usual places of disembarkation on the other side be provided with notices or hand-bills, in a convenient form, containing lists of the principal and subordinate agents throughout the provinces with which they are connected, to be distributed as local circumstances may render most practicable and efficient amongst the emigrants on their arrival. The latter part of our suggestion, if approved, would require to be carried out through instructions to the Governors of Canada and New Brunswick; and upon the former the most convenient mode of proceeding would probably be to request that the Board of Customs would cause the requisite number of notices to be printed and supplied to their officers at the chief ports of the United Kingdom from which emigrants proceed, with directions to furnish the master of each ship clearing under the Act, with two or more copies of the same, at the time when he receives his other papers from the Custom-house. We enclose a copy of the list which it would be necessary to use for the purpose.

Sir, Downing-street, 7 May 1842.

WITH reference to your letter of the 19th February, recommending the occasional exhibition of a placard on board all passenger ships, notifying the names and addresses of the Colonial Emigration Agents, I am directed by Lord Stanley to acquaint you that printed notices, containing this information, have been sent to the Commissioners of Customs, with directions to distribute them among all ships clearing out for British North America under the Passengers' Act. (No. 41.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Sydenham to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Government House, Montreal, 6 April 1841.

WITH reference to my despatch to your Lordship of the 23d December last, No. 207, I have the honour to enclose herewith, for your information, the copy of a letter addressed to my secretary, by Dr. Rolph, and of the answer which I have directed to be returned to him on the subject of his proceedings in London, in respect to emigration.

For Lord Sydenham's Despatch of 23 Dec. 1840, No. 207, vide Correspondence relative to Emigration to Canada, presented by command, 1841, p. 50.

I have thought it my duty thus explicitly to state my opinions to Dr. Rolph, that there may be no misconception hereafter as to the intentions of the Executive Government here in regard to emigrants. The reports which I have already made to your Lordship on the subject of emigration will show the impossibility of bringing into effective operation a system based on the principles advocated in the enclosures to Dr. Rolph's letter. I have no doubt that on the presentation of the Memorials which he transmits, your Lordship will have explained to the societies by whom they have been drawn up the objections to their proposals; but as Dr. Rolph has been commissioned by me as an agent on the part of this Government, and as he may, therefore, be supposed to express my sentiments on the subject, I felt that I could not, with propriety, receive his letter without at once pointing out to him the disagreement between the views of the societies with whom he is acting in London and those which I entertain.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

Encl. 1, in No. 1.

Colonial Society, St. James's-square,
26 February 1841.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for the information of his Excellency the Governor-general, the copy of a Memorial conjointly agreed to by the heads of all the land companies connected with the British North American provinces and myself, together also with a copy of a Memorial adopted by the North American Colonial Committee; both of which Memorials will be presented to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, by deputations, in the course of the ensuing week.

I have been in communication with Mr. M'Leod, who, having many thousands of his tenantry to remove, and possessing also the means of removing them, has resolved to purchase a block of land in the Western district of Upper Canada, for the gradual and comfortable transfer of the superabundant population of his extensive estates in the Islands of Scotland. On my recommendation, he proposes intrusting the selection of the land to Dr. Craigie, of Ancaster, who will be instructed, after purchase, to make preparations for their reception. Mr. M'Leod would wish them to be forwarded to Dr. Craigie (with all convenient despatch, under the direction of the Government agent); Dr. Craigie will meet them at Hamilton, and accompany them to the place of their destination. Should the plan of this extensive proprietor be crowned with success, it is his opinion that it will be followed by all those owners who possess the means of following the example, as there is an almost invincible repugnance, both on the part of the landlord and the tenantry of the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, to rend asunder those ties which have existed for years, and which seem interwoven with their existence.

There will be several gentlemen of property leaving here next month (27th March) for Canada, by the ship "Douglas," Captain Douglas. They proceed to Montreal, and from thence to Toronto, where they will inspect the books of the association, and make their selections for purchase. The immigration this year, I have every reason to believe, will be large, valuable and respectable, including many capitalists. The applications for free passage from Scotland to Ireland are incessant. I enclose copies of two Memorials, one from Glasgow and one from Paisley. But whilst the indigent masses are so anxious to leave for Canada, it will be gratifying to the colonists to find that numbers possessing ample means are now prepared to avail themselves of the advantages which the province holds out, equally in the judicious investment of capital as labour; and there is every reason to anticipate a valuable accession this year to the wealth and strength of the country.

Sir William Parker and his family will proceed to the province by one of the spring steam-ships; and Sir Joseph de Courcy Laffan, bart., one of the most influential members of the North American Colonial Committee, will take an extended tour through Canada, of inspection and observation, with the intention of the furtherance of immigration on his return. Most valuable accessions are being daily made to our committee. Amongst the most recent, I may particularize the Earls of Devon and Dunmore, and the Honourable Mr. Poulett Scrope. My time is almost altogether occupied by attendance at their deliberations, corresponding with numerous persons in Ireland and Scotland, and giving advice to persons who are about proceeding from this country to Canada. As yet I have been unable to visit Scotland; but as the applications I have received are so numerous and pressing, I have resolved to go there for a week or ten days, after the arrival of the March steam-ship, about the 18th March. I hope that his Excellency will enable me to remain during the autumnal months in this country, as, after the close of Parliament, on the return of the gentlemen to their respective seats in the country, I could obtain their hearty co-operation in bringing fully before the public mind the aptitude of Canada for those who desire to emigrate, and who are anxious to acquire information of it.

I have found his Excellency's patronage of the Emigration Association of infinite service in this country; and all parties unite in expressing the warmest admiration of the ability and efficacy of his just and vigorous administration of the affairs of the province.

To the Right Honourable Lord John Russell, Principal Secretary for the Colonies.

The Memorial of the North American Committee of London,

Sheweth,

THAT the North American Colonial Committee, consisting of gentlemen associated for the purpose of promoting the colonization of the British provinces in America, have resolved, after mature consideration, to submit to your Lordship the following statement of their views with respect to this important object.

We assume that in the Highlands and Islands, as well as in some of the manufacturing towns in Scotland; that in particular employments and particular districts of England; that throughout almost every part of Ireland, many thousands of our fellow countrymen are not only unable to obtain throughout the year such wages as will afford them those means of comfortable subsistence which every industrious man may fairly expect in exchange for his labour, but are often reduced to the extreme privations of the most afflicting destitution.

We assume further, that in the British provinces of America there exists a demand for labour which has not yet been fully satisfied; that the industrious labourer can there obtain good wages, and the means of comfortable subsistence. That there being many millions of acres of the most fertile land still uncultivated, land is so cheap, that the exercise of industry and frugality enables the labourer to purchase a small estate in fee after a short residence in these provinces, and thus to become an employer of labour; so that the demand for additional hands, instead of decreasing with the supply, undergoes a constant augmentation.

Proceeding upon these two assumptions, which cannot be controverted, we respectfully submit that it is the duty of statesmen of Great Britain to afford to the mother country and to the colonies the aid which they respectively require, by transferring the superabundant population of the United Kingdom to those colonies, in which they will be welcomed as producers of wealth, instead of being repelled as a burden upon the community, and in which their labour will be adequately awarded.

We are quite sensible that such an undertaking must be conducted with the utmost caution; that if a greater number of emigrants should be conveyed in any one year to the colonies than can be there beneficially employed, the result will be most disastrous to the individuals emigrating; most burthensome to the colonial community, as throwing upon their charity a population dependent upon them for relief; and most discouraging to future emigration, in the reaction produced at home by accounts of the misery and suffering which would have been in such case endured. We are also sensible that it is not sufficient to convey the emigrants to the nearest port in the colonies, and there to leave them, unaided by further guidance or assistance,—that the result of such a proceeding would be to throw into sea-port towns a mass of persons for whom no adequate employment could be there provided, and who would consequently be exposed to the combined evils of hunger, disease and idleness; whilst in the case of emigration to Canada, the greater part of the more enterprising emigrants would, under such circumstances, make their way into the United States as the nearest point at which they could find employment. We are, therefore, of opinion, that in any system of emigration conducted by the state, it is of the utmost importance that the emigrants yearly sent out should not exceed such a number as can obtain certain employment on their arrival, and that they should be conveyed at once to those parts of the provinces in which their labour is required.

We have taken pains to ascertain what number of emigrants could be received without inconvenience by the provinces of British America during the present year; and we cannot estimate the number at less than 60,000, at the lowest computation, exclusive of the emigration to the other provinces of British North America. About 23,000 emigrants landed in Lower Canada during last year. Of these, a small number went to the United States; but more than an equal number went from the United States to settle in Canada. From all the accounts which have been received, it appears that these emigrants have experienced no disappointment; though a large proportion were of that class who were dependent upon labour for their support. We have not heard that the supply of labour exceeded the demand; but on the contrary, there is reason to believe that a much larger number might have found employment. The success of the emigration of last year will probably induce many persons to emigrate during the present year who are able to defray their own expenses; but as the interposition of state assistance may possibly induce some persons to seek such assistance, who would otherwise have been enabled to emigrate by the contributions of their friends, we may estimate the number of emigrants who will go out upon their own resources at not more than 25,000 persons, leaving 35,000 as the number which would be absorbed by the provinces of British America, for whom provision will require to be made in the manner hereinafter suggested.

The present is a moment peculiarly favourable to an extensive emigration. The harvest of last year was most abundant in North America, and consequently provisions are at the present moment both cheap and plentiful. The advantage of emigration has never been so strongly felt by the intelligent inhabitants of these colonies. In several districts, particularly in Upper Canada, associations have been formed for the purpose of facilitating the reception of emigrants from the United Kingdom. With a view to encourage the settlement of emigrants in Canada, several landed proprietors have signified their willingness to place at the disposal of these associations extensive tracts of land; they have also deputed Dr. Rolph as their agent to this country, for the purpose of stimulating emigration, and in this appointment the colonial executive has concurred. The last Act of the Legislature of Upper Canada, previous to its final dissolution, was the adoption of an Address to the Crown, praying that measures might be taken for promoting emigration upon a large scale to the Canadian provinces. Under all these circumstances we are justified in believing that when the Canadian Legislature shall assemble, there will be no indisposition to entertain favourably any proposition for the encouragement of emigration, which shall be founded upon an equitable basis, and guarded by a prudent caution.

We respectfully submit that the time has now come when such a proposition may be made with advantage by the Executive Government; and as we are assured that your Lordship cannot be indifferent to the opinion of a body of gentlemen who are much interested in the colonization of British North America, we beg to suggest, as the basis of such a proposition, the following proportion of the expenses of emigration between the different parties interested:—

1. That the emigrant should find the means of conveyance to the port of embarkation, his outfit, provisions for voyage, &c. &c.

2. That the Government should provide a free passage.

3. That the colony should take charge of the labourer on his arrival, and undertake his conveyance to the district in which he is to be employed. Such a division of the expenses would appear to be most natural, as well as best suited to the means of the respective parties, and probably it would be found in the result that each would be thus under about an equal portion of the total cost.

This resolution is founded upon the supposition that several distinct interests are concerned in the emigration of the unemployed poor of the United Kingdom.

1. In the first place, it is a matter of concern to the British nation at large, that an individual who is compelled by circumstances over which he has no control to remain idle at home, should be transferred to a field in which his active vigour and productive industry become elements of the political and commercial greatness of the British empire. In reference to the peculiar circumstances of Canada, your Lordship will feel that there are considerations of political expediency, involving perhaps the very connexion of these colonies with the parent state, which make it advisable to promote the immediate settlement in those provinces of a population warmly attached to the institutions and interests of Great Britain. These considerations alone would justify the application of a portion of the general revenue to the promotion of emigration to British America.

2. It is not necessary to point out the benefit which would result to the emigrant himself from his transfer to the colonies, because the whole of our reasoning is based upon the assumption that this change of home would greatly improve his condition. There is no member of our association who would advocate emigration upon any other supposition. When we suggest that the emigrant should be called upon to contribute some portion of the expenses of the emigration of his family, we are fully aware that in many cases the labourer would be unable to contribute out of his own funds such proportion; but we think that few cases exist in which he would find himself unable to make up this amount by the aid of his friends, employers or landlord; and in such case it would be competent for the guardians of any union to make the required contribution out of the poor-rates. The advantage which would result to the district to which an unemployed family belong from their removal is obvious and immediate, because so long as they are unable to earn their own subsistence they must be relieved, either by public or by private charity.

3. The colony to which the labourer emigrates is also deeply interested in this transfer of our unemployed population, and ought, therefore, to contribute its share of the expense. To say that land is of no value without labour, is only to repeat a truism, which no one will contradict. We think it unnecessary, therefore, to expatiate upon this topic.

We are satisfied that the Provincial Legislature will gladly contribute the proportion of the expense of emigration which ought to be borne by the colonies. The funds available for this purpose have frequently been pointed out in the discussions which have taken place on the subject of colonization, and their appropriation to this object has received the sanction of those who would be contributors to these funds.

In the first place, it is desired that in British America the whole of the proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands shall be applied to the promotion of emigration; we do not think it necessary to state the arguments by which this principle of colonization is sustained; we confine ourselves to the simple assertion that the same considerations which have convinced your Lordship that the land fund of the other colonies should be appropriated to the conveyance thither of labour apply with equal force to the case of North American Colonies of Great Britain.

Another fund available for the purpose of promoting public works, and an accompanying emigration, would arise from the imposition of a tax upon land, payable either in land or money. If such a tax be paid in land, it will place at the disposal of the executive sections of land in various parts of the provinces, which will become applicable to the settlement of emigrants; and a gradual surrender of such sections of land on the part of those who do not think it their interest to pay even a trifling assessment upon them, will tend to diminish the evils which have been found to arise from profuse and improvident grants of large tracts of territory to individuals who have possessed neither means nor inclination to bring them under cultivation. If, on the other hand, the tax be generally paid in money, it will be seen that even a trifling assessment will at once create a fund available for the promotion of public works and emigration.

A tax of one halfpenny per acre levied upon all the lands in British North America which have been already granted, would produce upwards of 80,000 l. per annum; and the fund would continually increase in proportion as the public land now undisposed of shall be appropriated by individuals.

Upon this revenue above a million sterling could be at once raised, or such lesser sum as may from time to time be required, for the improvement and settlement of the districts from which the tax may be levied. We have reason to believe that if the Provincial Legislature should consent to the imposition of such a land tax, there will be no difficulty in raising among the capitalists in the city of London who are connected with the provinces, whatever amount may be required proportionate to the security so afforded, on the strict condition that this fund shall be applied to the purposes above specified.

In urging your Lordship to recommend to the Provincial Legislature some such proposal as that which we have ventured to suggest, it has given us great satisfaction to observe that this proposition much resembles that which has been already submitted by the Commissioners of Land and Emigration; in their report, dated the 25th April 1841, we find that they advised that 50,000 l. should be applied out of the general revenue, in aid of emigration to British North America.

They recommend that half the expense of the passage of the emigrants should be defrayed by the Government, the other half being borne by the emigrants themselves, or by the parties locally interested in their removal, whether landed proprietors or poor-law unions; that the emigrants should make their way to the port of embarkation at their own cost, and that upon their landing in the colony they should be immediately placed under the guidance of the Colonial Emigration Agents, whose duty it would be to convey them to those parts of the colony in which certain employment awaits them.

We do not concur with the Commissioners in thinking that the emigrant should be called upon to contribute any portion of the passage-money contribution; and we deem it of the utmost importance that emigrants should have at their disposal, on landing in the colony, any funds which they may be able to command. In other respects, we are happy to find that the views of the Commissioners are almost entirely in accordance with those of our committee.

It ought to be observed, that by placing the stream of emigration under the superintendence of a responsible board, much of the suffering and danger to which the emigrant is now exposed, from the designing practices of some of the ship-owners and masters engaged in the conveyance of emigrants, as well as from the employment of unsafe vessels, would be obviated; and thus the emigrant would be placed under a protecting care, from the port of embarkation to the place of his ultimate location.

We

We have only to add, in conclusion, that in soliciting assistance on the part of the state, in aid of emigration to British America, it is very far from our wish to deprecate similar assistance towards promoting the settlement of the other colonies of Great Britain. We regret to be compelled to believe that there are in the United Kingdom a number of industrious men of good character unable to find employment at home, sufficient to supply the utmost demand for labour that can for several years exist in the various colonies of Great Britain; we, therefore, claim no partiality for British North America but in viewing this subject with reference to the interests of the mother country, it cannot be forgotten that in consequence of the nearer vicinity of the American colonies, a contribution on the part of the state, which would only facilitate the conveyance of hundreds of the unemployed poor to more distant settlements, would aid the emigration of thousands to British North America.

We have now laid before your Lordship, in as brief a form as we could adopt, without omitting particulars which we deem it important to mention, a distinct proposal for the conduct of emigration to British North America; it has not been adopted hastily, but is the result of much consideration; and we leave it in your Lordship's hands, with a feeling of perfect confidence that, as a British statesman, you are deeply sensible of the value of colonization as a means of increasing the power and resources of the great empire whose colonial interests have been intrusted to your charge.

To the Right Honourable Lord John Russell, &c. &c. &c.

The Memorial of the Governor, Deputy-governor, and Directors of the British American Land Company; the Governor, Deputy-governor and Directors of the Canada Company; the Governor, Deputy-governor and Directors of the North American Colonial Association of Ireland; Doctor Thomas Rolph; and others having an interest in the prosperity of Canada;

Sheweth,

That your Memorialists are impressed with a strong sense of the great natural resources of Canada, and consider the backward and stagnant condition of that important colony, as compared with what they are persuaded might have been its position under happier circumstances, as a serious national misfortune. That they are convinced that the impediments which have hindered the development of those resources are by no means those of nature, which, on the contrary, has been eminently bountiful in every essential respect, especially in bestowing upon the colony the noble water-way of the St. Lawrence, and so large a portion of its tributary streams.

That regarding therefore the unfavourable condition of Canada as solely attributable to errors in the system of its management, and to the neglect of the means of improving its natural advantages, your Memorialists would strongly impress upon Her Majesty's Government the benefit that would accrue to the colony from the complete opening of the St. Lawrence for the navigation of vessels of considerable burthen,—a benefit, the value of which may be partially appreciated from a view of the advantage the adjoining state of New York derives from the Erie Canal.

That your Memorialists regard the inefficient number of public roads, and the bad state of those that exist, as another principal cause of the stagnant condition of the colony; the want of proper ways of communication greatly tending to discourage and prevent the settlement of the country.

That your Memorialists are strongly persuaded of the great importance of adding as quickly and largely as possible to the British population of Canada; and that it is indispensable to this object, that the colony should be rendered attractive to emigrating capitalists, as well as to labourers, by undertaking such public works of communication, both by water and land, as may serve to hold out to such parties a sufficient assurance that they will improve their fortunes by settling there.

That if public works of the nature pointed out were undertaken, the result would be not merely an increased flow of emigration to Canada, but that the persons of every class resorting there from the United Kingdom would be fixed, by the attractions suited to their respective stations in life, on the British side of the frontier.

That your Memorialists have not indicated the measures by which alone the settlement of Canada can be made desirable to British emigrants to any extent commensurate with the importance of the objects in view, without being prepared to show, at the same time, by what means operations of the nature suggested might be carried on.

That your Memorialists submit, that funds for the prosecution of all the public works which they have pointed out as indispensable to the prosperity of Canada are available in the vast provincial property, now scarcely of any value, which exists in the shape of waste land and timber, vested in the Crown; a property which, if placed under proper management, and judiciously disposed of, with a single view to the increase of the colonial revenue, would afford an ample security for loans which might be raised in this country to be exclusively appropriated to public works and emigration, which, again, would add enormously to the value of the lands and timber reserved for subsequent disposal, and consequently to the means of promoting the grand public objects for which it is desired to cause them to provide.

That in order to render the public lands of Canada available for these all-important colonial purposes, it will be necessary, in accordance with the principle recognized by the Crown in New Brunswick, to place them at the disposal of the Legislature of the United Provinces.

That though your Memorialists are of course aware that the revenue derived from the public domain has been placed at the disposal of the local legislature, yet the disposal of the lands themselves, and of the timber thereon, remains still vested in the Crown, whereby, in point of fact, all benefit to the colony from the concession in the former respect might be altogether neutralized, the lands and timber being liable to be sold or given away, as heretofore, in a manner wholly unproductive of the advantage either to the Crown or to the public.

That the object, therefore, which your Memorialists desire to secure, is to place the lands and timber, equally with the revenue derived from those resources, at the disposal of the local legislature; under such provisions and safeguards, as to the conditions of the transfer, as shall secure the faithful appropriation of the proceeds to the exclusive purposes of emigration, and of great public works connected with, and affording aid to, such a system.

That your Memorialists entertain a confident belief, that if the Crown should adopt this beneficent course, the new Legislature of Canada, impelled by an anxious desire, in which every British settler in the colony participates, to set on foot improvements similar to those which have been executed with so much advantage in the state of New York, and to restore the stream of British emigration to its ancient Canadian channel, would zealously co-operate with the views of Her Majesty's Government for the attainment of objects so essential to their prosperity, and would frame such a law for the future disposal of the public domains, and for the assurance of parties advancing monies on the security thereof, as would induce your Memorialists and others to concur in procuring an advance to the colony of the funds required for the most important public works, and for promoting a large measure of emigration to Canada.

That a committee of the three companies, whose designations appear at the head of this Memorial, have conferred with Doctor Rolph, the organ at present in this country of a great body of the colonists, who ardently desire that no time may be lost in adopting measures to promote public works and emigration, and that Doctor Rolph vouches for the concurrence of the sentiments of the parties by whom he has been delegated in the views expressed in this Memorial.

That it appears to your Memorialists to be very important that great measures of emigration, and of public improvements, should be laid before the Legislature of the United Canadas at the earliest possible date.

That your Memorialists are confidently persuaded that his Excellency the present Governor-general of Canada will not merely give his sanction, but his cordial support to the measures which they have proposed, and will thereby add incalculably to the obligations under which he has laid the people of Canada.

That your Memorialists request that your Lordship will be pleased to take the subject-matter of this paper into your consideration, and to appoint an early day for receiving a deputation from the undersigned.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

Government House, Montreal,
3 April 1841.

Encl. 2, in No. 1.

Sir,

I HAVE received and laid before the Governor-general your letter of the 26th February, reporting your proceedings in regard to emigration to Canada, and enclosing the drafts of two Memorials, the first from the North American Colonial Committee of London; the second from the British American Land Company, the Canada Company, the North American Colonial Association of Ireland, and yourself, which it was intended to present to Lord John Russell, at an interview shortly after the date of your letter.

The Governor-general would, under ordinary circumstances, have postponed his observations on these documents until he should have received official intelligence of their presentation, and of the answer returned to them by Lord John Russell; but there are principles embodied in them, and more especially in the Memorial from the North American Colonial Committee of London, so different from what, in his Excellency's opinion, is the only practicable system of emigration to this country, and so calculated to lead to disappointment and distress, that he considers it his duty at once to call your attention to those points, and to express his opinion respecting them.

After enumerating the advantages of emigration, the Colonial Committee propose that the expense of conveying an emigrant from his home to the place of his settlement in Canada should be divided into three portions; the first, viz. his conveyance to the port of embarkation, to be defrayed by himself; the second, his voyage across the Atlantic, to be provided by the Government; and the third, namely, his conveyance from the port of disembarkation disembarkation to his final settlement, to be defrayed by the colony. They further suggest that the whole of the funds arising from the sale of lands should be applied towards emigration, and they deprecate the calling on the emigrant to pay any part of his passage-money. In like manner, the joint Memorial from the several land companies and yourself suggests that means should be taken to secure the faithful appropriation of the proceeds of land and timber to the exclusive purposes of emigration, and of great public works connected with, and affording aid to, such a system.

On referring to the letter of instructions which, by the Governor-general's directions, I addressed to you on the 22d December last, you will observe that one of the principal objects of your mission as an accredited agent of the Government was stated to be to explain fully and clearly to parties in England, "the impossibility of supplying any funds by the sale of land or otherwise, for the expense of transporting emigrants to this country, and the injurious consequences arising to the emigrants themselves, and to the provinces, from casting on the shores of Canada persons wholly destitute of the means, either of transporting themselves to places where work can be provided for them, or of maintaining themselves as settlers." These instructions were prepared by his Excellency after a very full consideration of the subject, and the experience of the preceding season, and you will observe that they are altogether opposed to the views which the Colonial Committee of London propose to submit to Her Majesty's Government.

It is true that, in their Memorial, the Colonial Committee propose to devolve on imperial, and not on provincial funds, the expense of the passage of emigrants across the Atlantic; such an arrangement, however, appears to his Excellency to be decidedly objectionable in principle. The sum that could be obtained from Parliament for such a service must, under any circumstances, be inconsiderable, and adequate, therefore, to the transport of a very few; it would, nevertheless, raise the most extravagant expectations in all intending emigrants, and would thereby paralyse all individual exertions among them; it would create intense disappointment and discontent among those who were excluded from its participation, while in the case of the poorest class of emigrants, it would in reality be a boon only to the landlord or parish, who would otherwise have had to bear the expense of the emigrant's passage. If, as his Excellency trusts, Parliament should, in its liberality, grant a sum towards the promotion of emigration to Canada, there are other objects besides the payment of the passages of emigrants to which it may be applied, with much greater public advantage and with much more effect, in aid of the object in view. Nor is it expedient to hold out to emigrants the expectation that immediately on their landing in Canada, the expense of their conveyance to the place of settlement, or of their subsistence until provision can be made for them, will be borne by the public. Much, no doubt, was done last season, through the assistance which Her Majesty's Government gave from the Imperial Treasury to the provincial resources; but such aid cannot be looked for again; and you are perfectly aware that the finances of Canada will not at present permit the appropriation of any part of them to such purposes. The Governor-general must, therefore, strongly urge on you the necessity of attending to that part of your instructions which I have already quoted, and which was especially designed to prevent those delusions which must result from the promulgation of the opinions contained in the Memorial of the Colonial Committee.

As by the appointment which you accepted from his Excellency last winter, you are now acting as the authorized agent of the provincial government in matters relating to emigration, and as, therefore, any opinions which you may express or advocate will naturally be supposed to have the approval and support of the local government, his Excellency has thought it necessary, at the earliest opportunity, to point out wherein the views of those with whom you are acting in London differ from his own. He feels assured that you will take the most effectual steps to prevent any misunderstanding, either on the part of those societies and individuals, or on the part of emigrants themselves, of the intentions or powers of the Government to afford them assistance in resorting to Canada.

I have, &c.

No. 4.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 17 August 1841.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 17 August 1841.

WE beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th ultimo, in which, with reference to a despatch from Lord Sydenham formerly communicated to us, you inquire whether we have any observations to offer for Lord John Russell's consideration, with respect to the view taken by Lord Sydenham of the proposals submitted by certain societies in London for the promotion of emigration to Canada.

In reply we have the honour to state, that we find the principal point to which Lord Sydenham objects in the proposals of the North American committee, and on which it may be necessary that we should offer any remarks, relates to the mode in which any grant of money by this country can be most advantageously applied in aid of emigration to Canada. The committee recommend that the expense of the voyage should be wholly defrayed out of the public fund, to which Lord Sydenham objects that the grant would only be sufficient to provide free passages for a few, while it would raise undue expectations in all intending emigrants, and paralyse individual exertion; moreover, that it would be a boon not to the poor, but to the landlord or parish by whom the funds would otherwise have been provided for their conveyance to the colony.

In our report of the 21st April 1840, on the means of extending emigration to Canada, we expressed our opinion, that any grant of public money for the purpose should be applied so as to aid and stimulate private contributions, and that the state should never advance money to meet the expenses of the actual voyage, unless a fixed proportion of the requisite sum in each case had been advanced from private sources. This plan, we considered, would have tended to obviate the evils which Lord Sydenham has pointed out.

The expediency, however, of applying any part of a Parliamentary grant to the payment of the passage-money rests in some degree upon its amount. If it be so large that Parliament may have contemplated by means of it the relief of destitution in this country, the chief object to be aimed at should be the greatest possible increase of the numbers who would benefit by it; and then we could hardly doubt that it should be made applicable, in part at least, and perhaps with the limitation we have proposed, to the expense of the passage, inasmuch as it is that expense which must always constitute the great obstacle to emigration. If the grant be small, and be made rather with reference to Canada than to this country, it would then be considered only as an indirect auxiliary to the emigration which is carried on every year by means of private or parochial funds; and in that case it would probably be more desirable that the money should be expended in the colony in relieving those who may arrive in a state of destitution, and in providing conveyance for the poorer classes of emigrants to places where their labour might be in demand.

Having made these general observations, it may be right that we should allude more in detail to the modes of disposing of a public grant which have been suggested by Lord Sydenham. In the letter indeed now under our consideration, which was addressed to Doctor Rolph by his Lordship's desire, it is only stated in general terms, that there are other objects besides the payment of the passages of emigrants to which such money may be applied with much greater public advantage, and with much more effect in aid of the object in view. But in Lord Sydenham's despatch of 26th January, No. 224, these objects are more specifically mentioned, and we shall proceed to offer upon them, in order, such observations as have occurred to us.

For Despatch, 26 January, No. 224, vide Correspondence relative to Emigration to Canada, presented to Parliament by Her Majesty's command, 1841, page 71.

The first object for which pecuniary assistance from the Government is required is stated to be to increase the efficiency of the emigration agents at the outports. We believe, however, that that which Lord Sydenham contemplates on this head can alone be effected by alterations in the provisions of the Passengers' Act, and by an increase in the power of persons filling the situation of Government agents, whose duty it is to see that the law is carried into effect. Such alterations we have had the honour to propose.

Secondly. It is suggested that accommodation should be afforded for emigrants resorting to Liverpool, to embark for America. This measure would entail a very large expenditure, and, we fear, be liable to abuse which could not be prevented. The Passengers' Act requires that the master should maintain the persons who have contracted with him for a passage, if the vessel be not ready for sea, and do not actually sail at her appointed time; and we think that it is a just provision to require that this expense should be borne by the ship. It constitutes a useful and indispensable check upon the owners or their agents in making agreements with the poor, and tends to prevent almost the worst, because the most ruinous, imposition which is practised upon the intending emigrant. In the alteration which we have suggested in the Passengers' Act, we have alluded to the means by whch we think that the recovery of subsistence-money on the part of intending emigrants may be facilitated; and these, if adopted, would, we hope, prove sufficient for the object which Lord Sydenham has in view.

Thirdly, Lord Sydenham requests that whatever sum may be granted by Parliament, a portion of it may be devoted to the object of sending with the emigrant ships Government agents clothed with sufficient authority to enforce the provisions of the Passengers' Act during the voyage, and combining in their persons the duties of medical superintendents over the emigrants. As we had occasion to state in our recent letter on the Passengers' Act, we think that it would scarcely be possible, and certainly not without great expense, to provide proper medical attendants for the fleet of ships, most of them carrying large numbers of emigrants, which in the short season of Canadian emigration leave the ports of this kingdom; if they are not properly qualified, the experience of the past has shown that their presence as medical attendants would be worse than useless.

In regard, again, to the authority with which they would be invested as Government agents, it is to be remarked that as the contract between the ship-owner and the passengers is strictly of a private nature, the Government could have no power to impose conditions upon either of the parties, or to invest an agent with authority to control them; such power must be derived from Parliament, and, as we stated in our former letter, we think that there are objections to the introduction of a provision for that purpose into the Passengers' Act. It would be difficult to define with accuracy in an Act of Parliament the powers to be confided to the agents, in order to render their authority effectual, without being unduly oppressive either to the emigrants or to the parties connected with the ship. Unless the powers were so defined, considerable alarm would doubtless be felt by ship-owners and others as to the contemplated interference with their proceedings, and as to the degree of control to which they would be subject.

Moreover, when once the law had made it imperative that such Government agents should accompany the emigrants, it might become necessary even to detain vessels otherwise ready for sea, if proper persons were not forthcoming at the moment. An annual provision, moreover, must be made by Parliament for the remuneration of the parties who would be thus employed; and if, as would undoubtedly be the case, it were deemed desirable to employ experienced persons, it would be necessary to retain the parties permanently in the service, although what may be termed the season for emigration to North America lasts but for a short period. It would also be intended, we conceive, that the enactment should not apply to vessels carrying less than a certain number; but experience shows that an exception of this kind affords great facility for evading the law.

We think, therefore, as we stated in our letter to which we have already referred, that it is not on the whole desirable to require by law that a general and medical superintendent, armed with sufficient authority to enforce the law, should accompany emigrants who are proceeding to the North American colonies.

As in some degree a substitute for the presence of such an agent, it would be desirable that several copies of a plain and intelligible abstract of the Passengers' Act, which might be prepared at our board, should be given by the emigration agent to heads of families amongst the emigrants in each ship; these parties would then distinctly know what were the supplies of food which ought to be served out to them by the master, as well as their rights in all other respects; and should there prove, upon their arrival in the colony, to be any just and sufficient ground of complaint against those connected with the ship for an infringement of the law during the passage, the emigration agent at the port of landing might take the necessary steps to procure redress from the offending parties.

The next objects to which it is proposed to apply a grant of public money relate to the condition of the emigrants subsequent to their arrival in the colony. It is recommended that aid should be afforded to the provincial funds in providing relief for the destitute, medical attendance for the sick, and the means of transport into the interior for the able-bodied.

Among the local funds would be included, we suppose, the proceeds of the emigrant tax, to the re-enactment of which Lord Sydenham is favourable; and should they all prove insufficient, we then think, as we have already stated in this letter, that if a grant of money be made in support of emigration to Canada, it might be most usefully expended in providing for the objects above enumerated.

Much difficulty would, no doubt, be experienced in selecting from the number who almost simultaneously arrive, those who were fitting objects for relief and assistance. This may, to a certain degree, be met by requiring, as Lord Sydenham proposes, labour at the public works of Montreal and Quebec from the applicants for relief; and in many cases it would not be impossible to ascertain to what extent the parties on their arrival possessed the means of providing for their own transport up the country. All, for instance, who are sent out at the expense of their parishes, now receive a small sum upon landing, for the purpose of enabling them to provide for their immediate wants, and proceed to any part of the country where they may be instructed that their labour is in demand; for them, therefore, further assistance would not be required.

Not doubting, however, that every precaution in administering the funds which the case admits of will be taken, we cannot think that there is any mode in which the expenditure of the public money would be more likely, than by that which is here proposed, to benefit the emigrants, and consequently to prevent their further emigration to the neighbouring states.

It is further recommended, that a portion of any grant made by this country may be applied to settling emigrants upon the wild lands which are to be granted to them, according to the arrangements proposed in Lord Sydenham's despatch of the 14th June, No. 214, more especially in localities where it is desirable to encourage settlements, and to which in ordinary circumstances settlers would not resort.

The expediency of recurring once more to the system of free grants rests, we conceive, entirely upon political grounds, and the same grounds may render it desirable desirable that money should be expended with a view to the further benefit of the individuals obtaining the grants. There only remains for consideration the limitation of the expense which this course, if adopted, would entail, and the probability of ultimate success in diverting the course of settlement from its natural direction. The latter of these questions, doubtless, depends upon local circumstances of which we have not sufficient knowledge, and upon neither of them are we able to submit any opinion to Lord John Russell's notice.

The further use to which, in the last place, it is recommended that, if the grant in question be obtained from Parliament, the money should be applied, is in defraying the expense of various public works in Canada; the grant, however, would in that case appear to us to have less of the character of a grant in support of emigration, than of one directly for the benefit of Canada. We have, therefore, no remarks to offer upon the expediency of making it, nor upon the exact mode in which it should be applied.

Before concluding our remarks, there is one passage in Dr. Rolph's letter to the Colonial Secretary, included in the correspondence before us, to which we would beg leave to direct attention. It relates to the wish which has been expressed by proprietors to provide for the establishment upon land of their former tenants who have emigrated, and the desire which is mutually felt by both parties to maintain in the colony the relation which has hitherto subsisted between them.

He states, that "there is an almost invincible repugnance, both on the part of the landlords and the tenantry of the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, to rend asunder those ties which have existed for years, and which seem interwoven with their existence." Without inquiring into the extent to which such feelings may exist in other parts of this country, we cannot but think that if the same facilities existed for purchasing in this country the waste lands of Canada which has been afforded in the case of the Australian colonies, and of nominating emigrants for a free passage in proportion to the purchase-money deposited, the colonization of Canada would be greatly facilitated. The same sum of money would purchase more land in Canada than in Australia, while it would provide the means of conveying nearly four times as many emigrants. It may not, we are aware, be possible to apply the land revenue raised in the colony to purposes of emigration; but the purchases of land which would be effected in this country under the arrangement in question would probably not be made but for the inducement held out by the privilege of nominating emigrants for a free passage; all that would be appropriated to carrying out the system would be created by the system, and entail, therefore, no loss upon the local revenue.

My Lord, Government House, Kingston, 28 August 1841.

No. 5. Despatch from Lord Sydenham to Lord John Russell, 28 August 1841.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith the returns from the emigrant agent at Quebec, and from the superintendent of quarantine at Grosse Isle, which have reached me since my despatch of the 28th ultimo (No. 99). Your Lordship will perceive with pleasure that these accounts continue favourable.

In consequence of the demand for labour in the Eastern townships, I have authorized the emigrant agent to assist, to a limited extent, destitute emigrants anxious to proceed to that section of the country.

Note.—The passengers arrived during the past week are all in good health, and consist of farmers and labourers.

In the "Margaret Bogle" were some very respectable Scotch emigrants from Leith, and, with the exception of one family, were all in good circumstances; five families have gone to settle in the Huron tract, and the remainder to the Home and Gore districts.

The "Pomona," Hutchinson, master, from Sligo, cleared from that port, with 214 passengers, as certified in the list forwarded me by the Government agent for that port; and her bill of health from the Custom-house certified for 228, including master and crew. On arrival here she was found to have 250 passengers on board, making an excess of 27 adults over the compliment she is entitled to carry by law. The master was fined 20*l.* sterling by the Collector of the Customs. It is very much to be regretted that the law does not fix the penalty at so much for each one over the number prescribed by the statute; and, as it now stands, the owner or charterer will pocket 35*l.* sterling by the operation, after paying the fine.

The passengers per the "Victory" are intelligent settlers from the vicinity of Hull; they are all proceeding to settle in the Western division of the province.

The "Huron," from Liverpool, with 327 passengers, are chiefly labourers; there are a few Scotch families, in good circumstances, 26 in number, from Paisley, and a few English families from Newcastle. Two Irish families have gone to settle near Sherbrook, and a few are remaining here for employment; the remainder are all proceeding up the country.

In the brig "Hope," from Dublin, were 71 passengers; they had a passage of 51 days; many of them were short of provisions, and had to purchase from the master, who appears to have taken every advantage of their distress. One poor family coming out to their friends in Montreal was in debt to the master, for provisions, near 5*l.* on arrival here. He states, that, before he was a month out, some families applied to him for provisions; their stock, consequently, could not have been laid in according to the Act.

Three families in the "Huron" are going to Nova Scotia, to their friends.

The passengers per the "Stirling," from Glasgow, 154 in number; 106 of whom are members of the Glasgow Emigration Society, landed here very poor, and without sufficient means to pay their passage, even as far as Montreal; seven families are employed here, and I have offered it to the rest; but nothing but the necessity of their situation would induce them to accept of it here; some refused, and even disposed of their effects to enable them to proceed. It is much to be regretted the exaggerated accounts which have been circulated among (more particularly the Scotch) emigrants this season. They all land here with the idea that they are to be forwarded at Government expense to whatever section of the province they may fix on, and it is with great difficulty I can persuade them that such is not the case.

The passengers by the "Lady Charlotte Guest" were in better circumstances, and these people emigrated at their own cost, and proceeded in the vessel to Montreal; the greater portion of them have their relations settled in the province; some in the Bathurst district, and others are going to Goderich and Dumfries.

Those by the "Josepha," from Belfast, are all in good circumstances; one family going to their friends in St. Giles, and several others have their friends in the neighbourhood of Montreal, but the great majority of them proceed to the Western division of the province.

In the "Catherine," from Liverpool, they are mostly labourers, and very poor; some few farmers have good means; about 100 of them are from estates of the Earl Fitzwilliam's, in the county Wicklow, who assisted them to emigrate; all of those requiring employment, and that I could induce to work, I obtained it for them, but the greater part of them have proceeded up the country.

In the brig "Saphira," from Thurso, were about 20 families who have been assisted to emigrate by the Duke of Sutherland, from his estates in Sutherlandshire; these people have all left their houses of their own accord, and his Grace has been pleased to assist them to the extent of from 3*l.* to 7*l.* each family; only four families of this party were furnished altogether by his agent. From the exaggerated accounts told them at home, they all expected on landing here to be forwarded to the London district, to which it appears they wish to proceed, although scarcely a family of them have a friend or acquaintance in the province, and appeared much disappointed when it was refused, and employment offered them; this they did not calculate on, and it was only a few of them who appeared inclined to avail themselves of it. They afterwards proceeded up to Montreal, and I fear will become a charge on the agency there, and further up the country. Seven families, widows and orphans, mostly females, I have given a free passage to. Their only chance of succeeding is to get into some of the old country settlements, as it is impossible to get them any employment in or about this city, or Montreal. I have also been obliged to assist a number of females who came out in the "Catherine," from Liverpool, on similar grounds, but in no instance has any aid been given to persons who are able to work; employment being abundant on the roads. I have also most favourable accounts from the Eastern townships of the demand for labourers; wages 3*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* 9*d.* with board; but it is very few who I can induce to go to that section of the province, their prejudices are so strong against the winter.

Three vessels with passengers are reported at Grosse Isle.

Note.—The passengers arrived during the past week are chiefly labourers and farmers of the better class, many of them in possession of capital.

In the "Independence," from Liverpool, are some very respectable Scotch farmers, with good means; they are principally going to settle in the Bathurst, Home, Gore and London districts. About 20 have decided to take Sherbrook Eastern townships on their route, in hopes of meeting with a desirable location in that section of the country.

Passengers per "Orlando," from London and Gravesend, are paupers, who have been sent out by the Poor Law Commissioners; they consist of about 12 families, and are all going to the Western section of the province; these people were well provided for during the voyage, and were forwarded free to Montreal at ship's expense.

Those in the "Clifton," from Cork, and "Abercromby," from Liverpool, all landed in good health; a number of the passengers in the former vessel are going to their friends in the United States; a few, in the "Abercromby," young men, are going to their friends in New Brunswick. These vessels have all had long passages, average being 56 days.

Those in the "Clifton" were short of provisions, owing to the greater part of their stock, consisting of potatoes, which, from the heat of the vessel's hold and the lateness of the season, soon became unfit for use; they consequently were obliged to purchase from the master; and those families, whose means were limited, landed here in a destitute state. Six families, consisting of women and children, who were going to join their relations and friends in the province, I was under the necessity of giving assistance to in provisions, and a free passage to Montreal.

Note.—Passengers arrived during the past week are generally in good circumstances, and are all proceeding up the country, with the exception of a few families from Sligo and Dublin whose means were exhausted, and who are now at work here to earn sufficient to carry them up.

In the brig "Wanderer" were eight families, 58 in number, who have been assisted to emigrate by their landlord, Neill Malcolm, Esq., from his estates in Argyllshire; these people were well provided for during the voyage; and I had received orders to advance them means sufficient to enable them to reach their friends settled in the London district, and to draw on Mr. Malcolm for the amount; they all proceeded from this two days since, provided with every information necessary to enable them to reach their destination.

The passengers per the "Dee," from Bristol, are respectable farmers and farm labourers; they have all a little money, but have no particular place fixed on for settlement; they give the preference to the Western part of the province, where they intend to proceed, and to judge for themselves. I furnished them with routes, distances, and the names of the different Government agents along their route; one family, eight in number, were assisted to emigrate by their parish.

Seventy-one passengers in the brig "Rowena," from Sligo, had a long passage of nine weeks; they all landed in good health, and, with the exception of four families, who remained here for employment, they proceeded direct on their route up the country; two families are going to their relations in the state of New York; the others to the Eastern, Newcastle and Gore districts.

The brig "Astria," from Dublin, with 147 passengers, was two months on her voyage; they however landed in good health; but a number of the families were very poor, having expended all their money in purchasing food from the master; the greater number of them proceeded direct on their route up the country; those who had not means, I have furnished with employment here.

Fifty-two passengers in the "Marquis of Wellesley" are in good circumstances; a number of them have their friends in the neighbourhood of Montreal, and others in different sections of the province.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 21 September 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit, for your information, the enclosed copy of a despatch from the Governor-general of Canada, forwarding returns to the 21st August from the emigrant agent and from the superintendent of quarantine at Quebec, of emigrants who had arrived in that province; and I am to call your attention to the observations made by Mr. Buchanan in Return No. 1, in respect to the alleged deficiency of provisions on board the brig "Hope."

N. B.—Upon this Letter the following Correspondence ensued :—

Government Emigration Office, Dublin,
2 October 1841.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter desiring a report on the alleged deficiency of provisions on board the brig "Hope," with passengers from this Port to Quebec, I beg to state, that vessel attracted my most particular attention, as being so very unfit for the conveyance of passengers on so long a voyage, that I advised all I could influence, not to proceed by her; I also made an official report to the collector, and took him to see her, on which he ordered a survey. She having been reported sound, no further step could be taken to prevent her proceeding on her voyage; added to which, the master appeared to me unfit for the charge.

On my inspection of the provisions, I found the quantity in many instances limited to the very letter of the Act; and from my anticipation of a long voyage, being fully persuaded the "Hope," from the nature of her build, could not, under the most favourable circumstances, make an average one, I strongly recommended the passengers generally to increase their supply: a few did; but some were satisfied to proceed, saying they could not afford to lay in more, and were content to live sparingly on what they had, from my warnings.

They having, in my opinion, the quantity required by the Act, I did not feel justified in withholding the certificate. I stated these particulars to Mr. Buchanan in my letter.

I have, &c.

John Walpole, Esq.

Sir, Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 5 October 1841.

I AM directed by the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to acknowledge your letter of the 2d instant, containing your report on the alleged deficiency of provisions on board the "Hope" during her voyage with emigrants to Quebec, and I am to request that you will state, with reference to this ship, whether, in pursuance of the 6th clause of the Passengers' Act, a list of the prices of provisions was exhibited on board during the period in which the passengers were engaged.

Lieut. Hodder, R. N.
Dublin.

Government Emigration Office, Dublin,
Sir, 13 November 1841.

IN reply to your letter of the 5th of October, relating to the "Hope," bound to Quebec, I have the honour to inform you, for the information of the Commissioners, that the list of the prices of provisions was not exhibited during the period in which the passengers were engaged.

I dispensed with the exhibition, having stated to the passengers that no provisions could be procured on board, the master and crew having only a sufficiency for themselves, and believing that my advice would have had more effect in inducing the passengers to add to their stock.

I have, &c.

OBSERVING from a note of the emigration agent at Quebec, in one of the returns enclosed in Lord Sydenham's despatch of the 26th June, which was forwarded to us by your letter of the 20th ultimo, that the ship "Lord Cochrane" arrived from Tralee on the 29th May last, with upwards of sixty passengers over her complement, and with twenty-seven persons whose names were not on her passenger list; and further, that no copy of the Passengers' Act was on board; we beg leave to suggest, for Lord John Russell's consideration, that the Commissioners of Customs may be moved to call upon the officer at that port, whose duty it was to see the ship cleared under the Passengers' Act, for any observations which he may have to offer on the subject. We enclose an extract of that portion of the emigration agent's report which relates to this ship.

EXTRACT of a NOTE appended to the Weekly Return of the Chief Agent for Emigration at the Port of Quebec, for the Week ended 5th June.

I REGRET to have to report a gross infringement of the second clause of the Imperial Passenger Act, in the case of the ship "Lord Cochrane," Captain Williams, from Tralee; this vessel had upwards of sixty full passengers over her complement, and out of the 399 persons on board, there were only 322 names on her passenger list. The master was fined by the collector 20*l.* sterling, which was the highest penalty under the Act. In the space occupied by the passengers there was only six feet five inches superficies; whereas by the Act there should be ten feet; these people, notwithstanding their crowded state, landed in good health; the only death during the voyage was a child of two-and-a-half years. The master appears to be quite ignorant of the regulations respecting the carrying of passengers, and had not a copy of the Passenger Act on board. This vessel is owned by W. & R. Hickson, of Tralee.

Letter from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 2 October 1841.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 2 October 1841.

WITH reference to your letter of the 3d August, relative to the infringement of the Passengers' Act by the ship "Lord Cochrane," carrying emigrants from Tralee to Quebec, I am directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the copy of a letter from the Board of Treasury, enclosing a report from the Commissioners of Customs on this subject, and I am to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion on the proposition of the Lords Commissioners, to instruct the Commissioners of Customs to put the bond entered into in this case into suit.

Encl. in No. 8.

Sir, Treasury Chambers, 27 Sept. 1841.

WITH reference to your letter of the 7th ult., relative to the infringement of the Passengers' Act by the ship "Lord Cochrane," carrying emigrants to Quebec from Tralee, I have it in command from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to transmit to you, to be laid before Lord Stanley, copy of a report from the Commissioners of Customs, dated 14th instant, and of its enclosure, and I have to request you will inform his Lordship that my Lords propose, with his concurrence, to instruct the Commissioners of Customs to put the bond entered into in this case into suit.

I am, &c.

Jas. Stephen, Esq.

May it please your Lordships,

YOUR Lordships having referred to us the annexed letter of Mr. James Stephen, dated the 7th ultimo, transmitting, by command of Lord John Russell, copy of a letter from the Commissioners of Colonial Lands and Emigration, reporting the infringement of the provisions of the Passengers' Act in the case of the ship "Lord Cochrane," carrying emigrants to Quebec from Tralee:

We report, that from the annexed papers, it appears that in the case of the vessel in question, the Passengers' Act has been infringed, as follows:—

1st. That the vessel on arrival at Quebec had upwards of sixty passengers over her compliment, and out of 399 persons on board, there were only 322 names on her passengers' list:

2d. That in the space occupied by the passengers there was only six feet five inches superficies; whereas by the Act there should be ten feet.

3d. That the master had not a copy of the Passengers' Act.

CANADA.

With respect to the first infringement, it would appear that the master has paid the penalty of 20 l., which is the highest sum fixed by the 16th section of the Act for that offence.

With respect to the second infringement, it is to be observed that by the 2d section of the Act, it is provided that whatever may be the tonnage of the ship, no greater number of passengers shall be taken on board than shall be after the rate of one such passenger to every ten superficial feet of the lower deck or platform unoccupied by goods, not being the personal luggage of such persons, if such ship shall not have to cross the line on her voyage. This regulation of the Act not having been complied with, the bond required by the 19th section of the Act, the penalty of which is 1,000 l., is forfeited; and may be put in suit at any time within twelve months next after the return of the master to the port from which he sailed on such voyage.

With respect to the third infringement, it appears that the captain did not demand of the collector and comptroller at the port of clearance the copies of the Act required to be kept on board; but as there is no complaint that the same was not produced to any passenger for his perusal when required, the penalty of 20 l. inflicted by the Act in such a case has not been incurred; a further forfeiture of the bond has, however, been incurred, inasmuch as the copies of the Act were not kept on board, as required by the 8th section of the Act.

We beg to transmit, for your Lordship's information, a copy of the report of our principal officers at Tralee, relative to the case, from which your Lordships will perceive that no blame attaches to them, in respect of the infringements in question; and as it would appear that the passengers in excess were taken on board after the clearance of the ship, we have to submit whether your Lordships may not deem the case to be one in which the bond should be put in suit.

We beg to add, with reference to the penalty of 20 l. paid in this case being the highest sum fixed by the 16th section of the Act, for an excess of passengers, that a clause was prepared in pursuance of your Lordship's directions, and introduced into the last Customs Amendment Bill, inflicting a penalty of 5 l. upon the master of every vessel carrying passengers, for each passenger in excess of the number allowed by law, over and above the penalty inflicted by the 16th section of the Act. The Bill, however, has not yet been brought before Parliament.

14 September 1841.

Gentlemen, Custom-house, Tralee, 24 August 1841.

In reporting on the annexed reference from the Honourable Board, relative to an excess of emigrants on board the "Lord Cochrane," bound from this port to Quebec, in April last, we have to state, that the "Lord Cochrane" cleared from this port on the 19th April. Two days previous thereto the tide-surveyor visited the vessel to inspect the water, and ascertain that the berths were properly fitted up; in the latter case he found that the law had not been complied with, and accordingly had the necessary alterations made; with respect to the water, he found more than sufficient for the voyage. On the day of clearing he again went on board, and after directing the visitors to leave the vessel, ordered all the emigrants on deck, and then calling them by their respective names from the list, passed them into the hold, when he found that the number on board corresponded with the list; he then proceeded to examine the sea stock, of which he found a sufficient supply. The vessel did not sail for two or three days after; and whatever excess of emigrants were on board on the vessel's arrival at Quebec, must have been taken on board after the officers cleared her. The party did not apply to us to be furnished with extracts of the Passengers' Act; neither does the tide-surveyor know whether the master had copies thereof on board, but he recollects perfectly well questioning him, as to whether he was in the practice of carrying out emigrants; he stated that he was, and was perfectly conversant with the regulations; however, in the present case, we are perfectly satisfied, that the infringement rested entirely with the Messrs. Hicksons, of this port, owners of the vessel, who cannot plead ignorant of the law, inasmuch as we refused to certify the list of emigrants until they erased therefrom the names of five passengers, being so many over the number sanctioned by law; and we have every reason to think that the act was intentional, for the sake of gain, and that the practice will be continued, unless some more restrictive law is passed by the Legislature to prevent it.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

No. 9.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 14 October 1841.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 14 October 1841.

WITH reference to your letter of the 2d inst. enclosing copies of communications from the Board of Treasury and the Commissioners of Customs, relative to the infringement of the Passengers' Act by the ship "Lord Cochrane," carrying passengers from Tralee to Quebec, we have the honour to report, for Lord Stanley's information, that of the three offences enumerated by the Commissioners of Customs, namely, the excess of passengers in proportion to the superficial feet of the deck, the incorrectness of the list of passengers, and the want on board of a copy of the Act, we think that it does not clearly appear from the report of the emigration agent on these charges, for which of the two first it was that a fine was inflicted at Quebec upon the master of the vessel. This point can, however, be ascertained in the course of the further communication which it will be necessary to hold with the colony in order to obtain the evidence in an authentic shape. There would then remain two instances of infringement of the law in important particulars involving penalties under the Passengers' Act, and we entirely concur with the Commissioners of Customs in recommending that the bond given to the Crown by the master should accordingly be put in suit.

With reference to the concluding remark by the Commissioners of Customs relative to the maximum fine of 20*l.* which can at present be imposed upon the master for carrying an undue number of passengers, we have the honour to state, that this amount is also, in our opinion, wholly inadequate to prevent the commission of the offence, inasmuch as, after the payment of it, there may be left a large profit to the parties connected with the ship, out of the passage-money received from the passengers who are in excess of the legal number. In our report upon the amendments on the Passengers' Act, we suggested that the penalty for taking more passengers than the Act allowed should be stated at a rate per head, and we proposed the sum of 5*l.* for each adult; and we are glad to find the same view has also been taken by the Board of Customs.

We have, &c.

Letter from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 29 October 1841.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 29 October 1841.

WITH reference to your letter of the 14th instant, I am directed by Lord Stanley to inform you, that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have apprized his Lordship, that the Commissioners of Customs have been desired to give directions for putting the bond given to the Crown by the master of the emigrant ship "Lord Cochrane" into suit, for an infringement of the Passengers' Act.

Despatch from Sir Richard Jackson to Lord Stanley, 28 Sept. 1841.

My Lord, Government House, Kingston, 28 September 1841.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship herewith the returns from the emigrant agent at Quebec, and the superintendent at Grosse Isle, which have been received since Lord Sydenham's despatch of the 28th August last, No. 114.

As the emigration for this season seems fast drawing to a termination, I have directed that the establishment at Grosse Isle should be closed on the 20th October, unless, which does not seem probable, there should be reason, as that day approaches, to expect the arrival of any considerable body of emigrants.

I have, &c.

Note.—Passengers arrived during the past week are generally in good circumstances, and consist of farmers, labourers and trades, and, with few exceptions, are able to pay their way to their respective destinations. The greater portion of them are going to settle in the Western division of the province, and some to their friends in the United States. These vessels all have had long passages, the average being over 60 days.

The passengers per "China," from Limerick, were near 10 weeks on the voyage; their supply of provisions falling short, they were obliged to purchase from the captain at high rates; they stated that their supply of provisions was sufficient, when they left, for three months; but that their potatoes, which constituted their chief stock, owing to the wet and heat in the vessel's hold, soon rotted, and became unfit for use. Several cases having occurred this season, in which this most essential, and I may say principal, food of the Irish emigrants has been destroyed from neglect and improper stowage, that I should recommend, if considered practicable, that this article of provision should be placed in charge of the master of the vessel, and to be issued by him to each individual twice a week, or oftener, if he thought proper; at present they are brought on board in sacks, and thrown into the hold on the wet ballast, or on the water casks, and in the course of a few days, owing to the thoroughfare made over them by the crew and passengers going for water and other provisions or baggage, that they soon become so trampled and bruised as to render them unfit for use.

In the "Lady Jane Gray," from Cromarty, were 85 passengers; this vessel sailed with a full complement, but landed 155 at Picton, where they were detained five days. She has been a month on her voyage from there to this port, during which time four adults and one child died, and eighteen were left at Grosse Isle, in hospital; all of whom Doctor Douglas reports will recover, but one old man, aged 75. These people had fever previous to arrival at Picton; there were two deaths at sea.

In the "John Walker," were 49 passengers from the Isle of Sky; they consist of 10 families, farmers and farm-labourers, and are going to their friends in Glengary, and to the Home and London districts. This vessel sailed with her full complement, and landed about 200 at Sydney, C. B.

Those in the "Patriot," from Leith, were in good circumstances, 19 in number; they are going to their friends in the Gore and London districts.

The "Andrew White," from Glasgow, with 138 passengers. This vessel proceeded direct to Montreal, having engaged their passage to that port. They appear in middling circumstances, and are proceeding to the Home, Gore and London districts to join their friends. A few, whose means are limited, intend to remain in Montreal for employment.

Passengers per the "Woodland Castle," 36 in number, from Cork, mostly young single men and women; there are five mechanics; the remainder are labourers and servants, all very poor; they were eight weeks on the passage, and ran short of provisions, and exhausted their little stock of money purchasing provisions from the captain; the greater part of them are going to the United States.

In the brig "Bruce," from Newport, county Mayo, were 205 passengers, principally labourers. They had a long and tedious passage of 63 days, and were also short of provisions; they landed at Metis and Green Island for a supply; and also obtained some from two vessels in the Gulf. This vessel lost some of her spars off Cape Clear, in a gale, which detained her several days. A large portion of her passengers intend going to the United States; and all proceeded direct from this, with the exception of 12 or 14, who had not means, and have obtained employment here.

Note.—The emigrants arrived during the past week are nearly all Scotch and Irish, of whom a number are in very destitute circumstances, owing to their having long passages; the average of this week being 57 days.

Passengers per "Hector," from Liverpool, 71 in number, are respectable people, and all proceeded direct to Montreal; many of them have been in the province before, and are now returning with their friends. Several of the passengers complain of being on short allowance of water, viz., a quart per day, and the master was obliged to send on shore several times in the river for a supply. This vessel was 57 days on her voyage; and had the quantity of water been on board as fixed by law, this deficiency could not occur. Captain Patton, on examination, admitted the deficiency, but stated that it was caused by the waste of the passengers themselves. I have reported the case to the Government agent at Liverpool, for inquiry.

The brig "Eveline," with 132 passengers, 50 days from Londonderry, are chiefly labourers, farmers and a few trades; they have all landed in good health, but many of them very destitute. I have been under the necessity of extending assistance to four families, 32 in number, who are going to settle on the Ottawa; a number of others are employed in this neighbourhood; three families, 25 in number, have been assisted to emigrate by their landlord, Mr. Watts, county Donegal.

In the brig "Lady Hood," from Stornaway, were 14 families, 78 in number, all very poor, and landed here after a passage of 70 days, in great distress, from want of provisions; they had expended all their money in purchasing supplies from the master during the passage; I distributed 2 cwt. of oatmeal among them, and forwarded them to Port St. Francis. They are all going to join their countrymen in the township of Berry and Linwick.

By the ship "Charles," were 24 families, 145 persons, from the same port, and also bound to the same destination; they are chiefly from the Isle of Uig, and I regret to say nearly as destitute; this vessel had her full complement of passengers, but landed 233 at Sydney, Cape Breton; they had a passage of 51 days; and also suffered from want of provisions; I issued a small supply of oatmeal among the most needy. These families have all emigrated on the invitation of a party who came out in 1838, and who landed equally poor, but are now doing well, and have promised to assist their friends to get through the winter; very few of them can speak English; but I have no doubt they will prove a valuable addition to our population in the Eastern townships.

In the "Canada," from Greenock, 115 passengers, all in good circumstances; several wealthy families are going to settle in the Bathurst district; and others to their friends in Toronto, Oro and Eldon.

The passengers in the brig "Hants and Jessy Logan," from same port, are also respectable settlers in good circumstances, and all are proceeding to the Western section of the province, some to Lancaster, Puslinch and Dundas, &c.

Those per "Nelson Village," from Belfast, 120, are farmers, labourers and trades, and, with the exception of three families, appear in good circumstances; the greater part of them proceeded up the country, to join friends about Bytown, Port Hope and Toronto.

139 passengers in the "Cumberland Lass," from same port, were 66 days on the voyage; many of them landed in great distress, from want of provisions; they purchased from Captain Smith as long as their money lasted; and he had to support from 40 to 50 of the poorest for the last three weeks; when he arrived here, all his ship stores were expended, besides supplies which he obtained from different places in the gulf. I forwarded eight families, 43 in number, to Montreal, to enable them to reach their friends; and also gave them a small supply of oatmeal; their destination is Bytown and Cavan, Newcastle district.

The brig "Bon Accord," 70 in number, from Aberdeen, are in good circumstances; they are chiefly farmers, and proceeded direct in the vessel to Montreal; they were 69 days on the voyage, but landed in good health, and were well supplied.

Note.—The emigrants landed during the past week are, with few exceptions, in good circumstances, and are principally coming out to join their friends.

The passengers per "Princess Royal," from Carmarthen, are very respectable Welsh farmers; they consist of one family of eight persons; the rest are young men, and, with the exception of two, are going to settle in the Huron tract.

The "Energy," and "Helen Stewart," from Limerick, also the "Blanch," from Donegal, are on their second voyage this year, and bring out very few emigrants. In the "Energy" were eight families, and six single men; in all, 44 persons, who have been assisted to emigrate by the Marquis Clanricarde, from his estate in Galway. His Lordship gave them a free passage, and 5*l.* to each family; they are all proceeding to the Western section of the province; a few of them have means to purchase land, and are proceeding to join their friends in the neighbourhood of Kingston; the remainder appear to have no fixed object in view, and are going up for employment.

As the season is now getting late, I endeavour to induce as many as possible to proceed into the country, and to secure some permanent employment before the winter sets in.

I have received the most favourable accounts from the Ottawa River, west of Bytown, of the demand for all classes of emigrants, and where abundance of employment is to be obtained during the approaching winter among the lumber-men and farmers.

The passengers per "Watchful," from Limerick, have had a long passage of eight weeks, and a number of them landed in distress; they were, however, in good health, and those who had not the means of proceeding further, I obtained employment for in this neighbourhood.

Nine Scotch families, 54 in number, who have been employed on the roads since their arrival here in June, have gone in and settled on lands in the county of Megantic, in Leeds and Inverness.

54 passengers per "Caledonia," from Greenock, are all in good circumstances, and are going to join their friends in Glengary, and about Perth, Brockville and Kingston.

I consider the emigration of this season as drawing to a close, and have only advices of two vessels; viz. the "Tom Moore," from Belfast, with 173, and the "Governor," from Limerick, with 58 passengers, to arrive.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 25 October 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you, for any observations which you may find it necessary to offer on the subject, the copy of a despatch from the officer administering the government of Canada, enclosing the returns of emigrants from the emigration agent at Quebec, and the medical superintendent at Grosse Isle, down to the week ending on the 18th of last month.

No. 13.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 4 November 1841.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 4 November 1841.

LORD STANLEY having directed that the last returns respecting emigrants which have been received from Canada should be transmitted to us for any observations we might have to offer upon them, we have the honour to state, for his Lordship's information, that we find that the general results presented by those returns are satisfactory.

In the course of the four weeks ending the 18th of September, forty-eight vessels had arrived at Quebec, bringing 2,471 emigrants; the duration of the voyage had for the most part been long, and in some instances had extended to seventy days, the period assigned for it by the Passengers' Act: little sickness, however, appeared to have prevailed among the emigrants at sea. The weekly numbers at the Quarantine Establishment at Grosse Isle had varied from twenty-five to forty-one, while only six deaths had taken place; but the worst consequence resulting from the length of the voyage was, that the provisions of the passengers had in many instances been quite exhausted at sea, and the parties had for some time before their arrival been compelled to purchase more from the master, and occasionally at exorbitant prices; they had, in consequence, landed in a state of destitution. The instances here reported confirm the opinion which we have already submitted to the Secretary of State, that it is expedient that the victualling of the passengers should devolve upon the parties connected with the ship.

In the case of one vessel only, the "Hector," from Liverpool, it appeared that there might have been an infringement of the Passengers' Act, from the supply of water having been originally deficient; but the emigration agent at that port, when called upon for his report, states that he had satisfied himself that the proper quantity of water had been put on board the vessel at the time of her departure, and forwards a statement made by some of the passengers, which had been transmitted to him from Canada, to the effect that there had been considerable waste by the passengers in the case of the water. Under these circumstances the case did not appear to be one in which there was ground for taking further proceedings.

The present returns further state, that the great majority of the emigrants remained in Canada, and that they were for the most part of a useful description. It is also added that in certain parts of Canada there was a prospect of abundance of employment during the approaching winter.

We would only mention, in conclusion, that at the date of these returns, the immigration for the year had amounted to 27,133 persons, being an excess over the immigration to the corresponding period of the preceding year of 5,129.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-General Sir Richard Jackson, K.C.B., to Lord Stanley.

Government House, Kingston,

My Lord, 27 September 1841.

No. 14. Despatch from Sir Richard Jackson to Lord Stanley, 27 Sept. 1841.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Lord John Russell's despatch of the 26th ultimo, No. 431, desiring a report as to the sum, not exceeding 8,000*l.*, for which application should be made to Parliament during the ensuing year, for the assistance of destitute emigrants after their arrival in this country.

Looking to the amount which has been expended in this country during the last two years for emigration purposes, I am of opinion that a sum of 5,000*l.* would, in addition to what may be obtained from the Provincial Legislature, be sufficient for this service during the year 1842. In fixing this sum, I assume that relief is to be afforded in the same manner as during the last two years, only in the conveyance to places where their labour may be available of emigrants who are in a state of absolute destitution. When the emigrant tax was before in operation, a general impression prevailed among the emigrants, that every one who paid the tax had a right to assistance; and, accordingly, every species of deception was considered justifiable to bring this right into effect. If such a practice were again to prevail, it would defeat altogether the object of the tax, inasmuch as it would leave nothing for those extraordinary expenses of sickness or destitution which it is intended to meet. I would, therefore, submit to your Lordship, that in carrying out the proposed arrangement for the assistance of deserving emigrants, the Emigration Commissioners should make it known as generally and distinctly as possible, that the payment of the emigrant tax, whether by the individual, or on his behalf by the Government, does not entitle him to assistance on his arrival in Canada out of the fund so created, unless he shall come under the description of a destitute emigrant, and that with a view to prevent imposition in this respect, every precaution will be taken by the Government agents in Canada to put to the test the representations which may be made to them by poor emigrants.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Stanley to the Right Honourable Sir Charles Bagot, G.C.B.

Sir, Downing-street, 3 February 1842.

No. 15. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Sir Charles Bagot, 3 February 1842.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of Sir Richard Jackson's despatch, No. 5, of the 27th September, containing the report which Lord John Russell had called for as to the sum for which it would be proper that application should be made to Parliament for the service of emigration in Canada, during the year commencing on the 1st of next April.

I have been led, by the importance of this subject, to inquire very minutely into the manner of carrying out the scheme which Lord John Russell contemplated in his despatch to Lord Sydenham of the 3d of last May, and the result of that inquiry has served to convince me that there are difficulties which practically interfere with the execution of Lord John Russell's plan.

I will now explain to you the nature of those difficulties, and announce to you the conclusion of Her Majesty's Government upon the subject.

The plan suggested by Lord John Russell appears to have consisted in the renewal of the legislative enactment imposing a capitation tax on emigrants, from the proceeds of which tax a fund was to be established, applicable to the wants of destitute emigrants on their arrival in the province. The contemplated grant from the British Treasury was to have relieved certain emigrants from the payment of the provincial tax; but only in those cases in which the fitness of the emigrants for emigration had been previously attested by an authorized agent in this country. The difficulties attending this system of attestation are found, on examination, to be almost insuperable, except by incurring very considerable expense to the public, and causing trouble to the emigrants. The persons who go to the North American province are not dependent on Government, nor is there any reason why they should report themselves beforehand to any officer of the Government. They are simply British subjects removing from one part of Her Majesty's dominions to another, whose arrangements it is not possible to control by any regulations at the place of embarkation. As the emigrants go on board on the earliest day they can after they reach the port, it would be impracticable for any officer to make proper and sufficient inquiries into the character and circumstances of the people, and to wait for their replies; and yet if the Government professed to grant exemptions and indulgences, persons who were entitled in other respects to the relief would feel aggrieved if it were denied for want of opportunities of investigation. Neither could this be met by a system of requiring them to come provided with testimonials from their own neighbourhood, for independently of the difficulty of effectually notifying such a demand beforehand to poor emigrants throughout the United Kingdom, it is well known that documents of that kind require much investigation. Again, the system of establishing local agents throughout the country for the purpose of inquiring into the characters of intending emigrants is found to be wholly impracticable by reason of the expense; and under any circumstances the inquiry could not be rigid when so small a benefit was to be incurred.

CANADA.

I have thus described the practical difficulties to which, in this country, the plan of Her Majesty's late Government in respect to emigration in Canada is liable in its execution; because it is necessary that the reasons which oblige Her Majesty's present Government to relinquish that plan should be fully explained to the Provincial Legislature.

Instead of the original scheme, it is now proposed—subject to the consent of Parliament to the vote—that the sum of 5,000*l.*, which is the amount represented by Sir Richard Jackson to be sufficient for this service during the year 1842, shall be paid over to the Provincial Treasury, to be expended under your authority, and under such checks and rules as the Legislature may have established. You will bear carefully in mind that this fund must be strictly and rigidly administered; that the emigrant is not to be entitled to relief out of it unless he shall come under the description of a destitute emigrant; and lastly, that the amount granted by Parliament shall not be exceeded.

I have, &c.

No. 16.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 30 November 1841.

November 22.

WITH reference to your letter of the 14th ultimo, I am directed by Lord Stanley to transmit, for your information, the copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, enclosing a report from the Commissioners of Customs, explaining the reasons why the bond given by the master of the emigrant ship "Pomona" should not be put in suit for the violation of the Passengers' Act, of which he had been guilty.

I am, at the same time, directed to call your attention to the suggestion of the Commissioners of Customs, that, in addition to the penalty imposed by the Passengers' Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, cap. 53, a further penalty of 5*l.* should be inflicted on the masters of emigrant ships for each person carried in excess of the number allowed by law.

Enclosure

Enclosure in No. 16.

Sir, Treasury Chambers, 22 November 1841. Encl. in No. 16.

I HAVE it in command from the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to transmit to you, for the information of Lord Stanley, with reference to your letter of the 21st ult., copy of a report from the Commissioners of Customs, dated the 12th instant, relative to an imputed violation of the Passengers' Act by the master of the "Pomona," carrying emigrants to Quebec.

I am, &c.

James Stephen, Esq. &c. &c. &c. (signed) C. E. Trevelyan.

(No. 1492.)

May it please your Lordships,

YOUR Lordships having referred to us the annexed letter from Mr. James Stephen, dated 21st ult., transmitting, by command of Lord Stanley, copy of a letter from the Commissioners for Colonial Lands and Emigration, on the subject of a violation of the Passengers' Act imputed to the master of the ship "Pomona," in carrying passengers from Sligo to Quebec:

We report, that by the 11th and 16th sections of the Passengers' Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 53, it is provided, "that if any ship carrying passengers from the United Kingdom to any port or place out of Europe, and not being in the Mediterranean Sea, shall carry any number of passengers exceeding by more than one person in fifty the proportion authorized and allowed by that Act; or, if any such ship shall be cleared out before such lists of passengers as thereinbefore mentioned shall have been delivered to the collector or other principal officer of the Customs; or, if any such list shall be wilfully false; the master of any such ship shall, for and in respect of each and every such offence, be liable on such summary conviction as thereinafter mentioned to the payment of a fine of not less than five pounds nor more than twenty pounds sterling; and by the 19th section it is enacted, for the more effectually securing the observance of the rules and payment of the penalties aforesaid, that before any ship carrying passengers shall clear out for any such voyage, the master of the said ship shall enter into a bond to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, in the sum of one thousand pounds; the condition of which bond shall be, that the said ship is sea-worthy; and that all and every the rules and regulations made and prescribed by the said Act for the carriage of passengers shall be well and truly performed before and during such intended voyage; and that all penalties, fines and forfeitures which the master of such ship may be sentenced or adjudged to pay for or in respect of the breach or non-performance, before or during such voyage, of any such rules or regulations shall be well and truly paid."

That upon the arrival of the vessel "Pomona" at Quebec, it appears she had on board 247 passengers (not 250, as stated in the annexed papers), of which number 27 were over her complement, and 35 whose names were not inserted in her passengers' list.

With respect to the proposition of the Commissioners of Emigration in their annexed report, viz., that the bond of 1,000*l.* entered into under the 19th section of the Passengers' Act, should be put in suit against the master in the present case for carrying an excess in the number, and furnishing a false list of the passengers to the proper officer at the port of sailing, we have to state to your Lordships, that the master has already paid the penalty of 20*l.* to our officers at Quebec for carrying an excess of passengers, which is the highest sum fixed by the 16th section of the Act for that offence, and it would appear that he has also rendered himself liable to the further penalty of 20*l.* under that section for having furnished a false list of the passengers at the port of sailing; but our solicitor has expressed his opinion, as the full penalty of 20*l.* has been paid by the master, that the further proceedings against him for the penalty of his bond under the 19th section would not succeed.

We beg, however, to draw your Lordship's attention to our report of the 14th September last (No. 1232), in the case of the ship "Lord Cochrane," carrying emigrants from Tralee to Quebec, in which we stated, with reference to the penalty of 20*l.* paid by the master in that case for carrying an excess of passengers, that clause had been prepared in pursuance of your Lordship's directions, and introduced into the draft of the last Customs Amendment Bill, inflicting the penalty of 5*l.* upon the master of every vessel carrying passengers for each passenger in excess of the number allowed by law over and above the penalty inflicted by the 16th section of the Act, but that the Bill had not been submitted to Parliament.

COPY of a LETTER from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 21 January 1842.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you, for your consideration and report, an Act passed by the Legislature of the province of Canada during their late Session, intituled, "An Act to create a Fund for defraying the Expense of enabling indigent Emigrants to proceed to their place of destination, and of supporting them until they can procure Employment."

No. 13.

Lord Stanley is desirous of receiving your report on this Act with as little delay as possible, in order that if it be considered unobjectionable, Her Majesty's decision on it may be obtained, and the Act promulgated without loss of time.

I have, &c.

CAP. XIII.

Encl. in No. 17.

AN ACT to create a Fund for defraying the Expense of enabling indigent Emigrants to proceed to their place of destination, and of supporting them until they can procure Employment.

[18 September 1841.]

Most Gracious Sovereign,

His Excellency's Message respecting Emigrants.

WHEREAS by Message from his Excellency the Right Honourable Charles Baron Sydenham, of Sydenham in the county of Kent, and of Toronto in Canada, Governor-general of this Province, laid before both Houses of the Legislature, his Excellency has been pleased to signify that, in conformity to the instructions he has received from Your Majesty's Government, he recommends the expediency of imposing a rate or duty on emigrants coming into this province, for the purpose of creating a fund for defraying the expense of the medical care of sick emigrants, and of enabling indigent persons of that description to proceed to the places of their destination, and of maintaining them in Canada until they shall be able to procure employment; and has also been pleased to state the intention of Your Majesty's Government to apply to the Imperial Parliament for a grant of Eight thousand Pounds sterling, to enable Your Majesty's Commissary-general to pay such rate or duty on the part of such emigrants as may come to this province under the sanction of Government: And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for carrying the said recommendation into effect: May it therefore please Your Majesty, That it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by The Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and intituled, "An Act to re-unite the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and for the Government of Canada," and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That there shall be raised, levied and collected a rate or duty payable in the manner hereinafter prescribed, by the master or person in command of every vessel arriving in the Port of Quebec, or in the Port of Montreal, from any Port of the United Kingdom, or in any other part of Europe, with passengers or emigrants therefrom, and having been cleared of the Custom-house at such Port, after the First day of March One thousand eight hundred and Forty-two; and such rate or duty shall be Five Shillings currency for every such passenger or emigrant who shall have embarked from any Port in the United Kingdom under the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, ascertained by a certificate from one of the officers of Her Majesty's Customs at the Port of which such vessel shall have cleared, and Five Shillings currency for every such passenger or emigrant who shall have embarked without

A rate to be payable on Emigrants arriving in this Province from the United Kingdom.

By whom such rate shall be payable.

such sanction; and such rate or duty shall be paid by the master or person in command of such vessel, or by some person on his behalf, to the Collector or other chief officer of the Customs at the Port at which such vessel shall be first entered, and at the time of making such first entry, which shall contain on the face of it the number of passengers actually on board the vessel, and no such entry shall be deemed to have been validly made, or to Proviso. Cases in which such rate may be paid by the Imperial Government.

have any legal effect whatsoever, unless such rates or duties be so paid aforesaid: Provided always, That any draft, order or other document made or signed by any person in the United Kingdom aforesaid, duly empowered to that effect by Her Majesty's Government, and directed to Her Majesty's Commissary-general, or other officer having charge of the military chest in this province, and authorizing the payment to the Collector or chief officer of the Customs aforesaid of the rate or duty which would otherwise be payable by the master of any vessel for any emigrant or any number of emigrants on board such vessel, shall be taken and accepted by the Collector or chief officer as payment of the rate or

or duty payable on such emigrant or emigrants, and the sum mentioned in such order shall thereafter be received by such Collector or chief officer, and paid over and applied in the same manner as other money raised under the authority of this Act.

Children of certain age, how reckoned.

II. And be it enacted, That for the purposes of this Act, two children, each under the age of Fourteen years, or three children, each under the age of Seven years, shall be reckoned as one passenger, and that no child under the age of Twelve months shall be reckoned among the number of passengers.

No passenger to be allowed to leave any vessel until the rates due under this Act are paid.

III. And be it enacted, That no master or person having the command of any ship or vessel, arriving in either of the said Ports, shall permit any passenger to leave such vessel until he shall have delivered to the Collector or other chief officer of Her Majesty's Customs at such Port, a correct list of all passengers on board of such ship or vessel at the time of her arrival at such Port, nor until such list shall have been certified to be correct, and a certificate of such correctness, and a permission to allow his passengers to leave the vessel, and a receipt for the duties payable by him under the provisions of this Act, shall have been given to him by the said Collector or other chief officer, under a penalty of Twenty-five Pounds currency, to be paid by such master or person having the command, for every passenger leaving his ship or vessel contrary to the provisions of this Act: Provided always, That the said list shall contain the name of each head of a family, being a passenger on board of such vessel, his profession or trade, his country, and the place of his destination, and the number of grown persons and children belonging to his family on board such vessel, and the name of each person not belonging to any family, with the like particulars of country, trade, profession and destination: Provided also, That nothing in this Act contained shall prevent the master or person having the command of such ship or vessel from permitting any passenger to leave the vessel, at the request of such passenger, before the arrival of the vessel in the Harbour of Quebec, but in every such case the name of the passengers who shall so leave shall be entered in the manifest on the list of emigrants made out at the time of the clearing of the vessel from the United Kingdom, or other part of Europe as aforesaid, and shall be certified under the signatures of the passengers so leaving the vessel; and if the number of passengers remaining on board on the arrival of the vessel in the Harbour of Quebec do not correspond with that mentioned in such manifest, after deducting the number who shall have so left the vessel, the master or person having the command of such vessel shall incur a penalty of Five Pounds currency for each passenger not found on board or entered on the manifest as having left the vessel as aforesaid.

No. 18.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J Stephen, Esq., 2 February 1842.

No. 13.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 2 February 1842.

WE beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, transmitting for our consideration and report an Act passed by the Legislature of the province of Canada during their late Session, intituled, "An Act to create a Fund for defraying the Expense of enabling indigent Emigrants to proceed to their place of Destination, and of supporting them until they can procure Employment."

We have the honour to state, for Lord Stanley's information, that we find the following to be the chief provisions of this Act: a tax of 5*s.* currency is to be paid on account of every passenger (children being computed in the manner at present prescribed in the Imperial Passengers' Act) who may arrive in the colony from the United Kingdom or any part of Europe. The tax is to be paid either by the master of the vessel as heretofore, or by an order from any proper authority in this country directed to the Commissary-general in the province, authorizing the payment of it, in certain instances, out of the public money at his disposal. The money raised by the tax is to be applied by persons appointed by the Governor and under his directions, in affording medical attendance to destitute emigrants, in enabling them to proceed to their places of destination, and in providing for their support until they are able to procure employment. The remaining clauses are such as are necessary for preventing the evasion of the Act, or for ensuring the fulfilment of its provisions. Of these last we may at once say that they seem to be nearly identical with those of the same nature in the original Emigrant Tax Act which was passed in 1832, and renewed at two subsequent periods in the years 1834 and 1838, and that they appear to us unobjectionable.

As regards the more substantial provisions of the Act, we would first remark that the arrangement for paying the tax by drafts on the Commissary-general appears to be provided in order to carry out the plan announced by the Governor-general to the Legislature as being contemplated by Her Majesty's Government, namely, of defraying out of public funds this particular portion of the expense attendant upon emigration, in the case of those persons who should obtain a certificate of approval from an officer of emigration in this country. When directed to submit an opinion upon the detail of this plan, we stated that it did not appear to us that the means existed for effectually carrying it into operation; and should Lord Stanley have decided not to adopt it in the exact form in which it was originally proposed, the foregoing provision of the Act will have been rendered unnecessary. It would not, however, be requisite on that account that a change should be made in the Act, as the effect of not paying the tax out of the public money on account of a certain number of the emigrants will only be, that the contemplated exception to the general rule of its being being always paid by the master of the vessel will not occur. A somewhat similar provision, which existed in the former Acts, directing that the tax should be doubled upon all emigrants not bearing a certificate that they were embarked under the sanction of the Government in this country, has always, we believe, in like manner remained inoperative. Before leaving this clause, however, we beg further to refer to our report of the 2d December. In it we stated that the authorities in Canada had apparently fallen into some misapprehension as to the nature of the assistance which it had been proposed to render to emigration, and that we were, consequently, not aware what communication upon the subject might have been made to the Legislature on the part of the Executive Government. It is now apparent, from the tenor of the provision we have been considering, as well as from the preamble of the Act, that the Legislature of Canada did not consider that the grant of 8,000 l., if obtained from the Imperial Parliament, was to be reckoned as an addition to the fund which will be created by the tax, but were aware that it was to be expended in relieving a certain number of British emigrants upon their arrival from the tax, which would otherwise have to be paid by the master of the vessel on their behalf.

The next point on which it appears necessary to observe is the rule prescribed in the second clause for the computation of children. For obvious reasons of convenience, it is in conformity with that which at present exists in the Imperial Passengers' Act, and has no doubt been taken from it. But various considerations having suggested the expediency of altering the existing regulation on that subject, it will probably be deemed necessary in Canada, should the Imperial Act be amended in this particular, to enact that the same mode of computation shall prevail in the province, so as to avoid the complication of having two rules in force on the same subject.

It remains to consider, in the third place, the important provision of the Act relating to the application of the money which will be raised by the tax.

The object of the former enactments which authorized this impost was declared to be to create a fund for defraying the expense of procuring medical assistance for sick emigrants, and of enabling indigent persons of that description to proceed to the places of their destination. In addition to these two modes of relieving emigrants, the present Act introduces a third, namely, that of providing for their "support until they are able to procure employment." The effect of this enactment requires very serious attention.

That in case of an insufficient demand from other sources for the labour of emigrants upon their arrival, there should be some public works on which they could have an option of employment at lower than the current wages of the province, has been frequently admitted to be one amongst other desirable aids to emigration to Canada. It is also understood to have been usual, in practice, to relieve any urgent cases of destitution out of the funds derived from the emigrant tax. But the comprehensive words of the present Act, above quoted, apparently give to all unemployed emigrants for an indefinite time a legal right to support, which has never before been conferred on them, and which in practice might, perhaps, lead to serious evils. It is true that it is also provided that all money which may be raised under authority of the Act is to be applied to its appointed uses, under such rules and regulations as the Governor may establish, and it is probable, therefore, that every endeavour will be made to ascertain the reality of the destitution before relief is afforded. But the reports of the immigration agent at Quebec have shown that even when the right of the emigrants was more limited, the difficulty of ascertaining the objects really deserving of assistance was almost insuperable. Nor if the expedient were to be adopted of offering public employment at a low rate of wages would the evil be entirely met, especially if uncombined with a limitation of the period during which the right will last, for many individuals would prefer the certainty and comparative lightness of Government employment, at wages which would at least afford them the means of support, to being thrown upon their own resources, and having to use exertions to procure employment, which might only be temporary, from private parties. But not only is the period to which the right to support extends not limited, but the Act is not explicit as to the place where this support can be claimed. It may occur that after a number of destitute emigrants have been forwarded to Montreal, or other places in the interior, there may not exist at the moment a sufficient demand for their labour. If there were no fund created by law for their support, the employers of labour in the neighbourhood might make an effort to retain them, and at some sacrifice perhaps to themselves find employment for them; but when they see that there is a fund upon which unemployed emigrants will have a legal claim for support, they will naturally allow them to live upon that resource until the time comes when they more decidedly require their labour. If relief, moreover, would thus have to be dispensed in different parts of the province, there would, probably, not be the machinery necessary for the due administration of it, nor will the means exist either for ascertaining the fact of destitution, or for providing public employment for the unoccupied; and if, on the other hand, the relief contemplated by the Act is only to be given at Quebec, it is to be apprehended that it may lead to a very serious and inconvenient congestion of labour on that particular spot.

The question also necessarily arises, whether the funds to be supplied from a tax of only 5*s.* on each adult emigrant will prove sufficient to meet all the purposes to which it is rendered applicable by the present Act; the amount raised in former years, the rate per head on the emigrants being the same, was understood to be only sufficient for the more limited objects then contemplated. Although, therefore, experience alone can prove what will be the effect of the new provision introduced into the present Act, it seems probable that, however carefully the fund may be administered, it may not be equal to the increased demands which may be made upon it. In that case the intention of the Legislature would be frustrated, and just disappointment occasioned to the emigrants.

There are other objections, also, which might be urged to the measure; and amongst them may be mentioned that it will naturally put a stop to the practice adopted by parishes, and in some cases individuals, in this country sending out emigrants at their own expense, of furnishing them with "landing money," to prevent immediate destitution on their arrival. It is reasonable to expect, that in future all emigrants who would have been thus provided for will be thrown upon any public fund which may be created for the express purpose of supporting emigrants until they obtain employment. Again, if the emigrants who are supported under this clause are employed upon the public works at a low rate of wages, which will be paid to them out of this particular fund, it will be, in fact, the colony which will profit by the tax being levied more than the emigrants by whom and for whose benefit it is paid. Another objection to the plan, of a very serious nature, is that its tendency is to convert the emigrants into paupers, and to expose them upon their arrival in a new country, where good conduct and industry might ensure them competence, to the demoralizing effects of a dependence upon public support.

It is not competent for us to decide whether the objections which have been urged to this provision are of sufficient weight to render it desirable that the attention of the Legislature of Canada should be directed to a re-consideration of the enactment. And it has been with reluctance that we have pointed out exceptions to any part of a very useful Act, which, moreover, has been clearly passed in entire conformity with the wishes of the Executive Government. It was, however, our duty to direct attention to the subject; and if it shall be finally determined that an alteration in the provision in question is not necessary, perhaps the observations which have been made in this letter upon it may still be serviceable to the Governor in framing the regulations necessary for carrying it into effect.

We have, &c.

No. 19. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Sir Charles Bagot, 2 March 1842.

Sir, Downing-street, 2 March 1842.

I HAVE had under my consideration an Act passed by the Legislature of the province of Canada in their late Session, intituled, "An Act to create a Fund for defraying the Expense of enabling indigent Emigrants to proceed to the place of their Destination, and of supporting them until they can procure Employment." I have also had before me a Report of the Commissioners of Colonial Lands and Emigration upon this Act. No. 13.

My despatch of the 3d ultimo will have apprized you of the intention of Her Majesty's Government to redeem the pledge made to the Legislature of Canada, under the authority of Her Majesty's late Ministers, by proposing to the House of Commons a vote of money for the service of emigration in Canada. Upon this occasion, therefore, it is only necessary that I should advert to the Act which is before me.

In the report from the Commissioners, of which I transmit to you a copy, it is remarked that, if it shall have been decided to abandon the arrangement of paying the tax on emigrants by drafts on the Commissary-general after those persons had obtained a certificate of approval from an agent of emigration in this country, the provision of the Act prescribing the adoption of such a course will have been rendered nugatory. Having, as you are now aware, determined on placing at your disposal the sum of money that may be voted by Parliament instead of expending it in the precise manner in which it was originally proposed, it may, perhaps, be desirable that the law should be amended in this respect. The Commissioners appear to consider that it is not absolutely necessary that this provision should be altered; but I think it preferable that you should bring the question before the Legislature, and incite them to deliberate on the propriety of the omission of the clause referred to. For this purpose you will lay before the Legislature the appropriate extract from the Commissioners' report, and you will also communicate to them the closing observations on the provision relating to the application of the money which will be raised by the tax, in order that the Legislature may consider how far the objections stated are likely, with a view to Canadian objects, to thwart the designs of the Bill for the regulation of the passenger trade, which has been introduced into the House of Commons. Upon this subject I must caution you to be careful practically to prevent a wasteful abuse of the funds, which should, as much as possible, be applied to the removal, and as little to the maintenance, of the emigrants, always excepting cases of sickness. I should not advise that the tax should ever be remitted to the master of the passenger-ship, as he will take care to secure it in the fare. It may, at the discretion of the local authorities, be refunded to the passenger, either in money or in kind. No. 18. Feb. 2.

With respect to the clause for the computation of children, which is apparently founded on the corresponding provision in the Imperial Passengers' Act, I have to state that it will be expedient that you should lay before the Legislature an extract of this portion of the Commissioners' report, as it is not improbable that this clause of the Passengers' Act may be amended, and it would be undesirable to have two rules in force on the same subject.

In conclusion, I have to acquaint you that, notwithstanding that it is desirable to bring under the consideration of the Legislature the points which I have thus noticed, it is my intention to advise The Queen to leave this Act to its operation.

I have, &c.

No 20.
Despatch from Sir Charles Bagot to Lord Stanley, 13 April 1842.

Government House, Kingston,
13 April 1842.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 2d ultimo, No. 45, on the subject of the Act passed during the last session of the legislature, for imposing a tax on emigrants arriving in the province by the St. Lawrence, and enclosing a report from the Land and Emigration Commissioners on some of the provisions of that Act.

In obedience to your Lordship's directions, I shall bring under the notice of the legislature at their next meeting, such of the provisions of the Act as appear to require alteration. In the mean time, as I have already had the honour to state, I do not perceive that any inconvenience will arise from the change in the arrangements of Her Majesty's Government in respect to the payment of the tax in certain cases from the military chest. I now proceed to notice the report of the Land and Emigration Commissioners which is enclosed in your despatch.

Those gentlemen express considerable apprehension that the terms in which the 7th clause of the Act has been drawn up may lead to serious inconvenience. They observe, that although in former years relief has been extended to destitute emigrants for whom employment could not be found, "the comprehensive words of the present Act apparently give to all unemployed emigrants, for an indefinite time, a legal right to support which has never before been conferred on them;" that when the right of the emigrants was more limited it was impossible to guard against imposition; that there is no specification, either of the period within which, nor of the place at which such assistance should be afforded; that the existence of a fund, applicable in such a manner, would take away from the employers of labour all inducement to find work for emigrants during the dull season, and would induce parishes and individuals to withhold the "landing money," which they have hitherto given; that under such circumstances itis doubtful whether the fund would be adequate to the expenses thus thrown on it, and that by its operation it would expose the emigrant to the demoralizing effects of a state of pauperism.

Such are the principal inconveniences apprehended by the Commissioners: I confess that I cannot share in their apprehensions. They appear to reason throughout on the assumption that the terms which they quote from the 7th clause are compulsory on the Government, instead of permissive. This is evidently an error. The object of that clause is not, as the Commissioners suppose, to create a "legal right" in the emigrant to support, but to legalize that assistance which, as they admit, the Government has been compelled heretofore to grant, but which has been granted without legal sanction. The clause expressly provides that this relief, as well as that for medical attendance and conveyance, should be administered "under such rules and regulations" as the Governor for the time being shall appoint; and the reasoning of the Commissioners is, therefore, beside the question; unless it be assumed that an officer who is capable of administering the government of so extensive a province as Canada is yet not fit to be trusted with the administration of a fund of this description.

It is possible that by an extraordinary abuse of the power vested in him, the Governor might produce some of the evils anticipated by the Commissioners; but certainly not to the extent which they describe. Supposing him even to afford indiscriminate relief to all who applied, yet the smallness of the fund at his disposal, the impossibility of obtaining more when this should be exhausted, and the obligation under the Act to account for the money to the local legislature, would almost immediately correct the evil. But there is, in reality, no ground for fear. The government of this province has obtained, from the experience of many years, a knowledge of the manner in which emigrants can most properly be assisted, and there is no disposition, either in the Government or in the people, to sanction the relief of those who will not exert themselves. But as it is impossible to lay down any inflexible rules for the administration of relief, and as there is no other authority by whom it could be administered, this discretionary power is necessarily, and I think very properly, confided to the Government.

The course which has heretofore been adopted, and which has been found to work well, is as follows:—The emigrant agents are instructed to ascertain what demand there may be for labour in their own neighbourhood, and in other parts of the province. If there be employment in their own neighbourhood, it is offered to any individual applying for assistance, on the plea of being destitute; if there be none, and the agent be satisfied of the truth of the plea, the applicant is forwarded to the place where it can be found. In either case, whether the emigrant accept or refuse the work, his claim on the Government is considered as cancelled; if he accept it, he is bound, after that, to find employment for himself; if he refuse it, it is a sufficient proof that he is not destitute. The only instances in which aid is given towards subsistence are, first, when the emigrant vessels arrive at such an hour as to make it impossible immediately to employ the emigrants; or, secondly, when there are women and children whose male relations have died on the voyage, or are incapacitated by sickness; or, thirdly, when from accidental circumstances a considerable body is collected in one place without an immediate demand for their labour there or elsewhere. But in this latter case assistance is given only in the shape of wages below the usual rate for breaking stone, &c. for the roads, which stone is afterwards sold as occasion may offer. When I state that during the last year the amount expended on the latter class in the whole province was only 360*l.*, and in the previous year only 500*l.*, a large portion of which has been since recovered by the sale of the stone, it is evident that the discretion of the Government in this respect has not been abused. Having reference to the public works which will be in progress during the present year, I do not expect that any portion of the fund destined for emigration purposes will require to be appropriated towards the subsistence of emigrants.

Under these circumstances your Lordship will, I trust, feel satisfied that the fears of the Commissioners in regard to the effect of the 7th clause are unfounded; and I beg you to believe that I shall be no less careful than my predecessors, so to use the power vested in my hands, as to fulfil the objects contemplated by the Legislature in the manner most conducive to the interests of the emigrants and the general well-being of the province.

I have, &c.

CANADA.

1. What is the expense of erecting a country dwelling suitable to an agricultural labourer?—From 5*l.* to 15*l.* currency.

2. What is the rent of a town lodging suitable to a mechanic and his family?—From 7*l.* 10*s.* to 12*l.* 10*s.* currency.

3. What funds have been placed at your disposal during the past quarter for the relief of immigrants?—A discretionary power, authorized by the Governor-general, to assist the sick and destitute, and those who are unable to work.

4. Is there any fund in the colony for the relief of the destitute poor?—Yes, the sum of 3,500*l.* currency was voted by the Provincial Legislature last season, to be applied as stated in answer to query No. 3.

5. State the description of labour which is in request in the colony?—The demand for all classes of mechanics and labourers has been good during the past quarter; of the former, blacksmiths, carpenters, coopers and masons have been most required. Securing the harvest occasioned an additional demand for good agricultural hands; reapers readily obtained from 3*s.* to 4*s.*, and in the country, where labourers were scarce, 5*s.* per day. There has also been abundance of employment for unskilled labourers in every section of the province, and more particularly in the neighbourhood of this city and Montreal; wages 2*s.* 6*d.* to 3*s.* per day.

6. Would the rate of immigration of the last quarter satisfy the existing demand for labour?—Not if properly distributed through the agricultural districts.

7. Could it be safely increased with reference to the supplies of food in the colony?—With perfect safety. The exports from this province this year amount to 258,281 barrels flour; 535,885 barrels wheat; 32,158 barrels pork; 4,698 barrels beef; and our markets are abundant and moderate.

8. State any particulars relative to immigration and the demand for labour which you think may be useful?—The emigration to this province for this year has now closed; total number arrived 28,086, being an increase over last season of 5,852; much the largest portion of them have proceeded to settle in the Western division of the province; according to returns received they amount to 19,000, 3,000 of whom may have proceeded to the United States. I should think, on the whole number this season, near 5,000 have left the province for the United States, principally proceeding to their friends. The demand for all classes of labourers and mechanics will in the course of the ensuing month very much decrease, and the present rate of wages decline from 20 to 25 per cent. during the winter months. The improvements about being commenced on the Welland Canal will furnish employment for 2,000 hands during the winter; the work is expected to commence in the course of next month. Should the other public works in contemplation be commenced in spring, additional employment will be found for several thousand hands beyond the ordinary wants of the country.

A. C. Buchanan, Chief Agent.

COPY of a LETTER from J. Stephen, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 6 April 1842.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to you, for any suggestions and observations which you may have to offer, the enclosed copy of a despatch from the Governor-general of British North America, containing the annual reports of the agents for emigration in Canada for 1841.

I am, &c.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Westminster, 7 May 1842.

No. 23.

Sir,

WE have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 6th ultimo, transmitting for our report the copy of a despatch from the Governor-general of British North America, dated the 17th February 1842, containing the annual reports of the agents for emigration in Canada, for 1841.

For Governor-general's Despatch 17 February 1842, vide Paper, Emigration, Canada, presented by Her Majesty's Command, 1842.

We have much pleasure in observing that the Governor-general considers that the result of the emigration during the past year was "in every respect satisfactory." The chief agent at Quebec also remarks "that it has been highly successful."

The number of immigrants is stated to have been 28,086, which is a larger number than had arrived in any of the preceding six years, and shows an increase over the year 1840 of not less than 5,852 persons; and it is to be remarked that the proportion of the emigrants merely passing through the province to the United States has, at the same time, considerably decreased. The number of such persons during the past year is estimated at from 3,000 to 4,000, and the Governor remarks that "there is reason to believe that the loss of even this number has been balanced by the immigration from the United States." It is further to be remarked that the immigrants generally have arrived in a less destitute condition than in former years, and the immigration agent states that "there has been a considerable decrease in the number of those to whom public assistance has been rendered upon their arrival at Quebec." The general character, again, of the emigrants is spoken of in the highest terms by the agents at Quebec and Toronto, both of whom remark that they have not heard of a single instance of improper conduct or crime on the part of any of them. The number who emigrated by parochial aid or assistance from their landlords considerably exceed that in 1840, and amounted to 2,124.

Of the total number of 28,086, it appears that nearly 19,000 have proceeded to Western Canada, but of this the agent in that portion of the province complains, and considers that it would be desirable that a larger proportion should remain in the Eastern division. They are for the most part attracted to the West by the ill-founded expectation of obtaining higher wages the further they advance into the country.

The local agents, however, appear to have been usefully and actively employed in distributing the emigrants over the province, and in directing them to places where their labour was in demand; and it is most satisfactory to find it stated, that employment was procured for all before the winter set in. The charges connected with the service of emigration within the province are stated not to have exceeded 6,000*l.*, of which sum 1,500*l.* will have been paid out of the funds of this country.

With regard to the present year, we observe with much satisfaction that the prospects held out to emigrants are of a most cheering description. The Governor-general anticipates, that the public works, if undertaken upon the contemplated scale, and the local employment which will be provided by the several district councils, will absorb all the emigrants who can be expected; and the chief agent of immigrants states, "that the natural demands of this colony for the absorbing of a large number of emigrants are in the fullest operation, as will appear from the degree of enterprise with which both public and private improvements are advancing in every section of this province."

It seems probable, that even for unskilled labour, of which the supply was last year considered too great, there will this year be considerable demand. It is considered by all parties most desirable that emigrants should always arrive at an early period of the season; and the importance of this is so strongly urged by the Governor, both for the sake of the emigrants and of the colony, that we have taken occasion, upon the publication of a second edition of our pamphlet, to direct the attention of the working classes very particularly to the circumstance.

In connexion with the subject of this letter, we would further beg leave to state, for Lord Stanley's information, that we have examined the ship returns for the past year, the bulk of which were transmitted to us by your letter of the 19th February last. They have been filled up by the immigration agent at Quebec, according to the forms prepared at this office and approved by the Secretary of State.

19th

By these forms, a separate return is made of each ship which has arrived with emigrants. It exhibits the capacity of the ship and other particulars respecting it, and the number and classification of the passengers. We append a list of all the ships which arrived during the past season, of which returns have thus been made, together with a statement in a tabular form of the amount of the tonnage, and the superficies of the decks, and the number of the passengers, arranged in such a manner as to show at one view the operation of the two checks upon the number of the passengers (viz., by tonnage and space) which are imposed by the Passengers' Act. The following table contains a short summary of the number and tonnage of ships, and of the passengers conveyed in them, for each month of the past year.

SUMMARY.

Month.	Number of Ships.	Tonnage.	Number of Passengers.
			Adults.		Children.	TOTAL.
			Male.	Female.
May - - -	78	28,297	4,797	3,349	3,491	11,637
June - - -	32	9,443	1,756	1,510	1,389	4,655
July - - -	30	9,499	2,155	1,726	1,768	5,649
August - - -	30	10,805	1,240	1,061	1,142	3,443
September - - -	16	7,163	407	372	428	1,207
October - - -	2	598	40	23	29	92
TOTAL - - -	188	65,805	10,395	8,041	8,247	26,683

The total number of passengers in the above table is only 26,683, but in Mr. Buchanan's return from Quebec, the total number for the year is 28,086. This difference we suppose arises from a deficiency in the ship returns which have been transmitted to this country; but we would suggest that the circumstance is one to which it might be desirable to direct the attention of the Governor-general. From the remarks by the immigration agent, which accompany these returns, we find that by far the larger portion of these ships are regularly engaged in the trade, and considered fine vessels, and are reported to afford good accommodation to the passengers.

The evils connected with the emigration of the past year were of the usual kind, such as a short supply of provisions where the emigrants found themselves, a loss of provisions from improper stowing, and wasteful mode of using them when the emigrants had the charge of them, and an excess in the number of passengers allowed by law to be taken in each ship. These evils, we hope, will be in great measure prevented by the proposed alterations of the law. We observe indeed with pleasure, that they were of less frequent occurrence last year than in preceding years, and we concur with the Governor in ascribing the circumstance to the increased vigilance of the Government agents.

With respect to the last of the evils which we have just named, viz., the carrying an excess of passengers beyond the number prescribed by law, we have observed, upon a careful examination of the ship returns furnished by the immigration agent, that the offence was committed in several instances, of which in his weekly reports he makes no mention, and in respect of which consequently we are ignorant whether any legal proceedings were instituted against the master.

In his general report, Mr. Buchanan states, that "several vessels" have been fined during the past season for carrying an excess of passengers. In the separate returns furnished by him, he only notices five where the fine had been so inflicted; but it is possible that the law may have been put in force against other vessels which he does not name. It would appear, desirable, however, that this fact should be ascertained. We accordingly beg leave to submit for Lord Stanley's information and for transmission, should his Lordship think proper, to the Governor-general, a list of the remaining vessels, amounting to 25, which appear by the returns transmitted to us to have infringed the Passengers' Act in respect to the numbers which they conveyed to the colony. The immigration agent would thus be enabled to report upon the subject, and should it appear that any of these vessels had not been proceeded against, and further, that in any such case the requisite evidence of the offence could be furnished, the expediency should, we think, then be considered of putting the bond to the Crown in suit in this country against the master or his surety.

CANADA.

We have, &c.

No. 24. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Sir Charles Bagot, 3 June 1842.

May 7.

Sir, Downing-street, 3 June 1842.

IT having been represented to me by the Commissioners of Colonial Lands and Emigration, that on an examination of the returns of the past season, furnished by the agent for emigration at Quebec, certain ships had infringed the Passengers' Act in respect to the number of passengers whom they conveyed, I transmit to you herewith a list of those ships (together with an extract of the report from the commissioners on the subject), in order that you may ascertain whether any of them have escaped being prosecuted in the province, and that you may, in such case, furnish me with the requisite evidence for proceeding against the master, or his surety in this country, if it should be thought expedient to do so.

I have to observe to you, that, according to the ship returns which have been sent home, the total number of passengers who arrived during the past season was only 26,683, whereas, in the first enclosure to Mr. Buchanan's report, the number of emigrants is stated at 28,086. This difference probably arises from a deficiency in the ship returns which have been transmitted to this country; but, nevertheless, I have to direct your attention to the subject with the view of obtaining an explanation.

I have, &c.

No. 25. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Sir Charles Bagot, 16 April 1842.

Sir, Downing-street, 16 April 1842.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith the copy of a letter addressed to the Vice-President of the Board of Trade by the Board of Admiralty, containing an extract of a letter from Captain Boxer, in which he calls attention to the crowded state of the steam-vessels carrying passengers between Quebec and Montreal.

As the Passengers' Bill, which is now under the consideration of the House of Commons, is only intended to regulate the conveyance of persons by sea, it would not be practicable, except at the risk of complicating the measure, to introduce into it provisions for regulating the internal traffic of Canada. If it is desirable that the transit of passengers on the St. Lawrence should be regulated by law, I am of opinion that the Provincial Legislature are best able to estimate the necessity of such interference, as well as the extent to which it should be carried. I have, therefore, only to observe, that while it is desirable that passengers should not be carried in a manner involving risk to life or health, it should not be forgotten that very serious evils may be occasioned by any needless detention at Quebec of the large bodies of people who almost simultaneously arrive there, or by any enhancement of the cost of conveying them into the interior of the country.

I have, &c.

Sir, Whitehall, 5 April 1842.

I AM directed by Mr. William Gladstone to transmit to you, for the information of Lord Stanley, a letter which he has received from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, containing a communication from Captain Boxer, captain of the port at Quebec, in which he calls attention to the crowded state of the steam-vessels carrying emigrants from Quebec to Montreal.

Sir,

Sir, Admiralty, 1 April 1842.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of the Earl of Ripon, the following extract of a letter received from Captain Boxer, captain of the port at Quebec:—

"I beg also to inform you, for his information, that the manner the emigrants are crowded on board the steam-vessels from Quebec to Montreal is dangerous and disgraceful, which ought, in my opinion, to be prevented by the Bill now before Parliament."

COPY of a DESPATCH from the Right Honourable Sir Charles Bagot, G.C.B., to Lord Stanley.

My Lord, Government House, Kingston, 18 March 1842. No. 26.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 3d ultimo, No. 62, explaining the difficulties which prevent the practical operation of the arrangement proposed by Lord John Russell in regard to emigrants, and informing me of the course which, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government have decided to pursue. Despatch from Sir Charles Bagot to Lord Stanley, 18 March 1842.

I shall communicate your Lordship's explanation to the Legislature on their meeting; in the mean time, I do not apprehend any inconvenience from the alteration which it is proposed to make. From the smallness of the benefit which the emigrant was to have received, I was always apprehensive that no effectual inquiry into his fitness could be made by the Emigration Commissioners; and unless the inquiry were effectual, the fact that the emigrant had come out under Government auspices would only have tended to mislead. The grant which it is proposed to take will, with the addition of the proceeds of the tax, and the annual vote for agency, enable us to provide sufficiently during the present year for destitute emigrants, and your Lordship may be assured that I shall use every exertion to confine the assistance from public funds to that class. But as the publication of the preamble of the Emigrant Tax Act, now that it is not to be acted on, might only tend to encourage the persuasion, so general among emigrants that they have a right, under any circumstances, to Government assistance as soon as they reach Canada, and as this persuasion has in previous years been the source of much disappointment, and of many attempts to impose on the Government, I would suggest to your Lordship whether it might not be advisable to abstain from giving greater circulation to the text of the Emigrant Tax Act than is absolutely unavoidable. An abstract of its provisions might be published, which would answer every useful purpose, and avoid the inconvenience to which I refer.

I have, &c.

(signed) Charles Bagot.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 28 April 1842. No. 27.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to you for any suggestions and observations which you may have to offer, the enclosed despatch from the Governor of Canada, recommending, for the reason assigned, that the Act passed by the Provincial Legislature to review the tax on emigrants should not be published in full, but that an abstract only of its provisions should be communicated to the public. COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Westminster, 9 May 1842.

No. 28.
Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 9 May 1842.

Sir,

WE have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 28th ultimo, transmitting for our report a despatch from Sir Charles Bagot, relative to the mode in which it has been proposed by Her Majesty's Government to apply the sum which may be voted by Parliament in aid of emigration to Canada, in so far as it differs from the mode which was contemplated by the Canadian Legislature in the Emigrant Tax Act which was passed in its late Session.

Sir Charles Bagot in this despatch states that he was always apprehensive that the original plan could not have been effectually carried out, and that he sees no reason to anticipate any inconvenience from the alteration which it is now proposed to make in it. He adds that he shall make every exertion to confine any assistance from the public funds to the class of destitute emigrants, and suggests the expediency of not giving general publicity to the Emigrant Tax Act, for fear of raising expectations of benefit in the minds of the poor which cannot be fulfilled, and which may lead to impositions upon the Government.

It is satisfactory to know that every exertion will be made to bestow relief out of the public funds upon no other than the really destitute, for whom alone it is intended. At the same time there is reason to think that, in the practical execution of the task, the greatest difficulty will be experienced. In one of the annual reports from an emigrant agent in Canada recently transmitted, it is stated that among the applicants for relief last year were found persons possessed of sums varying from 10*l.* to 200*l.*, and doubtless there were many cases where the imposition was not detected. It is, in fact, almost inevitable that no sufficient test of destitution can be employed. It is intended that two classes of destitute immigrants should be assisted,—those who arrive in a state of sickness, and those whom it is desirable to forward into the interior of the country, for fear of local congestion at the port of landing; but to neither of these classes could the most convenient test, of work at low wages, be applied. To the persons of the first class work is not suitable, and to fix those of the second class to the spot where they are, by means of employment, is to produce the evil which it is desired to prevent. The endeavours to attain the truth, therefore, must be confined to such personal investigation as each case may admit of. And it must be further remarked, that however difficult it would be at all times to render effectual any inquiry into the circumstances of those who have left their habitual occupation and dwelling-places, and arrived in a distant land, it is of course rendered far more so by the circumstance that a large proportion out of the numerous body of emigrants arrive almost simultaneously, and that their applications for relief have to be decided upon almost at the same moment.

With regard to the expediency of not giving in any way a sanction to the opinion that the Government had made itself answerable for the support of emigrants until they should obtain work from private employers, we entirely concur in the view which has been taken by Sir Charles Bagot. We conclude that it would not be considered that the caution which he has given in regard to not publishing the Emigrant Tax Act of the Canadian Legislature should extend to prevent its being laid before Parliament; but we shall carefully abstain from disseminating amongst the poorer classes any erroneous impressions as to the mode in which the money to be raised under its provisions will be applied. Upon every occasion, also, we shall endeavour to make it known that the administration of any funds which may exist for the relief of poor emigrants will depend entirely upon the discretion of the Governor-general, and that it has never been intended to confer a positive right upon any class or description of persons.

We cannot leave this point without expressing the regret with which we have seen to how great an extent the poorer persons who went from Scotland last year appear to have imbibed the belief that their emigration was specially invited by the colonial authorities, and that the Government pledged itself to assist them on their arrival. This impression they are reported to have asserted that they derived from positive assurances of public aid. We need scarcely say that this general error cannot have been derived from any officer under our orders, as we are not in any any way engaged in the collection of emigrants for Canada. But we enclose extracts from the recently received reports of various immigration agents in the province, showing the general prevalence of false hopes last year amongst the humbler emigrants from Scotland.

We have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 28.

EXTRACT from the Annual Report of Mr. Buchanan, the Chief Agent for Immigration at Quebec, dated 31 December 1841. Encl. in No. 28.

THEY all (the Scotch emigrants) appear to have left their homes, under the impression that they would be supported and forwarded to any section of the province they wished to settle in at Government expense, and that if they could only reach this part, all their wants would be provided for. I had the greatest difficulty in making them understand, that all the Government would undertake to do for them would be to put them in the way of obtaining employment, which I offered to them in this neighbourhood, and that they must depend upon their own industry for support.

* * * * * *

By a report received from the emigrant agent in that city (Toronto), forwarded to me by Mr. Hawke, it appears that the Scotch weavers are the only immigrants this season who appear to have been unsuccessful.

EXTRACT from Mr. Buchanan's Weekly Return, for the Week ending June 19.

THESE people (Paisley emigrants,) all appear to have emigrated with the impression, that Government would assist them to their destination.

EXTRACT from Mr. Buchanan's Weekly Return, for the Week ending August 7.

IT is much to be regretted that exaggerated accounts have been circulated among (more particularly the Scotch) emigrants this season. They all land with the idea that they are to be forwarded at Government expense to whatever section of the province they may fix on, and it is with great difficulty I can persuade them that such is not the case.

EXTRACT from the Report of Mr. Hawke, Chief Agent for the Western Division, dated Kingston, August 3d, 1841.

THEY say that they were induced by Government to emigrate, and as they have not been successful, they complain that the Government has neglected them; so far is this, however, from being the case, that to my knowledge they have received more assistance than is usually given to persons of this class. Dr. Bradley writes, "I have procured employment for all the emigrants except those who are old, infirm, or otherwise useless to the farmer. The Scotch weavers and wool-carders are very badly off, as they can neither read nor plough: they are very troublesome, daily bringing me letters from their clergy, and insisting upon support until employment be procured for them; many of them state, that Government encouraged them to come out, and are now letting them starve; I endeavour to persuade them that the Government did not give them any encouragement to emigrate."

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord John Russell.

Fredericton, New Brunswick,
29 May 1841.

My Lord,

IT was my intention by the present packet to have addressed your Lordship on the subject of emigration, but as the information I wish to communicate is incomplete, and as the mail will be despatched to-day, I propose to reserve my communications on this important subject for the next packet.

In the meanwhile I transmit to your Lordship the reports which have been made to me by the emigration agent at St. John's, of the vessels which have arrived with emigrants at that port, the nine detailed returns not having yet been prepared; also, reports of the formation of emigrant societies at Fredericton and St. John, in pursuance of my recommendation that such societies should be formed in the several counties.

The surveyor-general has also, by my desire, proceeded to have surveyed and laid out several locations where settlements may be advantageously formed, adopting the mode of survey recommended by Captain Dawson, in the able report communicated with your Lordship's Circular Despatch of the 18th March.

I transmit the answers which have been compiled from the reports from the several counties to the inquiries of the Land and Emigration Commissions, called for in your Lordship's Circular Despatch of the 11th March, and I will only add, that the measures which are in progress will I hope be the means of effecting the settlement of the province under circumstances which will greatly augment its strength and resources, and induce those emigrants to remain in it who have hitherto been accustomed to transfer their industry to the United States.

I have, &c.

Encl. in No. 1. RULES of the YORK COUNTY EMIGRANT SOCIETY originally established in 1819, under the title of the "Fredericton Emigrant Society," and reorganized under its new title on the 25th day of May 1841.

I. THAT a society be formed under the title of the York County Emigrant Society, for the purpose of affording employment, information, and assistance to emigrants in the county of York, newly arrived in the province.

II. That the society be in connexion and correspondence with every similar society already existing, or that may be formed within the province.

III. That the officers of the society shall consist of a president, two vice-presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and 12 other members, all to be annually elected, and to continue in office until others are elected to supply their places, the whole when so elected to compose and be called the Managing Committee, to whose management and control the business of the society, and the care, disposal, and appropriation of the funds is committed during their continuance in office, subject to the rules and such resolutions as may from time to time be made and passed at the annual or at any general meeting of the members of the society; the said committee to have power in their own body to fill up any vacancies therein until the then next general meeting.

IV. That any five members of the committee (the president or a vice-president being one) shall constitute a Board for the despatch of business.

V. That a subscription of 5 s. at the least, payable annually, or 5 l. paid in advance, shall constitute a permanent member, the first payment of the annual subscription to be made at the the time of subscribing, and the others on or before the first Tuesday in January in every year, to the treasurer.

VI. That all donations of every kind, however small, whether in money, fuel, clothing, or provisions, will be thankfully received, and a fair account kept thereof.

VII. That an office be opened, to be called the Emigrant's Office, where a register will be kept of the names and circumstances of applicants, who will there be furnished with advice, information, and assistance as may be required, consistently with the instructions of the managing committee.

VIII. That for this purpose, the secretary be required to attend at the office daily, or on such days as the committee shall think necessary, and that he keep a register, in which shall be entered the names and circumstances of every emigrant applying for employ, for land, or for assistance of any kind, and the number in family, both males and females, and the places where to be found; and also a register of the names and places of residence of all persons sending information to the office of their being ready to furnish employ, and to what extent, to emigrants, and in what capacity.

IX. That the committee of management have a discretionary power of appropriating such an amount of the funds of the society as they may from time to time deem requisite, (consistent with the rules and objects of the society,) as well in giving temporary relief to sick, indigent, or disabled emigrants in the county, as also in aiding and assisting emigrants in their transport to distant parts of the county for the purpose of obtaining employment, or for the settling upon lands; provided always, that no such relief or assistance be granted out of the funds of this society to any but emigrants who have not been in the province more than one year preceding such application for assistance.

X. That all applications made to any member of the society, be referred by ticket to the secretary.

XI. That it be the duty of the committee of management to make such necessary arrangements with the secretary as their means will admit of, for the reception of emigrants at Fredericton, and getting them forwarded to different parts of the county, where employment may be obtained for them, or where lands are open for settlement; and to furnish the secretary with the necessary instructions for his guidance in all cases that do not require to be first submitted to the consideration of the committee.

XII. That it be the duty of the secretary to attend strictly to the general and all other instructions of the committee of management; and that he keep a book to be called the Minute Book of the Committee of Management, in which he shall enter the proceedings of the committee at every meeting thereof; and shall at all meetings of the said committee submit a statement of his proceedings since the then last preceding meeting, and also his books of registry for inspection.

XIII. That in order to assist the committee in finding employment for those who may have recourse to this society, the inhabitants of Fredericton and the county generally be requested, by public notice in the Royal Gazette, to make application to the society at the office, for such mechanics, labourers, and servants as they may require; and to the same end, letters be written by the secretary in the name of the society to the magistrates, or any other respectable persons in each parish in the county, enclosing a copy of the rules, and requesting similar application, and also general information as to the numbers they can employ, and the means they possess of furthering the objects of the society, and soliciting their aid in procuring subscriptions in their respective parishes towards the funds, and inducing the inhabitants generally to become members thereof, so as to enable the committee to extend its benefits widely through the county.

XIV. That it be the duty of the secretary to furnish to emigrants applying at the office, all information in his power relative to the means of their procuring land for settlement, assistance, or employment for themselves or families; and in all cases where he may require further instructions from the committee before the then next monthly meeting, it shall be the duty of the president, or (in his absence) of one of the vice-presidents, to call a special meeting of the committee, on being applied to by the secretary for that purpose, and in such case it shall not be necessary to send notice to such members of the committee who may be absent from the county at the time, provided the members so absent shall not exceed five.

XV. That there be a meeting of the committee on the first Monday of every month, at half-past three o'clock P. M., at such place in Fredericton as the committee may themselves determine on, besides such special meetings as may be called at the request of the secretary, according to the provisions of the 14th rule. And a general yearly meeting of the subscribers on the first Tuesday in January, at two o'clock P. M., at the County Court House in Fredericton, at which general meeting a report of the state of the society shall be submitted by the secretary, having first passed the committee; and also, at such annual general meeting, the officers for the ensuing year shall be elected, and any alterations in, or additions to the rules now established, may then be made, that the majority of the members present may deem requisite.

XVI. That it shall be the duty of the treasurer of the society to receive all subscriptions, grants, donations, and other pecuniary contributions to the funds of the society, and to make all such payments and advances thereout as the committee of management may from time to time direct; and that he shall keep a true and correct list of the names of all members paying their subscriptions or making donations to the society, with the respective amounts thereof; and shall keep a correct book of account, in which shall be entered all moneys received and paid by him on account of the society, which shall be balanced at the end of every month, and submitted to the inspection of the committee at every monthly meeting.

XVII. That the committee of management are empowered to call a special general meeting of the members of the society as often as circumstances may require, but such special general meetings shall have no power to elect officers except to fill vacancies occurring subsequent to the preceding annual meeting; or to make any alterations in the rules, but may by a majority of votes determine any other matter relating to the business of the society that the committee of management may submit to the consideration of the members then present.

NOTICE TO EMIGRANTS.

ON arrival at this port emigrants will observe that there is a Government agent resident here, who will visit the vessels on board of which they may arrive, as soon as they are reported by the medical officer, and will render them advice and assistance in procuring lands or employment in their various capacities.

At the Emigrant Office attendance is given daily, where plans of Crown lands and private farms are kept for the inspection and information of emigrants who may be desirous of becoming settlers or purchasers; also directions to those for farm or household work.

Emigrants should on no account remain in town idle after arrival, as the expense of living at taverns is very great; nor ought they, if possessed of any British money in gold or silver, to exchange it until truly made acquainted with its full current value.

Steam-boats sail every morning at seven o'clock from Indian Town for Fredericton, where they arrive in the course of the day, and will land passengers at any place on the river St. John they may desire. They also ply by night. Conveyances are also found to the flourishing agricultural districts of Prince William, Woodstock, Kent, and the adjacent country in the counties of York and Carleton.

To the fertile district of Sussex Vale, in King's County, there are excellent roads, with water conveyances to Kingston, Hampton, Bellisle, and Washademoac, in Queen's, &c., where there is much good land for settlement; also in Charlotte County to the west; and in Kent, Northumberland, Gloucester, and Restigouche, to the east, whose principal places are St. Andrew's, St. Stephen's, St. George, Richibucto, and Shediac, Miramichi, (that is Newcastle and Chatham,) Bathurst, and Dalhousie.

The

NEW BRUNSWICK.

The vicinities of Gagetown, Grand Lake, and Oromocto, in the counties of Queen's and Sunbury, offer fine fields for the labour of the willing workman; while Westmoreland and its districts of Hopewell, Dorchester, Sackville, &c., present one of the richest countries for the agricultural pursuits of emigrants; and between Sackville and Amherst, Nova Scotia, emigrant labour is in demand for draining, road-work, domestic, and other purposes; and those intending to prosecute fishing business are informed that there are numerous advantageous stations along these coasts, and in the Bay of Fundy, on the shores of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, around Grand Manan, Campo Bello, &c., where there are abundant supplies of fish, and a ready and profitable market for them here.

Artisans, mechanics, and labourers of sober and industrious habits, need fear no want of employment in almost every part of the province, and they are cautioned not to let the persuasion of the loiterers, whom they will meet about the streets on their arrival, lead them astray with the idea that they will not get employment here; the contrary is the case, but those persons make it a practice to alarm the new comers, that they themselves may enjoy all the work at a high rate of wages; therefore, new comers, listen not to them.

The Crown lands here are sold by Government at the lowest possible prices, and on liberal terms of payment; and to the honest man, who is desirous of advancing his own interest and the welfare of his family, no foreign land affords a fairer prospect for their attainment than New Brunswick. And in addition to the public lands for sale, there is an association called the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Land Company, who have extensive possessions near the seat of government, and are ready to dispose of them in portions to suit purchasers from the United Kingdom. The lots are of various extent, having on many of them log-houses, and in their vicinity saw, grist, and other mills, with other desirable appurtenances.

The emigrant agent will pay particular attention to the certificates of character brought by emigrants in quest of labour and employment, and recommend them accordingly.

Those who settle in the province and are desirous of bringing out their families from Great Britain and Ireland, will receive every aid by applying to the agent, who will, upon their arrival here, direct them how to proceed to join their friends in the interor, and point out the most eligible channels for pecuniary remittances, or other communication to any part of this province, or Great Britain, Ireland, and Wales.

A. Wedderburn,
Her Majesty's Government Agent for Emigrants,
New Brunswick.

These notices are given to the medical officer at Partridge Island, and to pilots, to be put on board of vessels, before Mr. W. can be allowed, from quarantine laws or otherwise, to go on board.

COPY of the RESOLUTIONS passed at the Meeting of the Emigration Society.

1st. RESOLVED unanimously, That this meeting cordially respond to the call of his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor upon the several counties of this province as to the great advantage that will be derived from forming emigrant societies, for the purpose of facilitating the settlement of the numerous emigrants arrived and expected to arrive during the year.

2d. Resolved unanimously, That in accordance with the foregoing resolution, an association be forthwith formed, whose object shall be to devise the best means of affording early employment on their arrival; to assist in forwarding them to other parts of the province where labour may be obtained, and by every other means in its power to insure their settlement within it.

3d. Resolved unanimously, That a subscription-list be immediately opened, and that so soon as the sum required by the Act shall be subscribed, that application be made for the provincial grant of the last session towards this important object.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord John Russell.

Fredericton, New Brunswick,
9 June 1841.

My Lord,

Referring to my Despatch (No. 12), dated 29th of May, I enclose to your Lordship a further return which I have received from the emigration agent at St. John's, of the arrival of eight vessels with 998 emigrants at that port, from Ireland, and of the prevalence of typhus fever amongst them.

A vessel named the Montreal Packet had arrived at St. John's with emigrants on board, who complained that they had been embarked under an engagement to be taken to New York; they were landed, but have since, with a few exceptions, re-embarked for their destination.

The correspondence respecting those who have remained will hereafter be forwarded.

I enclose to your Lordship printed copies of the amended answers to the queries proposed by the Land and Emigration Commissioners, and which I have caused to be published for the information of persons desirous of settling in this province, it being reported that a great number of British emigrants now in the United States who are unable to obtain employment, are disposed to settle in the British colonies.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2, in No. 3.

BY COMMAND.

THE following information has been compiled from the answers received from the several counties in New Brunswick to questions proposed by the Commissioners of Colonial Land Emigration in London.

Emigration societies having since been formed at Fredericton and St. John, and others being in progress of formation throughout the province, it has been considered that the publication of these details would assist their views, by diffusing authentic information for the guidance of persons who may be desirous of emigrating from Europe. It being in contemplation to promote the formation of new settlements in favourable situations, surveys of extensive tracts of land, carefully selected, are in progress, of which due notice will be given; and it is hoped that persons possessing capital will be thus encouraged to unite their resources in joint undertakings, by which they would derive the advantage of mutual support and co-operation, and be able, at an early period, to benefit from the public contributions in aid of the establishment of schools and bye-roads.

Besides the ready employment which offers to labouring emigrants on their first arrival, both in town and country, the public works in progress will constitute a further resource to them, until possessed of the means of effecting a settlement on land. These works consist in the opening and improving of roads and the construction of bridges, for which large appropriations have been made.

The salubrity of the climate of New Brunswick, situated between the latitudes of 44° and 48° north, is well established, as well as its congeniality to the northern European. Among its natural advantages may be enumerated the valuable supply of timber in its forests, and the existence of extensive formations of coal, iron, and other minerals.

The navigation of the rivers and their tributaries in summer, the formation of tracks on them during winter, and the number of good roads that have been constructed throughout the province, afford great facilities of internal communication, and which will be further improved.

As it is desirable that the information published from time to time should comprehend all that would be useful as a guide to the European emigrant, the committees of the various local associations are recommended to correspond on these subjects with the committee of the Emigration Society in Fredericton, communicating such further details as may appear to them to be important.

Fredericton, New Brunswick,
1 June 1841.

For Information of EMIGRANTS with CAPITAL intending to settle on Land.

Question 1. WHAT is the smallest quantity of land which can be bought of the Government in the colony?—Answer. Fifty acres; smaller tracts may be purchased, but the cost of such would be the same as for 50 acres, the expense of the grant to Government being alike in both cases.

2. What is the up-set price, and, if this varies, what is the average?—Generally 3 s. currency (2 s. 8 d. sterling), but varies according to situation, &c.

3. What is the average price actually fetched by ordinary country lands?—From 5 s. to 10 s. currency (4 s. 6 d. to 9 s. sterling) for uncleared land near settlements, according to situation, value, &c.

4. What is the average price of land partially cleared and fenced?—This also depends upon situation and quality, varying from 10 s. to 10 l. currency (9 s. to 9 l. sterling), per acre.

5. Is it easy, and not expensive, to ascertain the validity of titles to private lands?—Very easy, and not expensive, as there are register-offices in every county.

6. What is the cost per acre of clearing waste lands ready for the drag or harrow?—Average 3 l. to 4 l. currency (2 l. 14 s. to 3 l. 12 s. sterling) for cutting and clearing off the trees, leaving the stumps standing.

7. What kind of lands cost most in clearing?—Swampy lands.

8. Can a capitalist, on arrival, immediately see, by list and charts in the office of the Crown Land Commissioner, or the Surveyor-general, what lands already surveyed are open to sale?—Yes; on application at the Crown Land-office in Fredericton.

9. If the lands applied for be not surveyed, can they be occupied first, and surveyed after?—No; but reserved lands will be prepared for emigrants.

10. Will the survey be commenced as soon as the land is applied for?—Immediately on application.

11. How long after having chosen a lot amongst lands already surveyed is a purchaser liable to be detained before he can effect his purchase, and obtain possession of the land?—From a week to a month. Measures are in progress to obviate this delay to the purchaser by surveying and laying out locations in favourable situations.

12. Are any rights in the land reserved to the Crown?—Coal and precious metals.

13. Are there established charges upon the land?—None, except the charges for surveying the land.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

14. Should the settler take out all his property in money, or would it be better to invest as much as he can spare in farming stock, &c. before leaving this country?—Either British gold and silver, or Spanish dollars. Farming stock can be purchased in the province.

15. Is the great proportion of cleared land under tillage?—Not easy to be determined; in many situations the greater proportion is appropriated to the growing of hay.

16. Are there parts in which grazing is chiefly used; and, if so, name the districts, and the advantages for that pursuit?—None where grazing is exclusively pursued; after the hay harvest the cattle are turned upon the meadow lands.

17. What are the comparative gains of grazing and tillage?—Cannot be stated, no comparison having been made.

18. What is the usual mode of letting; and, if by leases, state the conditions, and for what terms of years?—By lease for short terms, from three to five years; sometimes for money rent, but generally upon shares of half the produce.

19. What is the rate of profit on farming operations generally?—No settled rate of profit; farmers who perform the labour by their own families obtain a liberal profit, but if they hire labour the profit is small.

20. Are failures of crops common?—Not more common than in other countries.

21. What is the rate of interest for money lent on mortgage?—Six per cent. is the legal interest.

22. What is the expense of erecting a suitable house for a small farmer, and also of a barn, and stables for three horses?—A comfortable frame-house from 150 l. to 200 l. currency (135 l. to 180 l. sterling); a frame-barn, from 30 l. to 50 l. currency (27 l. to 45 l. sterling).

23. What is the usual rates of money wages to labourers by the year, and by the month, or by the day?—Average about 24 l. currency (21 l. 12 s. sterling) per annum; 40 s. currency (36 s. sterling) per month, with board. Day-labourers, 3 s. currency (2 s. 8 d. sterling) per day, without board; but in harvest, 4 s. currency (3 s. 7 d. sterling).

24. Are there any laws peculiar to the colony, regulating contracts between masters and servants?—None peculiar; similar to the laws of England.

25. What is the ordinary price of articles named in the annexed table?—See table annexed.

26. Are there places of education for the children of the middle classes?—There are numerous elementary schools in every parish, and also a grammar-school in each county, towards the support of which the Legislature contribute liberally; and there is also a well-endowed college at Fredericton, where a liberal education may be obtained at moderate expense.

27. What is the cost of the passage to any of the ports in New Brunswick?—Saint John, New Brunswick, Miramichi, and St. Andrew's, are ports to which considerable numbers of emigrants annually resort, there being great facilities from the number of vessels returning to the province, which are employed in the export of timber to Europe. Average cost of the passage, 3 l. to 6 l. currency (2 l. 14 s. to 5 l. sterling). Many emigrants to the United States come out in ships bound to St. John and St. Andrew's; and it may be hoped that when the advantages of a settlement in this province are more generally known and appreciated, that many of them will be encouraged to remain.

28. Is it desirable to take out furniture, clothes (beyond those of immediate use), ironware, and saddlery of all kinds?—Only clothes and bedding; the other articles can be easily obtained in the province.

For the INFORMATION of EMIGRANTS of the Labouring Classes.

Question 1. Is it desirable for agricultural labourers to take with them any implements, either for their ordinary occupation, or for clearing land; and if so, what are they?—Answer. Not desirable, as the necessary implements can be readily procured in the province.

2. Is it desirable for artizans to take with them the tools of their trade?—Desirable, but not absolutely necessary.

3. Should bedding be taken out from England, exclusive of what is necessary for the voyage?—A moderate quantity, especially should the emigrant leave home late in the season.

4. Should cooking utensils and crockery be taken out?—Not unless required for the voyage.

5. Should warm clothing be provided, or could it be procured more cheaply in the province?—It had better be provided, as it cannot be procured so cheaply in the province.

6. Is there any kind of constitution to which the climate may be considered peculiarly hurtful or unsuitable?—None, excepting to persons who have a tendency to pulmonary consumption.

7. What class of country labourers is most in demand?—Agricultural labourers.

8. Do the wives and children of agricultural labourers readily find employment?—They do, especially in seed-time, and harvest; but it is not generally the practice to employ them in field work.

9. What kinds of mechanics and artizans are most in request?—There is an ample demand and good wages for almost every kind; but perhaps house carpenters, masons, bricklayers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, and tailors, are most in request, and ship-builders at the sea-ports.

10. What is the best time of year for labourers to arrive at New Brunswick?—The latter part of April, and beginning of May.

11. Are domestic servants much in demand, and what are their wages?—Much in demand; wages for men, 35 s. to 45 s. currency (31 s. 6 d. to 40 s. 6 d. sterling), per month; women, 15 s. to 20 s. currency (13 s. 6 d. to 18 s. sterling), with board, &c.

12. Is there a capitation tax on emigrants, and what is the amount of it?—There is a tax upon the masters of vessels of 5 s. currency (4 s. 6 d. sterling) for each adult, when the ship is sanctioned to carry out emigrants by Her Majesty's Government, and 10 s. currency (9 s. sterling) when not; two children under 14, or three under seven, or one under the age of 12 months, with its mother, being classed as one adult.—(Vide Provincial Act, N. B. 2 Will. 4, c. 36.)—This is probably included in the passage money paid by the emigrants.

13. In what shape, and under what circumstances, is relief afforded to emigrants out of the proceeds of this tax?—It is applied by legislative grants towards relieving the destitute and diseased, and assisting them to reach their places of destination within the province.—(Vide Will, 4, c. 36.)

14. Has every emigrant to go to the quarantine station whether there has been infectious disease on board during the passage or not; if so, how long is he detained there, and at whose cost is he maintained?—The vessel on its arrival is detained at the station about 48 hours for inspection, and when no infectious disease appears, is then permitted to enter, and the emigrant to land.

15. When the emigrant lands from his voyage, does the Government agent meet him and give him advice as to his future proceedings, and inform him where he is likely to obtain employment?—He can obtain the information he requires on application at the office of the emigrant agent, and also from the committees of emigrant societies.

16. At what places are these Government agents, and what are their names?—Alexander Wedderburn, at St. John, and Edmund Ward, assistant, at Fredericton; others will be appointed,

17. State the length and cost of the journey, noting the difference for children, from the usual port of disembarkation to where the bulk of the emigrants proceed; return the names of the chief intermediate stations, the time consumed in going from one to the other, and in making the whole journey; the means of conveyance, distinguishing each change from river to canal, from steam-boat to barge, or from water carriage to cart or stage-coach; and the expense, pointing out the cases in which maintenance is included in the fare, or has to be paid for by the emigrant, and estimating the charges of lodging and subsistence at those places where the travellers have to stop for a night, so that the sum total may exhibit the entire cost of the whole journey?—The expense of a journey from any of the sea-port towns in New Brunswick to the neighbouring settlement districts, cannot exceed 20 s. or 30 s. currency (18 s. to 27 s. sterling) for one individual, and even should he go first to the seat of government, Fredericton, to select land, and then to the situation chosen, the actual travelling expense would not exceed from 2 l. to 5 l. currency (1 l. 16 s. to 4 l. 10 s. sterling); many, however, get immediate employment in the sea-port towns, and very many—some from having friends there, others in the hope of getting higher wages—go to the United States, which they can readily do at a trifling expense by sea. It is to be regretted, that emigrants on their arrival, demand the highest wages, though the generality of them are completely ignorant of the labour of the country, and are thereby often kept out of employment. This may be attributed to the inducement of high wages on their arrival held out to them by ship captains, &c., to get the passage money, and by false friends in the colony, who are desirous of keeping up the rate of wages, and who having became acquainted with the work required, thus obtain a monopoly.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

18. When he leaves water carriage, as, for example, in Canada, the great line of the St. Lawrence, the Rideau, and the Lakes, what means are there for the transport of himself and his family to the place where his labour is required?—New Brunswick is intersected by numerous rivers and rapidly improving roads, by which the settler can with facility transport himself and family to any part of the interior of the province.

19. Is it customary to pay money-wages? State the average wages of mechanics and labourers named in the annexed table (No. 1.)?—Generally speaking it is, but in some parts of the colony a proportion is paid in clothing and provisions, &c., a practice which it is desirable to discourage.

20. When the public works are in progress, are the wages generally at a higher or lower rate than those paid by farmers?—Generally higher, as it increases the demand for labour.

21. If the public works are at a distance from the towns, does the Government provide lodging for the labourers?—None have been undertaken of any note in this province at any considerable distance.

22. What is the usual period of hiring for farm labourers?—Frequently by the year, but generally by the month.

23. To what extent do the wages of labourers vary in summer and in winter?—About 5*s.* currency (4*s.* 6*d.* sterling) per month less in winter, except in the lumbering districts, or those in which the labourers are employed in felling timber.

24. What are the usual wages by week or month to farm labourers during harvest?—Three shillings currency (2*s.* 8*d.* sterling) per day, if fed, or 4*s.* currency (3*s.* 7*d.* sterling) if not, and from 2*l.* 10*s.* to 3*l.* currency (2*l.* 5*s.* to 2*l.* 14*s.* sterling) per month, with board, lodging, &c.

25. State the average retail prices, in summer and winter, of the articles named in the annexed table (No. 2.)?—Vide table annexed (No. 2.)

26. Does the price of provisions increase much in the settlements which are distant from the towns?—In proportion to the distance from the town, and the land carriage.

27. Is beer the drink of the common labourer; and, if so, can it be procured all the year, and at what price?—It is not used in the country districts, but may be obtained in the towns, price from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* currency (1*s.* 4*d.* to 1*s.* 9*d.* sterling) per gallon. The labourers generally prefer West India rum. There are temperance societies in the province.

28. Will land be granted by the employers of labour on which to erect a dwelling, and what extent of garden allotment is usually added?—It will, if required, with ample extent of garden, but labourers generally board with the farmer; those with families (except in towns) readily get land of their own on which to build.

29. What is the expense of erecting a log hut?—A very comfortable one from 15*l.* to 20*l.* currency, 13*l.* 10*s.* to 18*l.* sterling; but much less when the work is chiefly performed by the emigrant himself.

30. Does the log hut afford sufficient protection against the weather in all seasons?—When properly built it is extremely warm and comfortable.

31. Should locks, hinges, bolts, latches, &c. be taken out from England?—Quite unnecessary.

32. Is there a clergyman in each of the settled districts?—Many of the settled districts are without clergymen, but almost all are occasionally visited either by clergymen or dissenting ministers.

33. Are there means of education in the rural districts?—Yes; several elementary schools in each parish, supported by local contributions, aided by grants from the Legislature.

34. Are there any savings banks; and, if so, what interest on deposits is allowed?—There are two savings banks; one at St. John, N. B., and another at Fredericton; interest 5*l.* per cent., the deposits invested in public securities.

35. Are there any hospitals or infirmaries? —There are alms and workhouses for the poor in the counties of St. John, York, St. Andrew's, and Northumberland; and overseers of the poor in every town and parish; also a penitentiary and lunatic asylum at St. John; marine hospitals for the reception of sailors, and establishments of boards of health at the chief sea-ports.

36. Are there any benefit societies?—None at present, but the national ones of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick, which expressly afford relief to emigrant settlers.

37. Is there any fund for the relief of the destitute?—There is a rate raised in each parish for relief of the poor, and a fund derived from the payment of 5*s.* currency (4*s.* 6*d.* sterling) on each emigrant on arriving, to be applied to relieve them and assist them in removing to their locations; there are also funds raised with these objects by the several emigration societies which are formed and forming, assisted by legislative grants.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke, to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 14 June 1841.

WITH reference to my despatch (No. 18), dated 9th June, I have the honour to enclose to your Lordship a copy of a report which I have just received from the emigrant agent at St. John's relative to the conduct of the master of the Montreal Packet, in bringing to St. John's a number of emigrants from Ireland, who were taken on board under engagement to convey them to New York.

I have reason to believe that the practice of bringing emigrants to St. John's, to avoid the liabilities to which masters of vessels are subject in taking them to New York, has not been unfrequent. The vessel not having entered the port, and the emigrants having proceeded to their destination, it has not been practicable to obtain redress for the complaints in the courts of this province.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 4.

Government Emigrant Office,
Sir, St. John, New Brunswick, 9 May 1841.

I HAVE the honour in reply to your letter of yesterday's date, to acquaint you, for the information of his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor, with such particulars relative to the derelict case of the Montreal Packet, John Stewart, master, as have been developed by deposition and other statements of the emigrants on board.

It appears that the said barque, Montreal Packet, was lying in Dublin, and in March last was publicly advertised as ready to receive on board and carry to New York, persons desirous to emigrate to America, in consequence of which about 186 souls engaged passages, embarked and sailed for (as the passengers believed) that destination on the 27th April, the vessel being chartered from a Mr. Carson, her owner, who is now in St. John; by one James Moiley, of Dublin. The ordinary passage charged and paid, it appears varied from 3 l. 10 s. to 4 l. sterling, with additional 4 s. 6 d. sterling as a doctor's fee, although no such person was at any time on board. The vessel furnished the fuel and water, that being of an offensive kind, issued in insufficient quantities, and said to have been long on board the vessel.

In the cabin, about nine sovereigns was the passage-money; the passengers to be found in ship's fare, one girl paid nine sovereigns, and three more (her all) were extracted from her at sea for supplies; another female paid 18 sovereigns for her own and passage of two young children, and a third 12 sovereigns for self and child. They, like the forward passengers, appealed for relief, and to be admitted to the poor-house here, rather than be exposed to the master's treatment on board. Their prayer was immediately complied with. The accompanying original notarial affidavit of one of the passengers, is only a recital of the account given by the whole; and from a variety of collateral circumstances, too much reason is afforded to vindicate the belief, that it was not in sincerity meant from the beginning that the vessel should go to New York. By coming here direct, they evaded payment of the heavy New York head-money; viz. five dollars, or 25 s. currency for each person, while the 4 s. 6 d. sterling would pay the provincial emigrant single duty here; and for this purpose it may be inferred that the fictitious doctor's fee was imposed upon the emigrants.

The ship, too, about 500 tons register, would save time, pilotage, and heavy port charges, and by being here and getting rid of the emigrants, would be ready at once to load her cargo of timber. The owner arrived here about a week ago, and finding determined proceedings on foot for the protection of the emigrants, sent her off on Saturday last for New York. A judge's warrant against the master could not be obtained here, as he was not the contracting party for the passages, but Moiley or Mylie, who resides in Dublin. The vessel also (against which, however, from the insufficiency of the Imperial Passenger Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 53,) remained beyond the authority of any court here, being at anchor on the high seas, about three miles south-east of Partridge Island. The provisions issued to the emigrants on board, and relief afforded through the intervention of his worship the mayor, and the emigration committee, to those on shore, amount to 36 l. 1 s. 9 d. currency, a claim for which will be made on Mr. Carson, the owner. I beg to annex a list of prices charged by the master at sea to the passengers for any provisions that he sold them.

I have, &c.

In the SUPREME COURT.

John Kelly, lately of Dublin, in Ireland, but at present being in the city of St. John's, in the province of New Brunswick, victualler, maketh oath, and saith, that the barque called the Montreal Packet, belonging to Dublin in Ireland aforesaid, in the month of March last, then lying at Dublin, was publicly advertised as being ready to receive passengers on board, to be carried to New York in the United States of America; that John Stewart is the master of the said ship; that in consequence of such advertisement this deponent, with a number of other persons emigrating to America, did engage with James Moiley, at

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Dublin aforesaid, the agent for the said ship, for passage on board the said ship from Dublin to New York; and this deponent paid to the said Morley 3 l. 10 s. sterling, for passage money, and 4 s. 6 d. sterling, which he was required to pay for hospital fees; that the said ship was cleared out at Dublin for New York, and on the 27th day of March last she sailed from Dublin, having on board the said John Stuart, as master, and more than 180 passengers, including this deponent, all bound for New York; that during the voyage, and about a fortnight ago, one of the crew intimated that the ship was being steered out of her course, and, on being asked the reason, he answered, that the reason would be known in a day or two. From statements, about this time, made by several of the crew, this deponent and the other passengers began to fear that they were to be carried to St. John's, and that it was a scheme preconcerted between the agents and owners of the ship before she left Dublin; and deponent was confirmed in this opinion, by discovering that the ship was being navigated in an indirect course, and he verily believed this to have been done for the purpose of wilfully prolonging the voyage, and of giving the said master a pretence of putting into Saint John's for the reason which he would falsely allege, of being short of provisions; and deponent saith, that about 10 days ago the said master examined the stores and provisions in possession of the passengers, and declared that they were then near to New York, and that three days' provisions would be amply sufficient to enable them to arrive there; and deponent saith, that for the last three weeks many of the passengers having consumed their own provisions, were obliged to purchase other food from the master at enormous prices; that on Monday last the said master stated to the passengers that they were near to Boston, and proposed to land the passengers at that place, as being nearer than New York; at this time many of them having given to the said master all their money for provisions, and being almost in a state of starvation, consented to be landed at Boston; that the master then had, and still has in his possession on board abundance of provisions, but he refused to furnish it without money, and to those who had money he only gave it on terms of the greatest extortion; that on Tuesday last we saw a lighthouse, and the master stated that it was 20 or 30 miles distant from Boston; and that after passing three or four more lights they would arrive there. And deponent saith, that on Wednesday last they discovered, to their great amazement, that they had arrived off the harbour of St. John's; and that the light above mentioned was in the Bay of Fundy. On the same day a pilot came on board, and immediately the said master inquired of him if Mr. Carson had arrived in St. John's. And deponent saith, that Mr. Carson is one of the owners of the ship, and this inquiry addressed to the pilot, confirmed deponent in the belief that it had been previously planned that the ship should go to St. John's. And deponent further saith, that the said master, in violation of his agreement with him, and expressly against deponent's will, and without any necessity arising from want of provisions or other cause, has brought deponent to St. John's, with the rest of the passengers, instead of taking them to New York; that frequently during the voyage he behaved with the greatest cruelty. And deponent saith, that in consequence of this breach of agreement he has sustained very serious damage; that the actual expense in money incurred, and which he will be obliged to incur, in consequence of the illegal conduct of the said John Stuart, as related above, calculating the expense of getting to New York, will amount, at least, to the sum of 10 l., besides the disappointment and derangement which has arisen, and will arise in his business.

John Kelly.

Sworn at the city of St. John's, this 31st day of May 1841, before me,
George Wheeler.

May it please your Excellency, Fredericton, 3 June 1841.

As respects the subject of the letter from Mr. Wedderburn, emigrant agent, (which I have the honour to return,) on the subject of the emigrant passengers on board the ship Montreal Packet, I am not aware that anything can be done, excepting that they (the passengers) be instructed to demand of the captain to be taken to New York, in pursuance of his original undertaking, and that they decline being landed at St. John's; and should he persevere and insist on their debarking, that each individual have him instantly arrested to answer in damages for his breach of contract; for which purpose I do not consider there would be any difficulty in obtaining a Judge's order to hold him to bail, which course would, I humbly conceive, bring the captain to some reasonable terms.

I have, &c.

Sir, Downing-street, 27 July 1841.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 14th of June, No. 22, with enclosures, communicating the proceedings of the master of the emigrant ship Montreal Packet, in compelling some of the passengers to land at St. John's, New Brunswick, instead of conveying them to New York, according to the terms of his contract; and I have to inform you that I have desired the solicitors of the Treasury to consider whether it is practicable to prosecute the master, owner, or sureties of the vessel with success in the courts of this country or New Brunswick.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 7 July 1841.

I AM directed by Lord John Russell to transmit to you, for your information, and for any remarks which you may consider it necessary to bring under his Lordship's notice, the copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, enclosing a list of the vessels, with the number of passengers, which had arrived at St. John's from Ireland, up to the 3d of June, and reporting that he had ordered the publication in the provincial newspapers of the answers to the queries proposed by you on the subject of emigration. I am further directed to send you, for your report, the copy of a despatch, with enclosures, from Sir William Colebrooke, relative to the conduct of the master of the Montreal Packet in bringing to St. John's, in New Brunswick, a number of emigrants from Ireland, who were taken on board under an engagement to convey them to New York.

COPY of a LETTER from the Hon. E. E. Villiers, and J. G. Shaw Lefevre, Esq. to Jas. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9 Park-street, Westminster, 24 July 1841.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, in which you forward for our report two despatches from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, enclosing a list of emigrants arrived in the colony up to the 3d of June, and transmitting certain documents relative to the conduct of the master of the ship Montreal Packet, in carrying passengers to St. John's, whom he had engaged to convey to New York.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

We have referred this case to Lieutenant Hodder the Government emigration agent at Dublin, the port from which the vessel sailed, and from his report, as well as from the evidence transmitted from the colony, we find the circumstances to be as follows.

In the month of March last the Montreal Packet, John Stewart, master, was advertised to sail from Dublin direct to New York, and a number of persons amounting to 186, inclusive of children, engaged and paid for their passage by her to that place. The vessel was inspected by the Government emigration agent, who also ascertained that the passengers had provided themselves with an adequate supply of food. The table of the prices at which provisions would be furnished on the voyage, which is required by the 6th clause of the Act to be affixed in a conspicuous place, was not observed by Lieutenant Hodder, owing, as he states, to the board on which it would have been placed not being finished. It further appears that the vessel cleared out from Dublin for New York.

At sea the passengers learnt from the crew that the vessel was steered out of her course, and after a voyage of 61 days they found themselves off St. John's, New Brunswick. They entertain a strong opinion, which is shared by the emigration agent at St. John's, that it never had been intended that the vessel should proceed to New York. The reasons in support of this opinion appear to be, that the vessel belonged St. John's, that Mr. Carson, one of the owners, went there to meet her, as inferred from the fact that the first question which the master asked the pilot on his going on board, was, whether Mr. Carson had arrived; that by coming to St. John's, the payment of the head money on emigrants at New York, amounting in this case to 930 dollars, was avoided, while the vessel would be on the spot where she was to load timber for her homeward voyage, and that the passengers had been charged 4 s. 6 d. for medical attendance, whereas no surgeon was on board, and the sum fixed was that which was requisite to clear the emigrants on landing at St. John's.

It further appears that on the voyage exorbitant prices were extorted for every article of provision which the master supplied.

Upon the arrival of the vessel at St. John's decided steps were taken by the authorities for the protection of the emigrants, in consequence of which the vessel ultimately proceeded on her voyage. Several persons, however, had previously left the ship and provided for their conveyance to New York by other means, and at their own expense.

It would thus appear that an offence was committed, first against the 6th clause of the Passengers' Act, which requires that a table of the prices of provisions should be exposed for continual reference, as well during the period at which passengers shall be engaged as during the whole of the voyage; and secondly, against the 14th clause, which prohibits the landing of passengers against their consent at any other place than that to which they have contracted to be taken.

The evidence in support of the second charge consists of an affidavit of a passenger sworn in the Supreme Court at St. John's, affirming the principal circumstances we have above enumerated, and estimating the loss occasioned to the deponent, by having to find his passage to New York, and by the detention, at 10 l. This document is forwarded by Sir William Colebrooke. But since the receipt of your letter there has arrived a communication from Her Majesty's vice-consul at New York, enclosing an affidavit made before him by a passenger, who had been taken to St. John's by the Montreal Packet. This person had arrived at New York in an American vessel, and states in her affidavit that the captain of the Montreal Packet, upon arriving at St. John's, used every means to induce the passengers to leave the vessel, and to proceed to New York at their own expense, and that she, among others, left the vessel at St. John's, and took her passage in an American ship. As the vessel did ultimately sail for New York with the greater part of her passengers, we suppose that it would be argued that the passengers who landed at St. John's, left the ship of their own accord.

How far, however, the evidence we have mentioned, in addition to the statement of Lieutenant Hodder at Dublin, a copy of whose letter we enclose, may be sufficient to support a charge against the master upon his return to this country for violating the Act in the two respects above named, we are not competent to say. The master of the vessel entered into a bond to Her Majesty,

in

NEW BRUNSWICK.

in pursuance of the 19th clause of the Passengers' Act, for the due performance of the regulations prescribed by the Act, and that bond is in the possession of the collector of customs at Dublin. It would probably, therefore, we apprehend, be the duty of the customs' department to proceed further in the matter, if legally advised, that from the evidence already collected, there was a prospect of a prosecution being successfully undertaken.

The name of the captain is John Stewart, and of the agent, or charterer, James Milley of Dublin. This latter person appears to have signed the bond, as well as the master, and we suppose as his surety.

Enclosures to despatch, No. 22, of 14 June.

We return the original documents bearing upon the case, which were forwarded to us in your letter, and we also enclose the copy of the affidavit, furnished by the British vice-consul at New York, the original having been, as he states, forwarded to the Government emigration agent, and at Dublin.

In conclusion, we have the honour to report, for Lord John Russell's information, that gross fraud and imposition appear to have been practised in this case upon the passengers, and that it would be attended with the most beneficial effects, if the conviction of the parties could be obtained.

We have, &c.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 29 July 1841.

I HAVE laid before Lord John Russell your letter of the 24th instant, reporting upon the conduct of the master of the ship Montreal Packet, in carrying passengers to St. John's, New Brunswick, whom he had engaged to convey to New York; and his Lordship desires me to inform you, that he considers the proper course for you to adopt is to lay the whole case before the solicitors to the Treasury, who will be instructed to communicate with you on the subject, and to consider how far it may be practicable to prosecute the master, owner, or sureties with success in the courts, either of this country or of New Brunswick.

EXTRACT of LETTER from the Hon. E. E. Villiers and J. S. Lefevre, Esq. to Jas. Stephen, Esq., dated Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 7 September 1841.

WITH reference to our letter of the 24th of July last, we have now the honour to report for the information of Lord Stanley, that in obedience to the instructions conveyed to us in your letter of the 29th of the same month, we placed all the documents in our possession, relative to the treatment of a body of emigrants by the owners and master of the Montreal Packet, before the solicitor of the Treasury, in order that he might consider how far it might be practicable to prosecute any of the parties connected with the ship, in the courts either of this country or of New Brunswick.

In reply, Mr. Maule informed us that formidable obstacles presented themselves against the success of a prosecution in the tribunals of either country, arising from the want of sufficient evidence to substantiate any of the alleged charges.

In order to supply, if possible, this deficiency, we caused a set of questions to be prepared and forwarded to Lieutenant Hodder, the Government emigration agent at Dublin, with a view to establish that there had been a violation of that clause of the Passengers' Acts which requires that a list of prices of provisions to be sold at sea, should be exhibited on board during the period in which passengers were in the course of being engaged; and to prove if possible the graver charge, to which Mr. Maule alluded, of fraudulent concert between the master, charterer, and owners of the vessel to dispatch her direct to St. John's, in violation of their public advertisement that she was to proceed to New York.

Lieutenant Hodder's replies to these questions were submitted to Mr. Maule, who now reports that there appears to be reasonable grounds to expect that sufficient evidence might be had to sustain a charge against the master of having violated the Passengers' Act in omitting to affix a table of the prices of provisions as provided by the Act.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 17 Sept. 1841.

I HAVE laid before Lord Stanley your letter of the 7th instant, with its several enclosures, relative to the alleged misconduct of the master of the Montreal Packet, in carrying to St. John's, New Brunswick, a number of passengers whom he had engaged to convey to New York, and in making exorbitant charges for provisions during the voyage; and I am to acquaint you, in answer, that Lord Stanley is of opinion, that upon the present evidence, it would be unwise to go to a jury. The point on which there is any chance of success being a very minor one, and the Government agent, not altogether free from blame, the desired issue of the prosecution is very doubtful; whilst the failure of it would be most mischievous. Lord Stanley, therefore, thinks that no pains should be spared to obtain evidence of the imputed offence of having conspired to carry the emigrants to St. John's, New Brunswick, under pretence of taking them to New York, and if that fraud could be substantiated, his Lordship would have no hesitation in advising a prosecution.

COPY of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers, to James Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,

Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 14 October 1841.

WE beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th ultimo, with reference to the prosecution of the master of the Montreal Packet, informing us that it was Lord Stanley's opinion that upon the present evidence it would be unwise to go to a jury, and also that it was desirable to proceed upon the minor point of the table of prices and provisions not having been exhibited, but adding, that his Lordship thought that no pains should be spared to obtain evidence of the suspected offence of having conspired to carry the emigrants to St. John's, New Brunswick, under pretence of taking them to New York, and that if that fraud could be substantiated, his Lordship would have no hesitation in advising a prosecution.

In reply, we have the honour to state, that the places to which references must be made, with the view of obtaining evidence on matters connected with this ship, are Dublin, where the emigrants engaged for their passage and embarked; St. John's, New Brunswick, whither they were first taken, and where some of them left the ship; and New York, whither the ship ultimately proceeded with the majority of the passengers.

A statement

A statement of the evidence to be procured at Dublin has already been laid before the Solicitor of the Treasury, and been considered insufficient to support any charge against the master, except the minor one of not exhibiting a table of prices during the period in which the passages were engaged, as is by law required. The important fact which the Government immigration agent states to have come to his knowledge, of two seamen having been entered by the master at Kingstown to sail direct for St. John's, he has been unable to substantiate by legal evidence.

It appears that the emigrants contracted for their passage to New York, with a person at Dublin acting for the owner or charterer of the vessel, and we apprehend that it would be necessary for some one of the passengers to proceed against the party with whom they had so contracted in respect of the alleged breach of contract in taking them to St. John's. By the 17th clause of the Passengers' Act, the right of action in respect of the breach or non-performance of any contract, is expressly saved to passengers; but from the circumstances and description of the emigrants by this vessel, it is not to be expected that any of them would be willing to undertake the cost and uncertainty of legal proceedings in the matter. If, however, it could be proved that any of the passengers who had made the contract above referred to, were actually landed at St. John's "without their previous consent," in violation of the 12th clause of the Passengers' Act, there would then, we conceive, be ground for instituting a prosecution under that Act, and putting the master's bond to the Crown in suit.

The evidence on this point which has been forwarded by the Governor of New Brunswick from the emigration agent at St. John's, and by the Vice-Consul at New York, appears insufficient.

Sir W. Colebrooke, in his Despatch, No. 18, of 9th June, states that the emigrants "were landed, but have since, with a few exceptions, re-embarked for their destination." The emigration agent mentions that some females had left the ship at St. John's, and applied for relief, and to be admitted to the poor-house there, rather than be exposed to the master's treatment on board. He adds, moreover, that their prayer had been immediately complied with. It appears again by his statement, that provisions were issued to the emigrants on board, and also "relief afforded to those on shore." From the affidavit of John Kelly, sworn at St. John's, which is forwarded with the emigration agent's statement, it is to be inferred that the deponent had left the ship at that place, not of his own accord; and amongst the losses entailed upon him by the conduct of the master, he includes the expense of his passage to New York.

In the affidavit of Matilda Le Cœur, sworn before the British Vice-Consul at New York, it is stated that, "when in St. John's, the master used every means to induce them (the passengers) to leave the ship, and proceed to New York at their own expense;" and the deponent further says that she, amongst others, did leave the ship at St. John's, and took passage in an American vessel to New York.

Whether these parties, however, or others in similar circumstances, would depose to having been compelled to leave the ship at St. John's, is a point on which further information is required, seeing that the vessel did ultimately proceed to her proper destination, and conveyed the majority of her passengers.

The only practical course, therefore, which we are enabled to suggest, is that a reference should be made to the Governor of New Brunswick, and to the British Consul at New York, with the view of ascertaining if further evidence as to the point above referred to can be obtained. As some parties who landed at St. John's received public relief, and were admitted into the poor-house, and all were in personal communication with the emigration agent, it is not improbable that this officer would still be acquainted with the residence of some, and be enabled to put further inquiries to them on the subject. The same might be the case with the British Vice-Consul at New York, who took the affidavit of one of the passengers, and was probably in communication with many others. The result of their inquiries might then be transmitted to the solicitor of the Treasury, who would decide how far the further evidence that could be procured would be sufficient to support a prosecution.

The most important object of all, it will be observed, will be to secure sufficient evidence that some of the passengers were landed at St. John's "without their previous consent."

NEW BRUNSWICK.

We are far from feeling confident that this course may lead to a successful result; but, as we stated in our former report, a gross fraud would appear to have been practised, and it seems very desirable to omit no step which may afford a possibility of establishing the case in a court of law.

We have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 15.

Government Emigrant Office, St. John's, New Brunswick,
20 November 1841.

Sir,

IN reply to your communication of the 10th instant, along with a despatch of the 18th October last from the Right Honourable the Colonial Secretary of State, to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor, for the purpose of obtaining further evidence to convict the master of the emigrant ship Montreal Packet, under the Passenger Act, if some of the passengers were landed here without their consent;

I have the honour to acquaint you for the information of his Excellency, that no such evidence is attainable, inasmuch as it seemed no part in the arrangement of those concerned in the vessel to commit such decided acts as would render them directly amenable to the operation of the law.

It was sheer want of food that induced the emigrants to come on shore to seek relief, as the master would supply none on board; whilst his violent language and threats alarmed others.

The master being one day on shore, depositions were taken before a barrister for the purpose of procuring a bench warrant against him, which, however, the judge, (Mr. Justice Parker) declined to grant, on the legal ground, I understood, that the master was not the principal agent in the transaction, or contract, but one Miley, of Dublin, who had chartered the vessel. Finding that no remedial steps at law could be taken on behalf of the emigrants, I then suggested to his worship the mayor, and the Emigration Board, that to protect them, and punish whoever was to blame on the other part, we should first feed all who were on shore, and send them immediately on board again, with a sufficient quantity of provisions, to be replenished in due proportions as long as the vessel should remain off the harbour, and that they, the passengers, should remain on board, and demand a completion of the voyage. That if the ship, of about 500 tons, could afford to remain idle under heavy expense and losing time, they too would lose their time also on board, that they might be carried to their original place of destination. Above 50 l. worth of provisions were supplied to the emigrants.

The owner of the vessel happened to arrive from Halifax on the following day, and finding how matters stood, shipped a fresh crew, the original one having deserted, and sent the vessel off to New York. I have heard nothing from the emigrants since their departure; they however arrived, but the Montreal Packet was wrecked on her way back from New York to St. John.

I much fear that nothing can be done to convict the delinquent parties in the case, but I have the gratifying duty to state, that the solicitude of the executive here, and of the high authorities of Her Majesty's Government at home, have elicited the warmest expressions of thankfulness from the community here, on behalf of the emigrants.

For beneficial practical purpose abroad, amendments are certainly required in the Imperial Passenger Act.

Mr. Buchanan,

I BEG leave to return you my most sincere thanks for your kind attention in sending me the despatch, however, Sir, please permit me to decline from having anything more to do with the affair of the Montreal Packet or her passengers. I did my endeavour to get justice done to a set of ignorant, unfortunate Irishmen, but could get none to stand to me at the moment the blow should have been struck, that is, when the owner, captain, and packet were all here; however, as there are several of the passengers yet in New York, if necessary they may come forward and testify what they have to say upon the subject; I have done so already in the most conscientious manner I possibly could. I am a lonely female in a foreign land, and I find from experience that I have none to stand to me in the day of need, and as I have hitherto lost my time, money, and trouble looking after that affair, I consider it more prudent for me to give myself no further concern about the matter. I have done my duty tenfold, both in St John and New York, in striving to obtain justice to the unfortunate, ignorant Irish, but in vain.

REFERRING to my despatch, No. 55, of the 28th ult., I have now the honour to enclose to your Lordship copy of a letter which I have addressed to Her Majesty's Consuls at Boston and New York, and copies of their answers, from which I am led to hope, under the arrangements in progress for the employment and settlement of the emigrants in the province, and which I hope will be matured previously to the ensuing spring, that many families will be induced to return from the United States where they are unable to settle until they have taken an oath renouncing all allegiance to their country.

I cannot but hope, also, that English capital, the application of which in public works in the United States has hitherto afforded so much employment to emigrants, will henceforth be directed to these provinces, and that, by the settlement of the wilderness, they may be secured as British possessions.

To this end, whilst the Americans are making such rapid progress, not only is it essential that the wilderness should be reclaimed and settled, and that the population should thus be augmented, but experience has shown that the introduction of diversified habits and pursuits, and the social and domestic ties which are cherished by an emigrant population, have a powerful influence in strengthening and perpetuating the connexion between the parent country and the colonies.

Enclosure 1, in No. 18.

Encl. 1, in No. 18.

Sir, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 6 August 1841.

SEVERAL thousand emigrants from the United Kingdom, and chiefly from Ireland, having arrived during the present season in the different parts of this province, the greater part of whom have removed with their families to the United States, and it being understood that the present financial difficulties in the States have thrown numbers of them out of employment, and that many have re-embarked at Boston and other sea-ports, I am desirous of obtaining such authentic information of the condition of the emigrants as would enable the emigrant agent and associations recently formed in this province to advise those who may arrive of the prospects that await them in removing to the States. With this view, I request that you will be so good as to inform me whether the emigrants, labourers, who have arrived at Boston, are in full employment, and if the numbers are in excess of the demand for them, what are the average wages, if they are paid in money, and with punctuality, is the climate congenial to them in the summer months, and are the men, women, and children generally in good health. When the season of employment terminates, do they readily effect a settlement, and in what parts of the country, and do many return to Europe.

As many emigrants invited out by their friends in the United States are understood to be induced by masters of vessels to take passage to this province in order to avoid the charge to which they are liable in the American ports, and as advertisements are circulated representing an effective demand for labourers to exist, I am desirous of obtaining such information on this subject as will enable Her Majesty's Government to take measures to protect the emigrants from the misrepresentations to which they are exposed. In one case, a number of emigrants were brought to St. John's, who embarked on the understanding that the ship was bound direct for New York.

In the next year I hope that expectations may be held out of extensive employment on public works in this province, in which case the emigrants may be induced to remain, and ultimately settle within it. I enclose to you a copy of the answers which have been recently received to the queries of the Land and Emigration Commissioners in England, for information of emigrants in the United States who might be induced to apply to you.

(Extract.)

Sir, Boston, 2 September 1841.

Encl. 2, in No. 18. To your various queries relative to the situation of the Irish emigrants in this city and neighbourhood, I can state:

1. That the numbers are unquestionably in excess of the demand, and that there is by no means sufficient employment for them.

2. The rates of wages for labour are at present fluctuating, and depending in a great measure on locality. A dollar a day has been considered, until lately, a fair and general price; but there are great numbers of men now here altogether out of employment, and I have good reason to think that the labouring Irish would willingly compound for 50 cents per day, to be guaranteed constant work.

3. Wages are in all cases I believe in this neighbourhood paid in money, and I have known but few instances of complaint for want of punctuality.

4. The summer season cannot be considered by any means unhealthy or uncongenial to the emigrants.

5. Very few return direct to Europe from this port, and as no vessels are employed in the transport of emigrants from the United Kingdom direct to Boston, it is only from the province of New Brunswick that they come here in any numbers; some stragglers arrive from New York, or come down from Canada. Those who leave Massachusets and the other New England States, after vain attempts to get employment, invariably remove to the west, through New York State. Numbers are now temporarily engaged on the western railroad, which has been completed beyond the boundary of the State of Massachusets, in that direction. I may also mention that all the other railroads radiating from this city, with the exception of one in the direction of Maine, have been carried beyond the limits of Massachusets; and the demand for Irish labour is consequently much limited in this quarter.

The strong prejudice which exists in this part of the Union against the labouring Irish, tends much to make them discontented; could encouragement be held out to them with the certainty of employment in New Brunswick during the whole year, I have no doubt that numbers would be induced to return to that province, or to proceed to Canada on the same terms.

Sir,

Encl. 3, in No. 18. I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's despatch of the 6th instant, in relation to my furnishing information on the various points therein attended to as to emigrants. In reply, as the subject is one with which I have been most occupied about 20 years, and wishing to go fully into the subject, I pray your Excellency to pardon some delay, as I am about to visit Canada for my health, and upon my return I shall endeavour to furnish the information required.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 8 October 1841.

I AM directed by Lord Stanley, to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, enclosing a correspondence which has passed between that officer and Her Majesty's Consuls at New York and Boston, on the subject of the practicability of inducing British emigrants, who cannot obtain employment in the United States, to transfer their labour to New Brunswick. In requesting you to submit, for Lord Stanley's consideration, any observations which may occur to you on this subject, I am directed to state that his lordship thinks that the British Government cannot properly establish an emigrant agent in a foreign port; and that, unless unless Sir William Colebrooke is quite satisfied as to the supply of permanent employment to these people in New Brunswick, his Lordship doubts the policy of encouraging a re-importation of paupers from Boston or New York.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 12 October 1841.

WITH reference to my despatch, No. 58, dated September 15th, I have the honor to enclose to your lordship copy of a letter, which I have received from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, containing his observations on the condition of the British emigrants in the United States.

Mr. Buchanan's letter, dated 30 Sept. 1841.

In consequence of the previous communication of the British Consul at Boston, relative to the sufferings of the emigrants in that quarter, I took measures to promote the formation of an association at St. John's, for the settlement of one of the recently surveyed locations, the success of which would have led to other speculations of the same kind. The commercial distress at present prevailing in that city is unfavourable to such an undertaking, and I apprehend, that unless these views should be directly encouraged by the Legislature, with the sanction and co-operation of Her Majesty's Government, that nothing effectual can be done to promote them.

P.S.—I enclose with this despatch, a copy of my reply to the communications of the Consuls at Boston and New York.

(Extract.) Her Majesty's Consulate, New York,
Sir, 30 September 1841.

* * * * *

I BEG to say that my office is daily beset by numbers who have landed at Quebec, St. John's, and other ports from the United Kingdom, who merely remain as long in Her Majesty's possessions as they can either earn by their labour, or as they can obtain without labour, as much money as will pay their passage to the States; I may state that in nine cases out of ten the poor people deplore how they have been duped, while from their having left Her Majesty's possessions, I do not feel it my duty to render them any pecuniary aid.

Several emigrant associations have been formed in this city, but they have been short-lived from being so borne down with applicants; and one established last year, will, I presume, expire with the year.

It may appear extraordinary to your Excellency that more persons receive charitable aid in this city than in Dublin, or any city in Her Majesty's dominions of the same extent of population; the numerous charitable institutions has entailed this evil upon the city, for like all other objects for which provision is made, so poverty and want will abound where provided for.

There is continually arriving in this city a class of British emigrants, whose condition here is truly distressing, viz., persons above the rank of the labouring class, the sons and daughters above the scale which furnish servants, some of whom have been well educated, some of them are well-qualified to act as teachers in various branches, but all such are miserably disappointed, not a few are provided for by death, in the unhealthy climate of the Southern States, to which they have to resort, while many enter the service of the United States' army.

For above 25 years, I have witnessed the misery and disappointment of thousands who have arrived here, while the most deplorable sufferers are females, and those men who will not labour. I know not how it is in New Brunswick, but in Upper Canada females are sure of employment, and if prudent, and well conducted, certain of getting comfortably married, while here distress drives hundreds to the most degrading haunts of prostitution; if females are good looking, and out of employment they are picked up at the offices for servants, and carried to the south for prostitution, without their being aware of it, until entangled in a net from whence they cannot extricate themselves; and houses of ill fame are generally supplied by girls from these offices.

* * * * *

A labouring man may work hard all his life in the United Kingdom, or Ireland, and never will acquire 50 acres of land, while five years such labour, if he avoids spirituous liquors will enable a labouring man in Canada, and I presume also in New Brunswick, to acquire 50 acres, if not more, with a dwelling. I speak from actual observation. Labouring with the axe and hoe is so different, I may say so gentlemanly a description of labour, that our respectable young men do not view it as working with a spade and reaping-hook in Ireland is considered, while in a short time an active young man may obtain 3*l.* per month, steady wages, with board, and be regarded as one of the farmer's family.

Sir, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 13 October 1841.

THE condition of the British emigrants in the United States as described by yourself, and by Her Majesty's consul at Boston, and the delusions by which they are misled, and too often destroyed through the acts of interested speculators, lead me to hope that measures may be taken in concert with Her Majesty's Government to divert the current of emigration to the British colonies, and to hold out effective inducements to those who have experienced disappointment in the United States, to seek a settlement in these provinces.

In order that you may be possessed of such information as will enable you to explain to the emigrants of every class the prospects that are here open to them, I will briefly observe that as the wilderness lands can only be acquired by purchase at auction, several locations have been selected and laid out for settlement, the allotments in which from 50 acres and upwards will be disposed of at periodical sales, the upset price being 6*s.* currency or, $ 1. 50 cents per acre, including the charges for survey. From the commercial distress at present prevailing, I apprehend that any speculation for the employment of provincial capital in the settlement of these locations is not to be expected, and that little will be done towards the object until the ensuing spring; arrangements will then be made I hope for holding out profitable employment to the emigrants upon roads and other public works, whereby they will acquire the means of purchasing lands, and I consider the advantages of such settlement in New Brunswick, to be quite equal to those which are open to the industrious settler in Upper Canada.

From the number of parochial schools in this province to which an annual contribution is made by the legislature of more than 10,000 l., and from their present inefficiency, I am also in hopes that an opening will be afforded for the employment of competent persons, and especially of respectable females as teachers.

In the prosecution of these views, I have lately, at the suggestion of the consul at Boston, appointed an emigration agent for this province at that place, and although not enabled to hold out any remuneration, I should be glad on your recommendation to make such an appointment at New York.

COPY of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers to Jas. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9 Park-street, Westminster, 10 November 1841.

As directed by your letters of the 8th ultimo and 8th instant, we have considered the despatches from Sir William Colebrooke therewith referred to us, enclosing a correspondence between himself and Her Majesty's Consuls at Boston and New York, relative to the passage of British emigrants through New Brunswick to the United States, and to the practicability of inducing those who cannot obtain employment in the United States to return and settle in New Brunswick.

Sir William Colebrooke states, that during the past season several thousand emigrants from the United Kingdom had arrived at the different ports of the province of New Brunswick, the greater part of whom had removed with their families to the United States; but it having been reported that numbers of these persons were unable to procure employment, and it being desirable, if such were the case, that it should be made known to other emigrants as they arrived from this country, Sir William Colebrooke applied to the British Consuls at Boston and New York for correct information relative to the general prospects of emigrant labourers proceeding to those parts of the United States with which they were immediately connected.

Mr. Buchanan's reply affords a striking picture of the misery which is endured by a large portion of the British emigrants at New York. He says that his office is daily beset by numbers who have passed into the United States from the British provinces, and that in nine cases out of ten, the poor people deplore the manner in which they have been duped. Indeed, he added, that for twenty-five years he has witnessed the disappointment and misery of thousands who have arrived at New York, and that there are more persons receiving charitable relief in that city than in Dublin, or any city in Her Majesty's dominions of the same extent of population.

The consul at Boston also replies, that the number of labourers are unquestionably in excess of the demand, and that low wages would be gladly accepted, if by any means constant employment could be obtained; and he further states, that unless some means be found for removing the surplus labouring population, the city authorities will be compelled to support great numbers in the workhouse.

Mr. Grattan then suggests to Sir William Colebrooke the expediency of offering to parties willing to profit by it, the means of returning to New Brunswick, and expresses his opinion that the local authorities would be willing, out of the Foreigners'. Capitation tax, to defray a portion, perhaps half, of the expense of removing them; but in order to carry out the plan effectually, he thinks that there should be an emigration agent for New Brunswick resident at Boston. Sir William Colebrooke, acting upon this suggestion, has appointed an agent at Boston, and has stated to Mr. Buchanan, that upon his recommendation, he should be willing, though unable to remunerate the party, to make a similar appointment at New York.

As regards this latter point, however, we are instructed by your letter of the 8th ultimo, that Lord Stanley does not think that such an officer can be properly established at a foreign port; and as regards the plan itself, Lord Stanley is of opinion that encouragement should not be held out to the importation of parties who have become paupers in the United States, unless there were sufficient ground for believing that they would find permanent employment in New Brunswick.

This no doubt is the most important consideration connected with the subject. Upon reference, however, to the official information received from the colony, in consequence of the general queries we requested to be circulated, we find it alleged that there exists an urgent demand for labour, and "ready employment," it is stated, "offers itself" to the labouring emigrants on the "arrival, both in town and country." Sir William Colebrooke moreover states that there are arrangements in progress for the employment and settlement of the emigrants in the province, and that he hopes they will be matured previously to the ensuing spring. And again he adds, "In the next year I hope that expectations may be held out of extensive employment on public works in the province." In his more recent despatch indeed, Sir William Colebroke states that commercial distress is at present prevailing in the province, and that the employment of provincial capital in settling the waste lands, which in certain parts have been laid out in small allotments for purchase, cannot be expected, and that little will be done towards this object till the spring.

Still, however, great activity has manifested itself in New Brunswick, in all matters connected with emigration, and a desire apparently pervades the colony to take every means of adding to its population, and promoting the settlement of its waste lands. Emigration societies, at the instance of the local government, have been, or are in the course of being, organized in every county of the province, for the purpose of obtaining exact information as to the demand for labour, and as to the means which exist for employing it, and also for procuring, partly by circulating information, and partly by means of funds placed at their disposal, a supply of labour adequate to the demand, and at the same time securing the permanent settlement of the emigrants. We should hope, therefore, that if the contemplated emigration took place, the means would really be found to exist for its proper regulation, both as regards the extent to which it would be carried, and the disposal of the emigrants upon their arrival.

Such being the case, we think there is a remark by Mr. Grattan, with reference to the return of these emigrants, which is worthy of consideration. It is, that it may prove "the surest way of making the emigrants satisfied with a settlement in the British colonies, to allow them in the first instance, to try the United States. It is their land of promise on leaving Ireland, and nothing but actual experience, will convince any of them, that they might more advantageously settle elsewhere."

It may be added, that the voluntary return of such emigrants would show to others, as they arrived from the United Kingdom, that it would be for their interest to remain in the province from the first.

Upon the whole, therefore, it appears to us, that should the Governor's anticipations be realized in respect to the employment which the public works will afford in the ensuing spring, it would not be objectionable that he should facilitate, by such means as may be within his power, and applicable to the purpose, the return of some portion of the British emigrants who had left the province, under erroneous hopes of obtaining higher wages in the United States.

At all events, we think it would be desirable that the British consuls at Boston and New York should be informed from time to time, as to the demand for labour actually existing in New Brunswick, and as to the prospects generally, of labourers who might settle in the province.

We infer from the tenor of Mr. Grattan's and Mr. Buchanan's communications, that the re-migration in question would afford great relief to the places from which it is proposed that it should be effected, and consequently be in no way unacceptable to the local authorities in the United States. Mr. Grattan even considers it probable that they would contribute funds towards the return of these emigrants into the British provinces, a course which would make it evident that they felt themselves directly interested in promoting any reasonable measures for this purpose.

Lord Stanley to Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke,

(No. 20.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Stanley to Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke.

Sir, Downing-street, 5 December 1841.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches, Nos. 58 and 64, of the 15th September and 12th October last, enclosing copies of a correspondence which has passed between yourself and Her Majesty's consuls at New York and Boston, on the subject of the expediency of encouraging the return to New Brunswick of British subjects, who had quitted the province for the United States, and had failed to obtain there the means of comfortable subsistence.

Having given my best consideration to the general question of promoting the removal to the North American provinces of such subjects of Her Majesty resident in the United States as might be desirous of living under British institutions, I am of opinion that there would be no objection to the measure, provided there was a fair probability that, on their arrival, they would be able to obtain permanent employment. This point, however, I think ought to be carefully attended to and satisfactorily ascertained, in justice to all the parties concerned.

The funds required to defray the expense of their passage, must of course be raised from local sources. In the case of New Brunswick, the Crown revenue having been surrendered to the Assembly, no step can be taken in furtherance of your views, except by an act of theirs. But no grant of public money ought to be sanctioned for this or any other object, unless the revenue is able to afford it. The employment of emigrants in New Brunswick seems to depend, in great measure, on public works, and these on the funds which may be available for their execution. The financial question must, therefore, be first solved, before any measures can properly be taken for attracting labourers to the province.

With regard to the appointment of emigrant agents, it appears to me doubtful whether the British Government can properly establish such officers in foreign ports. It is manifest that they ought not to be established without the fullest concurrence of the authorities of the foreign state.

(No. 89.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord Stanley.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 30 Dec. 1841.

WITH my despatch, No. 55, dated the 28th August last, forwarding the emigration returns from this province, I transmitted a compilation which I had caused to be prepared for the use of persons desiring to emigrate to this province.

From the advantages which it holds out, it may be a matter of surprise that so large an extent of territory should have remained in a wilderness state, and when it is considered that the port of St. John is annually resorted to by numbers who repair to the United States, I cannot doubt that when due facilities are afforded, the advantages of a settlement in the province will be duly appreciated.

Your Lordship is aware that I have entered into communication with Her Majesty's consuls at New York and Boston, with the object of obtaining their assistance in directing the views of the emigrants to the province.

Their information in regard to the condition and prospects of the people who arrive from the United Kingdom, is detailed in the letters forwarded with my despatches, No. 58, dated 15 September, and No. 64, dated 12 October, to which another communication from the consul at New York is herewith added, and finding that agencies had been established at those places to encourage the removal of settlers to Jamaica during the winter season, I have provisionally appointed the same persons as agents for this Government, whose exertions during the spring and summer will be directed to the settlement of this province.

Since my despatch, No. 86, dated 15th instant, I am gratified in being able to state that the measures therein alluded to for the settlement of a number of distressed mechanics and labourers, who would otherwise have been compelled to emigrate to the United States, have been zealously promoted by several public-spirited gentlemen; and as an example of the principles by which they are actuated, I transmit to your Lordship a copy of a petition which was forwarded to me, with an explanatory letter from Mr. Wilmot, Queen's counsel, and a member of the Provincial Assembly, which has been followed up by the formation of other associations with the same views, in St. John's and other places.

The enclosed minute of council will explain the principle which I have adopted in the formation of the new settlements, with the concurrence of the Privy Council, and on the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, by which the bonds of the settlers will be taken for the price of the land, an arrangement which will obviate the immediate demand for payment, and the effective settlement of the land will be ensured by the means at any time of enforcing the bond.

The spirit of these parties in undertaking the labours of a first settlement in the winter season, is highly creditable to them, and will afford an example to others of the advantages which the province holds out to the enterprize of settlers from Europe.

The success of any measures for the settlement and improvement of the country being dependent on the prosecution of useful public works, and especially on the construction of roads and bridges, I hope that this important object will be facilitated by the adoption of an improved system of finance, in the consideration of which subject I will not fail to advert to the judicious observations contained in your Lordship's despatch, No. 17, dated the 30th November last.

The commercial embarrassment, occasioned by the check to the timber trade, will be collaterally relieved by measures which will revive the credit of the province, and promote the circulation of capital in the settlement of the country, and the stimulus given to agricultural improvement by the exertions of the emigrant societies cannot fail to ensure the prosperity of the province. The latest report of the York County Agricultural Society is herewith enclosed, and I hope soon to be able to transmit a supplement to the hand-books for the use of emigrants.

Enclosure in No. 24.

Her Majesty's Consulate, New York,
29 October 1841.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 13th instant, in relation to the adoption of measures to draw from the United States such subjects of Her Majesty as had been disappointed in their expectations here to New Brunswick, with the ulterior view to turn a portion of the tide of emigration to that little known portion of Her Majesty's possessions. The annual arrival of British emigrants at this port exceeds 40,000, among whom are many families who would prove valuable settlers, and such alone should meet encouragement; and the fact of a few such removing to New Brunswick, after having tried the United States, would tend more to reconcile others than any statement which could be put forth; moreover, the correspondence of those persons with their friends at home would prove highly useful. Your Excellency is pleased to mention an agency here and at Boston. I should propose an experiment for one year, so as to test the utility; that 200*l.* should be set apart for this city, viz. 50*l.* as some small remuneration for the agency, 50*l.* for advertising, and 100*l.* to be at the discretion of the agent in aiding families which would prove useful to the province. I would also suggest that that diagrams of lands to be located should be furnished, that some well-circumstanced lands should be set part for location, with some remission of the purchase-money held out, provided certain number of acres should be brought under cultivation. No reward or assistance but for the hard-working industrious man with a family. No man to be employed on any public work who had not taken the pledge of teetotalism; long experience has taught me that all efforts or rewards to the indolent or dissipated is not only waste of funds, but such frustrate the success of the best-arranged efforts and plans.

My vice-consul was agent for some years for the Canada Land Company, as to emigrants, at a salary of 150*l.* a year, but as the professed plan of your Excellency is an experiment, although it is no remuneration for the trouble attending the business, yet I have told him that 50*l.* for the first year should be accepted, and if the services should justify a further expenditure hereafter, that can be adjusted.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Sir W. Colebrooke,

In Council, 10 December 1841.

READ a petition of Miles O'Leary and 33 others, praying that lots may be laid out on a road lately explored by Beverley Jouett on the eastern side of the St. Andrew's Road, and granted to them under the most favourable conditions. Whereupon,

Ordered,—That the Surveyor-general cause the tract in question to be laid out in 50 acre lots, in two tiers, and offer the front lots for sale at auction, reserving the rear lots for the present at the upset price of 3*s.* per acre, together with 3*d.* per acre to defray the expense of survey, and the purchasers to have grants passed to them immediately upon their executing bonds to the Queen upon legal interest, payable in advance; and to apply to the Attorney-general for a proper form of bond.

The foregoing applicants having proposed to open the road in question, by taking out the trees by the roots at 2*s.* per rod;

Ordered,—That an advance of 200*l.* be made to them as a loan, upon a joint security being entered into by them to repay the same. Such work as may be performed by them on the road to be received in payment.

Ordered,—That L. A. Wilmot, Esq. be appointed a commissioner to superintend the work upon the road in question, and the money to be drawn by warrants on the province treasury, in sums of 50*l.* each, to be vested in his hands for the purpose.

Ordered,—That the Surveyor-general give notice to applicants for land in other parts of the province; that upon similar associations being formed the Government will take into consideration the disposal of the lands, and opening the communications upon similar terms.

To his Excellency Lieut.-Colonel Sir William Macbean George Colebrooke, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of New Brunswick, &c. &c. &c.

The Petition of the Undersigned humbly sheweth,

THAT your petitioners are all British subjects, natives of Ireland, and are anxious of obtaining land for settlement.

Your petitioners are thrown out of their ordinary employment by the depressed state of the times, and the consequent scarcity of labour, and will be compelled to leave the country unless some encouragement is held out to them for settlement by your Excellency. That, with the exception of two or three, all your petitioners are well acquainted with the mode of clearing land, and with some assistance from your Excellency, your petitioners would immediately go upon such lands as may be allotted to them, and cut down through the winter preparatory to cropping in the ensuing spring.

Your petitioners are informed that there is vacant land on a road lately explored by B. R. Jouett, esq. on the eastern side of the St. Andrew's road, and your petitioners pray that this land may be laid out in lots, and granted to them under the most favourable conditions which can be imposed by your Excellency.

Your petitioners are informed that a part of the said explored road remains to be cut out, and having had great experience in such work they are willing to open the residue of the said road immediately, by taking out the trees by the roots at 2*s.* per rod, one half to be paid when the work is stopped, and the remainder upon an inspection and approval of the road in the spring. This road, your petitioners respectfully submit, is wanted to be opened immediately, and the frost will offer no obstructions for several weeks to come.

Your petitioners having been encouraged to hope that some assistance will be afforded them by the Government during the winter, they pray your Excellency that 33 lots may be laid off at the southern extremity of the said explored road, and that your petitioners may be allowed to purchase the same on such terms and conditions as will afford them the greatest amount of encouragement.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

May it please your Excellency, Fredericton, 2 December 1841.

In consequence of my interview with your Excellency of yesterday, I have convened a number of sober, able-bodied, and industrious labourers in and about the town, to ascertain their wants, and whether they were disposed to settle upon wilderness lands, and I am happy to inform your Excellency that I have procured the names of 36, who, if a little encouragement be afforded them, as I shall take the liberty of suggesting in a subsequent part of this communication, will enter upon their work immediately with enthusiasm.

The great falling off of lumbering operations and the general scarcity of labour arising from the present depression of trade, have thrown numbers of able-bodied industrious men out of employment, and I would respectfully submit, under favour, that such men under such circumstances, when willing to help themselves, may be legitimately encouraged by the Government out of the ordinary course.

The site selected for the settlement of these applicants, is on the road lately explored by Mr. Jouett, on the eastern side of the St. Andrew's Road.

If it be incumbent on the Government to dispose of all lands under the law as it now stands, by auction, of course the lots required must be subjected to this mode of sale, unless your Excellency could give the applicants a mere licence of occupation at present, leaving them an opportunity of availing themselves of any new enactment which may be passed at the next session of the Legislature, for the encouragement of emigrants and settlers.

If such permissive occupation could not be effected, I would propose that lots of 100 acres each should be laid off and numbered, that they be advertised, and bought in by the applicants; but they should not be required to make any immediate payment, but their bonds to be taken on condition to pay the principal when they are able, and to pay the interest in each year.

But the main object now is, to obtain the means of subsistence for the present winter should the land be obtained for them; the men are anxious to go to work immediately; they can build their camps and chop down for the spring crop, and I have no doubt from the character of the men that they will average from 6 to 10 acres each by the 1st of May, so that from 200 to 300 acres would thus be immediately reclaimed from a waste howling wilderness, and rendered at once productive of abundant crops for the support of man.

But while the men are working during the present winter, they will require to be provided with food; and I have, after a full and careful consideration of the subject, concluded that the sum of 200 l. at least would be necessary to make such provision.

This sum could be advanced by the Government as a loan, to be repaid by work upon the road through the settlement, at a fair remunerating price to be agreed upon.

I have suggested this course to the men, who will gladly bind themselves to repay every shilling in this way.

This work on the road would of course be exclusive of the work alluded to by the applicants in their petition, and which I hope your Excellency will allow to be done immediately, as the rate is low, and the road will be much wanted even during the present winter should the present settlement be formed.

Nearly all the men I believe have taken the temperance pledge, and they with one voice have determined to call their location the "Teetotal Settlement," and to utterly exclude all ardent spirits from their neighbourhood. This is highly gratifying, and while it makes me the more anxious to serve them, I am sure it will prove an additional recommendation to the favourable consideration of your Excellency and Council.

I sincerely hope your Excellency will be enabled to afford the wished-for assistance at an early day, so that the men may immediately commence operations.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke, K.H. &c. &c. &c.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 29 January 1842.

I am directed by Lord Stanley to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a despatch, with its enclosures, from Lieut.-governor Sir William Colebrooke, reporting the arrangements which he has made at Boston and New York for encouraging the immigration of British subjects into New Brunswick, and explaining the nature of a scheme (which has received the sanction of himself and the Privy Council, and is now in progress) for locating a certain number of labourers upon lots of 50 acres of land upon the St. Andrew's Road, and in other parts of the province, a bond being required from the labourers instead of of immediate payment for the land; and I have to desire that you will take these papers into your consideration and communicate to me, for Lord Stanley's information, your opinion, and any remarks which you may think it necessary to offer, on the topics to which they relate.

COPY of a LETTER from T. F. Elliot, Esq. and the Hon. E. E. Villiers, to Jas. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 24 February 1842.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, transmitting for our consideration and report a despatch from the Lieut.-governor of New Brunswick, No. 89, December 30th, 1841.

This despatch relates to two subjects, namely, the encouragement and assistance to be afforded to British subjects in the United States to migrate to New Brunswick, and the arrangements which have been adopted for settling labourers upon the waste lands of the colony.

1. Sir William Colebrooke encloses in his despatch a letter from Mr. Buchanan, Her Majesty's Consul at New York, suggesting the mode in which the first of these two objects is to be carried out. This officer proposes that 200*l.* should be set apart from the colonial funds, to be expended at New York in the following manner: 50*l.* as some small remuneration for the agency to which his vice-consul, Mr. Buchanan, jun., is to be appointed; 50*l.* for advertising; and 100*l.* to be at the discretion of the agent in aiding families to proceed to the colony. Next, that diagrams of the lands to be located should be furnished, and that grants of well-circumstanced lands, with conditions of improvement, should be made to the emigrants. That the parties sent by him should have families; and that no assistance should be granted except to the hardworking and industrious; and further, that "no man should be employed on any public work who had not taken the pledge of teetotalism." These are Mr. Buchanan's proposals. It does not appear to what extent Sir William Colebrooke has acceded to them, the report in his present despatch being only that he has provisionally appointed the agents at New York and Boston employed in collecting emigrants for Jamaica to be agents for a like purpose for New Brunswick.

We should be disposed to consider that the general aim of the plan, supposing that the individuals affected by it are out of employment, and in distress, and that it will give no offence to the Government of the United States, may be deemed good or bad, in proportion as the means exist in New Brunswick for giving employment to the persons whom it may introduce into the colony. If they can be employed at good wages upon public works, or by private parties, they will not need in their distress in a foreign land to be tempted by diagrams of well-circumstanced lands, and by offers of free grants. The use of diagrams, especially, we must note as specious in appearance, but in reality, quite a useless expense, since no man of sense who is going to a new locality would choose his land before he sees it. If, on the other hand, the means of paying the immigrants remunerating wages do not exist in New Brunswick, we are satisfied, by the experience which has universally attended the location of paupers upon waste lands, that their introduction into the colony ought not to be encouraged.

With regard to the expenditure of the proposed grant of 200*l.*, the sum of 50*l.* for advertising appears to be unduly large. Such an extensive circulation of the offers of assistance would appear obviously calculated to raise expectations out of all proportion to those which an expenditure of 100*l.* could ever meet, however carefully and judiciously it might be made. In selecting the parties to whom assistance is to be given, Mr. Buchanan purposes to consider those only to be qualified who have families, who are hardworking and industrious, and "who have taken the pledge of teetotalism." The first appears undesirable, undesirable, at least as an essential condition; for young married couples without children would be far more eligible for the colony. The second seems scarcely capable of proof; for no one could undertake to judge, among the thousands of transient poor at New York, who are hardworking and industrious, and who are not. The third condition is the most objectionable; for to attach public rewards to a declaration of intended abstinence, is to invite men to hypocrisy; or should the object be gained, and the parties keep the promise made to their society, the exception in their favour is unjust to those who, without any public profession, have acquired and practise the virtue of temperance.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

We are not aware whether the same general mode of proceeding was proposed to be adopted for the agent at Boston, nor, as we before remarked, whether it had been sanctioned for New York. The plan itself is to be considered only experimental, and to last for one year. It is one which Sir W. Colebrooke appears desirous to try, and we conclude that the expense will not be large. It does not appear, however, whether Mr. Buchanan's proposal for a grant of 200 l. has been acceded to, nor what further sum would be allowed for carrying on the plan at Boston. Should there be any considerable amount of money to spare for these objects, we cannot but think that it would be better expended upon local improvements in the colony, by which means the settlement of the waste lands would be facilitated, and employment be afforded to some of those emigrants from the United Kingdom, who, at their own charge, are annually arriving by thousands, but who pass to the United States in search of work. Whatever be decided in other respects, it will of course be proper that a due system of accounts and vouchers be established for any money that may be granted.

2. The second part of Sir W. Colebrooke's despatch relates to the plan which he has adopted for the settlement of labourers upon allotments of 50 acres. These portions are not, like those which it is proposed in a similar manner to lay out in Canada, to be free grants in name, but they will be purchased by the labourers, who will give their bond for the payment of the purchase money at some future period.

This plan has been at once commenced, and a tract which we suppose must consist of 1,650 acres, with a back reserve of equal amount, has already been granted to 33 Irish labourers. A loan, moreover, of 200 l. has been ordered for them, upon their joint security to repay the same in money or by work. The management of the settlement, and the distribution of the money which is to provide the locatees with food, is to be entrusted to a private gentleman, with whom the plan appears in a great degree to have originated.

We are obliged to remark that experience suggests the probability, that neither the purchase money of the land nor the advance in money will ever be recovered. The parties placed upon the land may be expected to profit by the aid of the money so long as it lasts; but when the time comes for their repaying it, and still more for paying the price of the land they occupy, there will prove to be no power which can be exercised of preventing such of them as choose from moving to the neighbouring States, where they will get good wages, and not be burthened with a debt. Existing engagements under this plan must doubtless be fulfilled, but we can in no way recommend that it should be generally adopted in other parts of the colony, as appears by the documents before us to be contemplated. In the year 1839, the Secretary of State, when writing to the Governor of Nova Scotia, upon a plan for aiding the settlement of lands by some form of gratuitous grants, states that "a very long and attentive observation over all the dependencies of the Crown, has convinced Her Majesty's Government that a system of free grants, so far from stimulating the advance of a new country, is calculated to retard its progress and to repress its natural resources." In this view we entirely concur; and whatever may be the seeming advantages for the moment of departing from it in practice, we think that the truth of it should be considered throughout Her Majesty's colonies to have been finally established.

We have, &c.

Sir, Downing-street, 2 March 1842.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch, No. 89, of the 30th December last, reporting the measures which you have adopted for promoting the emigration to New Brunswick of British subjects resident in the United States, and also for locating on the waste lands of the province persons of the labouring classes who were out of employment.

Having desired the Commissioners for Colonial Lands and Emigration to communicate to me their opinion upon these arrangements, I enclose herewith, for your information, a copy of the report which I have received from them on the subject; I entirely concur in the views entertained by the Commissioners. Government Emigrant Office,

Sir, St. John, New Brunswick, 1 January 1842.

IN transmitting a mere numerical abstract report of immigration, during the last year, I have the honour respectfully to acquaint his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor that all my detail records were destroyed at the last fire here, but the total number amounts to 7,063 souls, and I am happy to state that only 12 fatal cases are reported to me. Arrivals, 7,063.

The departures appear to be about 3,500 of all classes to the United States.

Among the industrious branches here who have been affected by the commercial embarrassments, the ship-building interests present a melancholy instance; 15 firms having discharged from 40 to 100 workmen from each yard.

Owing to the beneficent consideration of his Excellency Sir W. Colebrooke, about 150 immigrant labourers are now employed on rocks; and I understand all are married men here.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 9 May 1842.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th ultimo, transmitting, for any observations we may have to offer, a copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick, with a report of the emigration agent of that province, giving the number of emigrants that had arrived there from this country during the past year.

This report enters into no details, in consequence, as Mr. Wedderburn states, of all the records of his office having been destroyed in one of the calamitous fires that had not long previously consumed a portion of the town of St. John's. The only results, therefore, of the emigration for 1841 which we can bring under Lord Stanley's notice from these documents, are the gross numbers landed in the colony, amounting to 7,063, and the numbers that had re-emigrated and proceeded to the United States, amounting to about 3,500 of all classes, or nearly half of the numbers introduced.

By a return made directly to our Board from the emigration agent in New Brunswick, it appears that nearly all the emigrants who arrived during the past year were from Ireland.

On a comparison of the emigration to this colony for the three years ended the 31st December last, we find that an increase, exceeding one-half, took place in 1840 over the preceding year, while the numbers in 1841 were not quite equal to those of 1840, as will be perceived by the following table:—

	Number of Emigrants.
In 1839	3,123
1840	7,777
1841	7,063

We enclose an abstract of the Immigration Returns for one quarter of the past year, prepared by Mr. Wedderburn according to the forms suggested by our Board. No returns for any other quarters have been transmitted to this country.

It is to be expected that the emigration for 1842 will be on a much reduced scale, in consequence of the commercial distress which is prevailing in the province, and the want of any effective demand for fresh labour.

In our letter of the 3d instant we submitted to Lord Stanley the expediency of our making publicly known the substance of the Governor's recent reports on the want of capital applicable to the employment of fresh labour; and we are not not aware that there is any other practical step in reference to the emigration to New Brunswick during the present year which it is expedient to adopt.

We have, &c.

---

1. What is the expense of erecting a country dwelling suitable to an agricultural labourer?—For a log house from 3*l.* to 7*l.* 10*s.*; frame ditto, from 25*l.* to 40*l.*

2. What is the rent of a town lodging, suitable to a mechanic and his family?—Varies from 10*l.*, 17*l.* 10*s.*, and 20*l.*, according to the standing of the parties.

3. What funds have been placed at your disposal, during the past quarter, for the relief of immigrants?—No specific sum, but passages into the interior and provisions have been gratuitously given, as required, to emigrants during the past quarter, from the Emigration Society and Emigration Fund.

4. Is there any fund in the colony for the relief of the destitute poor?—The emigrant fund is exclusively applied for this purpose, and convey them to their destinations within the province.

5. State the description of labour which is in request in the colony?—Agricultural labourers, masons, stonecutters, carpenters (house and ship), common labourers, and house servants.

6. Would the rate of immigration of the last quarter satisfy the existing demand for labour?—About equal to the absorption.

7. Could it be safely increased, with reference to the supplies of food in the colony?—Yes. Increased immigration naturally implies an enlarged productive population, and may be safely increased here by the introduction of industrious settlers on the vacant Crown lands; but, from the great demand in the staple manufacturing agencies, &c., in the province, provisions continue to be largely imported.

8. State any particulars relative to immigration and the demand for labour which you think may be useful?—The greatest demand for labour at present is among stonecutters, masons, bricklayers, and house carpenters, owing to the rebuilding of the districts burnt by several destructive fires in the city. As a general rule, emigrants should strive to embark as early in the season as possible, having with them sufficient provisions, bedding, and clothing for the undertaking.

It is difficult to fix a rate of wages for labourers at Miramichi, in consequence of the demand varying so much at different seasons: in the months of May and June, the lading of ships, securing of timber and deals (then coming to market), conducting the river fisheries, added to the usual increased demand for agricultural labourers at seed time, affords employment for a much greater number than are required at other seasons; and the necessity of having the assistance required for the ships frequently enables an emigrant arriving at that season to receive 5 s., 6 s., or 7 s. per day, who would not obtain more than 40 s. per month at other seasons of the year.

The vessels bringing emigrants had principally arrived and discharged before the circular requiring returns to be made from this office was received. I am enabled to afford little information but what is derived from the list of passengers filled by the masters on arrival, and am compelled to leave many of the blanks unfilled. From the health officer, who examined the passengers on board before landing, I have obtained a report, in which he says the passengers were all healthy, no complaint as to the quantity or quality of food or water, neither did their appearance indicate any bad treatment nor want of room. All the passengers, with the exception of several of those on board the Nerio, were of the better order of emigrants. No surgeon on board any of them.

(No. 20.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord Stanley.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 26 February 1842.

As the season approaches when emigrants from the United Kingdom usually embark for the United States and the British provinces, a consideration of the policy by which the Government has heretofore been actuated on the subject of emigration, may be useful in the application of views by which the benefit of the parent country and the colonies may be reciprocally promoted.

After the separation of the American States, a check was for some time given to the settlement of the northern provinces, which adhered to Great Britain.

It is well known throughout this continent that during the revolutionary crisis the check to its progress in Nova Scotia was mainly given by a body of English settlers who had recently emigrated from the midland counties. The descendants of these settlers occupy the rich marsh lands on the confines of the two provinces at the head of the Bay of Fundy, and this occurrence is one to which I shall have occasion to advert in the course of these observations.

The settlement of New Brunswick has progressively advanced since that period, but more slowly than might have been expected from its great natural resources; and it has probably been retarded through the enterprize of the American States, and the active agency they have exerted in England, whereby capital and labour have been so largely attracted to their shores.

In the original settlement of the Federal States a striking contrast is observable from the creation of a landed proprietary in the south, and the absence of such a body in the north.

The

The existence of slavery is an evil from which the New England States are free, and from which it has required a costly sacrifice to redeem the British West Indies; but though fortunes have been acquired from speculations in land, the consideration arising from territorial possession has been less an object of ambition.

In the progressive settlement of a new and fertile country, although the application of capital and labour in clearing and cultivating the land forbids the prospect of any return beyond the subsistence of the labourer and his family for several years, yet the augmented value of land assures the ultimate compensation of the landholder. And if gentlemen possessing more or less capital should engage with permanent views in such undertakings, they would introduce a superior class of settlers, who would bring to the colonies the morals and industry, the arts and intelligence, which characterise the yeomanry of England.

From such elements the best means would be acquired of establishing the principles of the constitution in the colonies; and by encouraging a constant influx of new settlers, the connexion would be perpetuated.

In the instance to which I have alluded above, an example has been afforded of the strength of these social and domestic ties which are cherished by the inferior class of emigrants, and which are known to prevail with many of those who have settled in the United States; but as in a few generations those ties are naturally weakened, the preservation of such a bond with the parent country must depend on a continued influx of new settlers.

This consideration is of much weight in countries the institutions of which are unavoidably imperfect, and where the influence of an educated class, by whom that social intercourse may be maintained, so little obtains. There is, in fact, in these countries, no class exercising an hereditary influence, or able to afford the slightest support to the government in any case; and from the enclosed Report of Judge Parker, relative to a late outrage committed by the lumber-men in the northern counties, it is apparent, that in any case where the people are incited to act against authority, they are unrestrained by the influences which prevail in communities more perfectly constituted.

11 Sept. 1841.

If it be true, as I am led to believe, that the happiest and most prosperous countries are those in which there are the greatest number of gradations, it is a duty in the governing country to consider how far the state of society in her colonies may be assimilated to that in which her own prosperity has been founded, and to seek her own advantage in their elevation, rather than her ascendancy in their degradation.

In regarding the colonies as a refuge for the indigent classes, it is manifest that so arduous a mode of life requires that their previous habits and experience should in some degree have prepared them to encounter its trials.

Model colonies at home might thus be made a means of training for emigration to the settlements abroad; and if the habits of self-dependence should thus be acquired, and skill in the rude arts in which the American settlers excel, their difficulties would be abridged and their success more effectually assured. The settlements in communities would thus also be encouraged, whereby the advantages of social intercourse and co-operation would be acquired, and the means of instruction to the young.

In affording encouragement to capitalists to acquire lands, I am disposed to consider that the settlement of the emigrant peasantry in villages is likely to be the most effectual means of promoting their own welfare and the advantage of the country. The social benefits thus acquired supersede the ignorant desire to extend their acquisitions beyond their means, and the possession of 50 acres in such a settlement will be found more valuable than an insulated grant of far greater extent in the wilderness.

Such settlements will rear a class of labourers prepared to seek employment on adjacent lands, and as population advances new settlements will form in the same model.

The village settlements of the Eastern world had their origin in this principle, of which there are traces in the early history of England; and, combined with the settlement of a proprietary body, they furnish the elements of that mixed constitution, the advantages of which are by none more fully appreciated than by the educated classes in the neighbouring republic.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

That the acquisition of land by capitalists with a view to hereditary possession would be compatible with such a system of village settlement there is every reason to conclude; and the views of such a class should be directed to those liberal pursuits connected with the government and the improvement of the country, which would insure their own ascendancy.

In the settlements which have been formed during the winter, it has been found that their success has depended in the lead being taken by intelligent and public-spirited gentlemen, and whether actuated by desire to gain political influence or by motives of humanity, their exertions have been alike honourable and successful.

If such agency has been required in the settlement of persons who have experience of the country, it is still more necessary in the case of emigrants; and in the progress of measures by which I hope the current of emigration may be diverted from the United States to the British provinces, it will be desirable to encourage such an association of the parties as will afford them the advantage of similar superintendence.

Without private capital their employment upon public works can alone enable them to subsist until their lands can be rendered productive; but the acquirement of the intermediate lands by capitalists interested in the growth and prosperity of such settlements, would furnish some resource in the improvements which they might be led to undertake, of which the opening of communications are the most important. Municipal institutions, by which communities are enabled to act with energy and spirit, and by which a corporate credit may be applied to their social improvement, are amongst the most effectual means of accelerating the progress of new countries, in which the formation of a proprietary body is required to give stability to its institutions.

Enclosure in No. 31.

Sir, Bathurst, 11 September 1841.

I HAD the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter of the 3d instant, addressed to Mr. Johnson and myself on my return to this place from Restigouche, the county in which the outrage occurred to which your Excellency refers.

Although no depositions or other documents were laid before me, I felt it my duty while at Dalhousie to make particular inquiry into the circumstances of so daring and violent a riot, accompanied by a rescue of prisoners in the gaol, with a view to having the matter taken up before the grand jury, whose attention I particularly directed to the subject.

I found that a bill of indictment had already been found at the sessions against several of the persons accused, and the Bench warrants issued for their apprehension; but none had been taken, it being supposed they had left the country.

Although a large number of persons had joined in the riot, it was found impossible to identify any other persons by such evidence as would justify their apprehension, and no proceedings were taken at the court over which I presided. I found a sort of police force had been organized under the direction of a respectable militia officer, but as there was only one prisoner in gaol, a man convicted of larceny, it was not thought necessary to continue the force beyond the sitting of the court.

From the best information I could obtain (which, however, was altogether got by present inquiries), I believe the cause of the evil is to be found in the general mode of carrying on the lumbering business. The master lumberers are mostly men possessed of little property, and depending for their supplies chiefly on advances from the merchants, who obtain for them the licenses to cut timber on the Crown lands, and look to the receipt of the timber for payment. The workmen who are engaged by the lumberers go on with the winter's work, in the expectation of receiving their wages when the timber gets into the merchant's possession; but are seldom cautious enough to secure any legal guarantee from the merchant. If then the timber does not yield sufficient to pay both the merchant and the workmen, which is very generally the case, the workmen are almost at the mercy of the merchant, it being of little avail to them that they have a legal demand on their employers. It is not, therefore, much to be wondered at that men of this class seeing the timber on which their labour has been bestowed lying within their reach, and any legal redress beyond their means, should seek to possess themselves of it in order to enforce a satisfaction of their claims from the holders; and the consequences are such as have happened in the late instance. Such proceedings are, I need hardly observe to your Excellency, not the less alarming from having some colour of natural justice; but how they are to be prevented in such places as the Restigouche, unless by a change in the mode of carrying on the timber business, it is difficult to say.

If

If the workmen of different parties unite, and they will be assisted by men of their own class in life, no civil force of sufficient strength to resist them could be got together, and a regular military force, unless stationed near the place, could hardly be made available in time.

The gaol at Dalhousie is quite a new building, and would I conceive be sufficiently strong for ordinary purposes; but no gaol in the province could have availed against such an attack as that made on the occasion alluded to.

No. 32. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke. 31 May 1842.

(No. 66.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord Stanley to Lieutenant-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke.

Sir, Downing-street, 31 May 1842.

I HAVE received your despatch, No. 20, of the 26th February, submitting your views as to the best mode of promoting the colonization of New Brunswick.

I am not at all disposed to question the correctness of your opinion, that the supply of labour is not the only object to be looked at in colonization, but that a due admixture of persons possessed of capital must be necessary. In fact, the want of capital to support the labour which has been introduced, and to increase its productiveness, is at this moment practically felt in many of our colonial possessions, and in none more than in the North American provinces. But whether Her Majesty's Government can interfere directly in promoting the introduction of capital into the colonies, and in what manner, and to what extent, is not very clearly pointed out in your despatch.

Allusion is made "to affording encouragement to capitalists to acquire lands," and if this be confined to the adoption of fit and salutary regulations for the supply of labour, I should concur in it; but if, among the means for effecting the object, there be included any recurrence to the practice of making free or conditional grants of land, it is unnecessary for me to remark, that the plan is one which universal experience has proved to be injurious in its operation, and which, for that reason, has been peremptorily forbidden by successive Governments of this country.

A further point to which you direct my attention is, "the settlement of the emigrant peasantry in villages," in the neighbourhood of lands which have been acquired by "capitalists interested in the growth and prosperity of such settlements." There can be no doubt that it would be desirable that labour and capital should be combined, that landed proprietors should find in the neighbourhood of their estates an agricultural population capable and willing to cultivate them, and that the working classes should be collected together in small communities for their mutual support and comfort, instead of being dispersed and isolated. But there are no means by which the Government could directly effect or contribute to this result. If capital should flow naturally, that is, by the operation of self-interest, into the colony, the combination of it with labour would doubtless follow,—for the facilities for immigration into New Brunswick are very great; but any attempt at forcing the result by the Government, would involve the public in expense, and probably end in failure.

A third question which is submitted for my consideration is, the expediency of establishing model colonies at home, as the means of training the indigent classes for emigration, and preparing them to encounter the trials of colonial life. The mode, however, in which such a plan could be carried into operation, is not stated, and I imagine that nothing but actual experience could be really effective in conveying a practical knowledge of the circumstances incident to the life of one who settles in the wilderness. But independently of this consideration, there are insuperable objections to the plan, the chief of which is the expense.

If it be intended that Her Majesty's Government should undertake it, it may be sufficient for me to state, that they have no funds applicable to the purpose.

Fully therefore agreeing with you, that the establishment in New Brunswick wick of a class of landowners possessed of capital applicable to the cultivation of the land and to the employment of labour, would conduce to the rapid growth, and to the solid prosperity of the colony, I yet think, that the object is one not likely to be effected by the direct interference of Her Majesty's Government. All which it appears to me that the Government can do towards promoting the colonization of New Brunswick, is, by placing a moderate price upon the public lands, and rendering their acquisition easy; by circulating also correct information concerning the colony, so that parties may judge of the means which it affords for the profitable employment of capital; and as regards the lower orders, by regulating their conveyance to the colony without the undue enhancement of its cost. The rest must be left to the inducements which the natural resources and advantages of the colony may present; in short, to the operation of private interest.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord Stanley.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 29 March 1842.

I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship a petition addressed to Her Majesty by the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of St. John.

The sufferings and trials of the inhabitants through the winter, occasioned by the commercial distress which still continues, and the calamitous fires which occurred in the last year, have been borne with exemplary patience, and I beg leave very earnestly to represent to your Lordship, that any sudden alteration in the duties, and without affording time and aid in developing new resources, will seriously aggravate the distress now prevailing, and which it was my hope to have alleviated by the application of the public credit, in raising funds for the execution of public works in St. John's and in other parts of the province. Without this or some other resource to create employment, I am led, from the number and amount of the recent commercial failures, to apprehend a decline of the public revenue, and in the value of property, and a dearth of employment leading to the emigration instead of the settlement of the most valuable mechanics, and an increase of pauperism amongst the more indigent of the labouring class, with diminished means of providing for their support.

With such anticipations I am bound to observe that the expected arrival at this season of a number of indigent emigrants from Europe, and chiefly from Ireland, is regarded with great apprehension, as calculated to aggravate the public distress so generally prevailing.

I have, &c.,

(signed) W. M. G. Colebrooke.

P.S.—In addition to the relief temporarily afforded by me to the people of St. John's in the last year, the House of Assembly granted to me, at the beginning of the session, a sum of 2,000 l. to continue the employment of the mechanics and labourers, and I enclose to your Lordship a recent report which I have received from the commissioners I have appointed to disburse this fund. I have to add, that a considerable number of the principal mechanics have proposed to charter a ship, to enable them to proceed to Australia, there being no immediate prospect of employment in the United States, and that proposals have been made to me by many of the most respectable, who possess houses in St. John's, to mortgage their funds, to enable them to settle upon wilderness lands, which proposals I am unable to entertain.

There are at present mechanics who have earned 10 s. a day, who are now labouring for 3 s., and others who have joined the parties in the new settlements, where they have funds to maintain themselves till the lands can be made productive.

ductive. Without public employment, however, the prospects of these settlers are precarious, and to require them to pay for their lands would absorb their available resources.

Enclosure in No. 33.

To The QUEEN's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Petition of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick, in the Common Council convened,

Encl. in No. 33.

Most respectfully showeth,

THAT by the charter of his Most gracious Majesty King George the Third, your petitioners are the constituted guardians of the rights and interests of the city of St. John, and under that guardianship, and the fostering care of the British Crown and Imperial Parliament, it had, until very lately, been rapidly advancing in population and opulence.

That the prosperity of the city has chiefly arisen from its central position, as the principal port of the province for the export of timber and deals to Great Britain, and lumber and fish to the West Indies; and as the commercial resources of the province are almost wholly confined to the trade in these articles, and a return in British West India goods, whatever occurs in the mother country, bearing on these interests, necessarily affects the trade of the colonies; and if the measures adopted there happen to be injurious, the city suffers more in proportion than any other part of the province.

That your petitioners learn, with the deepest regret and uneasiness, the intention of Your Majesty's Ministers to make such changes in the existing duties on timber and lumber as must have a direct tendency, along with the existing commercial embarrassments, to destroy the remaining trade of the province, and bring on a general bankruptcy.

That, suffering immense losses by repeated calamitous fires, and participating extensively in the lamentable depression which has taken place in the trade of the mother country, this city, instead of being prepared to encounter this sudden and alarming change in the system of protective duties now existing, is scarcely able to bear up under its present evils; and your petitioners can anticipate no other result from the proposed change, than the utter ruin of its trade, and that of the whole province.

Your petitioners are sensible that Your Majesty's Ministers, in proposing these measures, are endeavouring to relieve the general embarrassments of trade throughout Your Majesty's dominions; but they would humbly submit, whether, in so doing, it would not be just at least to give sufficient time to turn the extensive establishments of mills, wharves, and other erections, completed on the faith of a well-tried and well-understood protective system, to some other profitable investments, if in this infant colony any other can be found. And Your petitioners cannot at all understand why the West Indian ports should be thrown wide open to an ambitious and powerful neighbouring country, with whose wealth and capital it is impossible for this young colony to compete, however their industry and enterprize may not exceed those of the people of this province.

That Your petitioners in the full confidence of a continuation of the protective system, have within the last few years caused extensive wharves to be erected, at very great expense, on the flats at Carleton, within the city, and along streets or bridges leading from the main land to these wharves, all of which are eminently calculated for the safe accommodation and loading of ships, storing of goods, and preservation of timber and lumber, but which must become useless to the corporation and to the enterprizing merchants and ship-owners interested therein, if the contemplated change in the scale of duties is to become the law.

That Your petitioners believe it to be unnecessary to enter more minutely into details, the same having already been done by the legislature, and other public bodies in their addresses to Your Majesty; they will therefore content themselves with humbly praying that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to consider their petition, and avert those evils which threaten ruin to one of the finest and most loyal of Your Majesty's colonial possessions.

And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

NEW BRUNSWICK.

Sir, St. John, New Brunswick, 17 March 1842.

For the information of his Excellency, we have to say, that the applicants for employment increased last week, and we fear that they will not diminish, as there appears to be very little prospect of much employment when the spring opens. The number of men, women, and children, sustained from what we paid the labourers last week, was 2,700, besides the cartmen and their families; this is in addition to those who receive support from the overseers of the poor, as we give nothing to those who are under the care of the overseers of the poor. As we have paid something exceeding 300*l.* per week, his Excellency will see the necessity of making further provision; should we be mistaken in our apprehension of the want of employment, the money can be repaid into the treasury.

Sir, Downing-street, 18 May 1842.

With reference to that part of your despatch, No. 28, of the 29th of March, in which you bring under my notice the distress now prevailing among the labouring classes in New Brunswick, I have to acquaint you, that with a view of checking the departure from this country of the poor emigrants who are expected to arrive in the province this season, I caused a paragraph to be inserted in the daily newspapers, notifying the improbability of their obtaining employment when they reached the province; and a similar caution has been introduced into a second edition of the pamphlet prepared by the Land and Emigration Commissioners for the diffusion of information respecting the colonies among persons intending to settle in British North America.

Under the altered circumstances of the province, you will doubtless have instructed the emigrant agents appointed by you at Boston and New York not to exercise their functions; but, if you should not have taken that step, I would suggest to you the propriety of issuing immediate orders on the subject. I must also strictly prohibit you from expending any public money in facilitating the removal to New Brunswick of British subjects settled in the United States whilst this temporary distress continues in the province.

Despatch from Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke, 30 April 1842.

(No. 46.)

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-General Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord Stanley.

My Lord, Fredericton, New Brunswick, 30 April 1842.

Having in my despatch, No. 20, dated 26th February, communicated to your Lordship some suggestions for the future settlement in the colonies of emigrants from the United Kingdom, I recur to the subject at this time from a desire only to obviate misconceptions in regard to the partial application of these views within the province.

The observations of the Land and Emigration Commissioners, so far as they apply to the plans of Mr. Buchanan, it is not necessary that I should notice.

Previous to the appointment of that Board, I had frequent occasion to regret the ill effects upon the colonies of the manner in which emigration had been promoted from the United Kingdom, and without adverting to the injurious consequences arising from the system of colonising with criminals, I may observe, that the practice of regarding the colonies as a refuge for the destitute was most unfavourable to their advancement. The resort to this practice as a means of relieving the pressure of numbers in over populous districts was obviously ously delusive, while the employment of the least efficient members of society in the most arduous of all enterprises, could not fail to react unfavourably in the parent country in its future relations with the colonies.

The organization of parties who after due inquiry should form settlements upon waste lands, has been proved by experience to afford many advantages to settlers where the lands acquired by them are not too extensive.

By this arrangement their co-operative industry becomes more effective, and their labour is rendered available in the prosecution of undertakings which depend on the application of capital.

As the subsistence of settlers, while engaged in reclaiming new lands, must either be derived from their own resources or from employment in useful works, and as the absorption of their private funds must prevent them from improving their farms, a plan of settlement by which those funds may be reserved to them, and they may be induced to afford their labour on reasonable terms, is alike favourable to their own views and to the public improvement.

The plan of requiring payment for their allotments has already so entirely failed as to have led to an extensive occupation of lands in this province without title; and in limiting their purchase to 50 acres, and requiring the payment of interest only as a virtual rent for their occupancies, I have had in view to remedy this evil.

The improvement of their farms tends to augment the security for their bonds, which, so long as the interest is paid and the lands are improved, there can be no inducement to enforce against them.

As to the advances made for the opening of roads, &c. their recovery must of course depend on the vigilance of the officers intrusted with the execution of such works, and the observance of a pledge of temperance, although it could not be a principle by which the Government could be guided in holding out employment, is nevertheless proved to be very effectual in economising their resources and promoting the fulfilment of their engagements.

I enclose to your Lordship a report which was made to me by Mr. Wilmot, of the progress of the settlement which he superintended during the winter, from which your Lordship will perceive, that so far from any loss having been sustained, the work for which advances were made was fully executed before the termination of the season.

As in the present state of the public finances no prospect can be held out of promoting the settlement of the province on this plan, it is unnecessary to pursue the subject further; but I beg leave to observe, that if the acquisition of wilderness lands is to be open only to persons who have the means of paying for them, the settlement of the province will be retarded and the lands, as at present, will continue to be extensively occupied without title, a system leading to improvident and lawless habits.

May it please your Excellency,

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency, that in virtue of my appointment as commissioner of the new settlement on the St. Andrew's road, I have had the whole extent of the road through the said settlement grubbed to the width of 16 feet: the total length is 913 rods.

Mr. Jouett has examined the road, and informs me that the work is well done; one-third of the price is to be reserved till the work is examined in the spring.

There is now one party clearing on their lots, another will proceed on the 1st of February, and the remainder on the 1st of March next.

Thirty-nine settlers are now ready to purchase and improve their lots, and I am happy to inform your Excellency that the men are all in high spirits, and are one and all disposed to exert themselves to the utmost in the cultivation of their lands. The men are prepared to enter into the necessary bonds for the performance of road work during the next summer to the amount advanced.

Despatch from Lieut.-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke to Lord Stanley.
14 May 1842.

(No. 53.)

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir W. M. G. Colebrooke, to Lord Stanley.

Fredericton, New Brunswick,
14 May 1842.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to enclose to your Lordship a copy of a report which has been made to me by the emigrant agent at St. John.

Although employment of emigrant labourers on public works will be afforded only to a limited extent in the present season, I have endeavoured to render it available to them by instructing the supervisors and commissioners of roads to prosecute the repairs of the main roads without delay, which have heretofore been deferred to the inconvenience of travellers until later in the season, to enable the farmers to engage in it after the completion of their farm work, a practice which has been much complained of.

The political disturbances which have recently occurred in Rhode Island have induced some substantial English emigrants to come to this province, where they are purchasing farms, and with every prospect of their being followed by others of this respectable class.

The Land and Emigration Commissioners, in their observations referred to in my despatch, No. 46, dated 30th April, have remarked, that instead of encouraging British subjects who have emigrated to the United States to settle in these provinces, it would be preferable to hold out encouragement to the emigrants who arrive annually at St. John's and the out-ports. It may be observed, served, that during the last year, the utmost encouragement was given by me to these emigrants, who are almost exclusively from Ireland, and of the poorest class; and the exertions of the emigrant societies were directed to this object.

When I visited St. John, St. Andrew's, and Miramichi, in the last year, I used every argument, and held out every inducement to them to settle in the country, after the employment in those ports had ceased, which usually terminates with the departure of the spring ships. They were however for the most part decided to join their friends in the United States, by whose advice they had emigrated, their object in coming to these ports having been to obtain temporary employment at high wages, and to proceed afterwards to the United States without being subject to the emigrant tax in those ports, either by embarking in the steamers from St. John's to Boston, or by crossing the St. Croix at St. Andrew's, or St. Stephen's. The emigrants who have settled here in the last year have chiefly been Irish; and I regret to say, that the party distinctions they have assumed have tended to excite amongst the old colonists a mistrust of that class of settlers under the political influences to which they are subject, which has tended to discourage an active co-operation in the measures of the Government. This feeling, however, will subside if not re-excited by the press, and the injudicious conduct attributed to some individuals.

The emigrant societies have been thus incited to engage in promoting emigration from England and Scotland, and have applied that certain tracts of land may be reserved for emigrant parties who are expected to arrive during the summer. It is probable that the Irish labourers, who form the great majority of emigrants to Canada, will find effective employment in the public works now carrying on in that province, and their improved habits of temperance are favourable to their success.

Your Lordship is aware, from the population returns laid before Parliament in the last year, that the majority of the British emigrants repair to the United States, and of the Irish to the provinces. Thus in 1840, there emigrated to the

And the disproportion is rather less, as the greater part of the Irish who emigrate to this province pass over to the United States. As a great number of most respectable English emigrants with capital have thus emigrated to the United States, I regard it with much satisfaction that circumstances are at present inducing them to repair to this province, where they are able to purchase farms on favourable terms; and as their correspondence with their friends will be the most effectual means of inducing others to come out, the agency of the British consuls in Boston and New York will not be required, especially in a season when, from financial and commercial difficulties, there is a limitation of the ordinary employment to those who are destitute of resources. The purchase of farms by emigrants who arrive with capital, promotes the settlement of the wilderness; as the old colonists who sell their farms speculate on the occupation of new lands, and are very efficient in the work of clearing and reclaiming them, though less able to introduce improved tillage, with which the English farmers are conversant. The means of abridging labour in husbandry should be attended to in new countries, and the improved management of land, so as to obtain from it the greatest amount and variety of produce. The county agricultural societies are zealous in promoting these objects, which may be practically advanced by the formation of emigrant settlements from England, composed of small farmers, mechanics, and labourers, who have been trained to the management of land on the Belgian system, and where the allotment system has obtained. It would not be necessary that such settlements should be formed on wilderness lands only, as eligible farms of sufficient extent, with farm buildings well adapted, are to be purchased on reasonable terms; but there are also some excellent tracts of unreclaimed land in favourable situations throughout the province; and I would be glad to promote such settlements on the Indian Reserves, which would hold out a beneficial example to that class of people, and afford them the means of instruction in improved arts and trades. On this subject, I propose separately to address your Lordship, and from the influence which the Land and Emigration Commissioners are able to exert in promoting a great national object, I am anxious that the views which I have explained in my former despatches as the result of my own experience, may be brought under their consideration.

Referring to my former observations on the formation of close settlements of labourers, allowing them to purchase allotments of limited extent upon credit, being strongly impressed with the practical advantages of this system, I wish to explain to your Lordship, that the practice of requiring such settlers to redeem their bonds by instalments, may be considered to have failed, either from the inability of the settlers to pay the instalments when due, and to obtain a title, or from the advantage to them from other employment of their capital; the practice prevailing in the Dutch colonies, and also, I believe, in the British islands of Jersey and Guernsey, where small proprietors are numerous and prosperous, of retaining a subsisting mortgage on their lands, and paying interest as a virtual rent, is attended with many advantages in new countries, which are unprepared for the occupation of lands by improving tenants. The labour of improving wilderness lands requires the stimulus of a direct interest in such improvements, which are encouraged by thus facilitating the transfer of farms, on moderate terms. Hence it is not unusual, where this practice obtains, for neighbouring settlers reciprocally to hold subsisting mortgages on the farms of each other, and for numerous members of colonial families to invest their capital in this form, from their confidence in the resident proprietor, whose interest in the farm, though thus limited in amount, is strengthened by the direct advantage to himself of all improvements, and the facility with which he may realize his capital by a transfer with the consent of the mortgagees, such transfers rendering the acquisition of farms on easy terms practicable to emigrants. I have regarded the settlements which are now in progress as favourable to these results; the work done during the winter, by the settlers, could not have been performed by emigrants newly arrived, and unaccustomed to labour in the woods at such a season; nor would it probably have been experimentally undertaken at such a season by any who had otherwise possessed the means of subsistence. It has proved what enterprise and skill can effect under such circumstances, and has also shown that the winter season may be profitably occupied by the colonial farmer, who has been too apt to regard it as a period for suspension of farm work, by which he has been allured to engage in lumbering, and to neglect his farm, by which many have been ruined.

It is probable that these settlers will not desire to redeem their bonds, as the payment of interest on the purchase-money will not be burthensome, nor do I think it will be advisable to require such payments from their resources, which may be better employed; and the example of their success may lead to private speculation in the application of capital to the formation of such settlements, and the improvement of contiguous lands by the labour of the settlers.

In the hope that these observations may be useful to your Lordship and to the Land and Emigration Commissioners,

I have, &c.

The Lord Sandon arrived here on the 28th April with 224 souls on board, many of whom are connected in the country, and immediately joined their friends. I received no official list of the passengers.

Lord Stanley, it appears, will not proceed with the Passengers' Act in Parliament till June, in order to let the spring emigration pass over before the alterations become law.

I have also the honour to acquaint the Lieutenant-governor that I recently received a communication from a most respectable body of freeholders at St. Stephen's, informing me of the formation of an emigrant society there, and expressing their desire to become a branch of the St. John's Society, and to transmit their reports and other documents to his Excellency through that channel. I look forward to much ulterior benefit to immigrant settlement through the aid of this association, and they will be the most efficient and economical means of locating the "Albert tract" in that vicinity. One point is truly worthy of notice; the society is a harmonious union of loyal natives with their brethren, subjects of England, Scotland, and Ireland, Protestant and Catholic. I am in hopes to conciliate similar feelings towards the cause in other counties.

My Lord, King's House, 30 December 1840.

PENDING the regular transmission of the Acts of the late Legislative Session in this island, I have the honour to submit a printed copy of the one relating to immigration, No. 3382.

2. The objection expressed by your Lordship to a contract for three years between employers and immigrants, sanctioned by the last Act, has been removed in this by limiting the period of engagement to one year, and by providing that engagements shall be terminable by three months' notice.

3. There are additional provisions for the establishment of villages of immigrants, and for granting lands, which will, I trust, be deemed unobjectionable.

4. Parties engaging immigrants are relieved by the new Act from paying a moiety of the passage-money, the whole of which will be paid by the island.

5. There are other alterations in details, but those above-mentioned appear to me to be the most material.

JAMAICA AMENDED EMIGRATION ACT.

CAP. XXIII.

4 Vict. chap. 23.

AN ACT to repeal and amend an Act, intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration."—(11 December 1840.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend and enlarge the provisions of an Act, intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration;" be it enacted by the Governor, Council and Assembly of this island, that from and after the passing of this Act, the said recited Act be and stand repealed: And whereas it is expedient, for the continued cultivation of this island, that provision should be made for increasing the labouring population thereof; be it enacted by the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's island of Jamaica, and it is hereby enacted and ordained by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Governor for the time being, from time to time, to nominate and appoint such person as he shall see fit, as Agent-general of immigrants, and who shall be paid an annual salary of One thousand pounds sterling, which the Receiver-general is hereby authorized to pay by four quarterly payments.

Governor empowered to nominate an agent-general.

Sub-agents to be nominated by Governor for respective parishes.

2. And be it further enacted, That the Governor, or person exercising the functions of Governor, is hereby authorized to appoint, in the respective parishes of this island, according as the exigencies of this Act shall require, one or more sub-agents, under the direction and control of the said agent-general, with full power to the Governor, from time to time, to dismiss such sub-agents, and appoint others in their room, if he shall think proper, with power to allow to such sub-agents such remuneration as he may deem fit, on representation by the agent-general of the services performed.

How persons desirous of locating emigrants are to proceed.

3. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who may be desirous of locating immigrants, under the provisions of this Act, on any property may and shall make application to one of the sub-agents hereinbefore mentioned, fully setting forth, in writing, proposals for the situation of such intended location, and the number and description of the immigrants required, the nature of the labour to be performed, the rate of wages, with any advantages, such as the use of provision grounds, medical attendance, with all other particulars; and every such application, with the above particulars, shall be by them transmitted to the said agent-general, to be by him transmitted to the several agents, hereinafter provided, in the several places or ports from whence emigrants are to be shipped, for their information and guidance.

4. And

Governor empowered to nominate commissioner to engage emigrants.

4. And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Governor to nominate and appoint a commissioner, to proceed to the United States of America, and thence to Great Britain, or elsewhere, for the purpose of carrying into effect the object of this Act, by making all necessary inquiries as to the description of people most likely to suit the colony, and appointing agents for contracting with, and embarking emigrants under the provisions of this Act.

Governor to name places whence labourers are not entitled to the advantages of this Act.

5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Governor to name the several ports and places from whence labourers coming to this island shall not be entitled to the benefit of this Act.

In case of commissioner neglecting to name an agent at any port selected, Governor to name one.

6. And be it further enacted, That at any port or place from time to time selected by the Governor, it shall be lawful, in case the commissioner hereinbefore provided shall not have appointed such agent, for the Governor to appoint some fit and proper person as an agent, for the purpose of facilitating the immigration of labourers into this island, and to allow to such agents, and likewise to the commissioner hereinbefore provided, such remuneration (to be paid by the agent-general) as to the Governor may seem reasonable: Provided always, That such remuneration shall not in any case be given merely in proportion to the number of emigrants sent to this island by any such agent.

Proviso.

Agent-general to give security for 12,000 l. sterling.

7. And be it further enacted, That the agent-general shall find good and sufficient security faithfully and justly to discharge the duties of his office; such security to be approved of by the Governor, and to be to the amount of Twelve thousand pounds.

Duty of agent-general.

8. And be it enacted, That such agent shall ascertain, by personal communication with every emigrant previous to his or her embarkation from the port or place for which such agent shall have been appointed, that such emigrant has not been induced to emigrate by any fraud, or false or unreasonable representation, and is aware of the distance of this island from the place whither he or she is about to emigrate, and the difficulty of return; and such agent shall explain the real advantages likely to be derived by such emigrant from a removal to this island, at the same time cautioning such emigrant against unreasonable and unwarranted expectations; and such agent shall also ascertain that every such emigrant is in good health, and not incapacitated for labour by old age, infirmity, or disease.

Regulations for vessels employed to bring emigrants.

9. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful to ship on board of any ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this island, any number of passengers exceeding the proportion of Three persons for every Five tons (old measurement) of the registered burden of such ship or vessel, the master and crew being included in and forming a part of such prescribed number; and that no ship or vessel carrying emigrants, and having more than one deck, shall have less than the height of Five feet and a half at the least between decks; and in case such ship or vessel shall have only one deck, a platform shall be laid beneath such deck, in such manner as to afford a space of the height of Five feet and a half at the least, and that no such ship or vessel shall have more than two tiers of berths, and that no such ship or vessel having two tiers of berths shall carry passengers on any such voyage to this island, unless there shall be an interval of Six inches at the least between the deck or platform and the floor of the lower tier throughout the whole extent thereof; and whatever may be the tonnage of the ship or vessel, no greater number of passengers shall be taken on board such ship or vessel than shall be after the rate of One such person for every Ten superficial feet of the lower deck or platform, in case the length of the voyage, as hereinafter computed, shall not exceed the period of Ten weeks, or after the rate of One such person for every Fifteen superficial feet of such lower deck or platform; if the computed length shall exceed Ten weeks, such platform or deck to be unoccupied by goods or stores not being the personal baggage of such persons.

How children are to be computed.

10. And be it further enacted, That in the computation of the number of passengers within the meaning of this Act, Two children, each being under the age of Fourteen years, or Three children, each being under the age of Three years, shall in all cases be computed as One person only; and that children under the age of Twelve months shall not be included in such computation.

Provision for the quantity of water, food, &c. to be laid in by vessels carrying emigrants.

11. And be it further enacted, That there shall be actually laden and on board of every ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island, at the time of the departure of such ship or vessel from the port or place at which such labourers shall be embarked, good and wholesome provisions for the use and consumption of the said passengers, over and above the victualling of the crew, to the amount or in the proportion following; that is to say, a supply of pure water, to the amount of Five gallons to every week of the computed voyage, for every passenger on board such ship or vessel; such water to be carried in tanks or sweet casks; and a supply of bread, biscuit, oatmeal, or bread stuffs, to the amount of Seven pounds' weight to every week of the computed voyage, for every such passenger: Provided always, That when any such ship or vessel shall be destined to call at a port or place in the course of her voyage, for the purpose of filling up her water-casks, a supply of water at the rate before-mentioned for every week of an average voyage to such port or place of calling, shall be deemed to be a compliance with this Act.

Proviso.

Time deemed necessary to accomplish voyage to Jamaica.

12. And be it further enacted, That the number of weeks deemed to be necessary for the voyage of any such ship or vessel to the island of Jamaica shall be determined by the following rate of computation; that is to say, for a voyage from the United States of America, Five weeks; for a voyage from the British possessions in North America, Six weeks; for a voyage from the Coast of Africa, north of Cape Palmas, Seven weeks, and south of Cape Palmas, Palmas, Eleven weeks; for a voyage from Malta or other port or place in the Mediterranean, Nine weeks; from any port of Great Britain or Ireland, Nine weeks; and from any place to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, Twenty-one weeks.

Provisions, &c., to be surveyed previous to vessel clearing out.

13. And be it further enacted, That before any such ship or vessel shall be cleared out on any such voyage, the agent appointed under this Act for the port or place from which such ship or vessel shall be cleared out, shall survey or cause to be surveyed by some competent person, the provisions and water hereinbefore required to be on board for the consumption of the passengers, and shall ascertain that the same are in good and sweet condition; and also that, over and above the same, there is on board an ample supply of water and stores for the victualling of the crew of the ship or vessel, and shall also ascertain that such ship or vessel is generally reputed seaworthy, and that the directions hereinbefore contained, for securing the health and safety of the passengers, have been complied with, and shall grant a certificate thereof, under his hand, to the master of such ship or vessel.

Master of vessel bound to supply emigrants with proper provision, and families during the voyage, and 48 hours after the arrival of the vessel here.

14. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island, shall be bound to provide for and furnish to every such emigrant and his wife and children a sufficient quantity of good and wholesome provisions for his, her and their daily maintenance during such voyage, and during the space of forty-eight hours next after the arrival of such ship or vessel in this island, unless in any case it shall have been expressly stipulated and agreed between any such emigrant and the master of such ship or vessel, that such emigrant, his wife and children, shall not be entitled to such maintenance.

Two authenticated copies of this Act to be delivered by agent to captain of vessel. Captain must produce Act when called on by passengers.

15. And be it further enacted, That Two copies of this Act, authenticated by the signature of the agent at the port or place from whence such emigrant shall come, shall be delivered to the master, on demand, by such agent, at the time of clearance, and shall be kept on board of every ship or vessel carrying such emigrants as aforesaid; and that one of such copies shall, upon request made at seasonable times to the master of the ship or vessel, be produced to any passenger for his perusal.

Directions for the captain of vessel, previous to clearing out from port, and on his arrival in this island.

16. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this colony, shall, before clearing out such ship or vessel, deliver to such agent, at the port or place at which such ship or vessel shall be cleared out, a list in writing, together with a duplicate of the same, specifying, as accurately as may be, the names, ages, and occupations of all and every the emigrants on board such ship or vessel; and such agent shall thereupon deliver to the said master a counterpart of such list, signed by such agent; and the said master shall, on the arrival of such ship or vessel in this island, and previous to the disembarkation of any such emigrants, give notice of the arrival of such ship or vessel, and deliver the said counterpart of such list to such agent-general or sub-agent of immigration; and such agent-general or sub-agent shall forthwith proceed on board of such ship or vessel, and shall ascertain as far as possible, by personal inspection of the ship or vessel and passengers, whether the directions hereinbefore contained with regard to the situation of the berth of such ship or vessel, the proportion of the passengers to the burden and measurement of such ship or vessel, and the maintenance of the emigrants during such passage, have been complied with; and such agent-general or sub-agent shall personally muster such emigrants, and compare the number and names of such emigrants with the counterpart of such lists, and shall certify in writing under his hand, upon such counterpart, the total number of emigrants then living and being on board of such vessel; and in case any such emigrant shall have died during the passage, or the number or names of the emigrants shall differ from the number or names stated in such counterpart, the agent-general or sub-agent shall note such death or difference upon such counterpart, and thereupon shall grant a license, under his hand, for the disembarkation and landing of such emigrants.

Directions to agents.

Receiver-general to pay such sums as agent shall certify.

17. And be it further enacted, That if the agent-general or sub-agent, on such personal inspection of the ship or vessel and emigrants, shall be satisfied that the provisions of this Act have been complied with, he shall grant a certificate, under his hand, of the arrival in this island of such emigrants respectively, and the place from which, and the ship or vessel in which such emigrants shall have arrived, and the sums of money payable in respect of emigrants; and such sums shall be paid by the receiver-general, on the warrant of such agent-general.

Agent to make annual report of sums so paid, and submit them to Governor, &c.

18. And be it further enacted, That such agent-general shall keep a register of all persons in respect of whom any such certificate as aforesaid shall be granted, and of the ship or vessel in which, the port from which, and the time at which such persons shall have arrived in this island, which registry shall be made up to the Thirtieth day of September in each year, and copies thereof laid before the Governor, Council and House of Assembly, at their first meeting.

Penalty on masters of vessels infringing this Act.

19. And be it enacted, That if any such ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island shall carry any number of passengers exceeding by more than One person in Fifty, the proportion authorized and allowed by this Act, or if such ship or vessel shall not be of the height between decks hereinbefore required, or if such a platform as hereinbefore directed shall not be laid and continued throughout the whole duration of any such voyage, in such manner as is hereinbefore required, or if there shall be more than two tiers of berths, or if there shall not be throughout the whole duration of any such voyage such an interval as is hereinbefore prescribed between the deck and the floor of the lower tier of berths, or if any such such ship or vessel shall clear out and put to sea, not having on board such water and provisions as aforesaid, for the use and consumption of the passengers, of the kind and to the amount, and in the proportion hereinbefore directed, or if any such ship or vessel shall be cleared out before such lists of emigrants shall have been delivered in manner and form aforesaid, or if any such list shall be wilfully false, or if the copy of this Act be not produced as hereinbefore required, or if any emigrant shall be maltreated, or shall not be maintained during such voyage and for forty-eight hours after his arrival (except in the case of a special agreement to the contrary), the master of any such ship or vessel shall, for and in respect of each and every such offence, be liable, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace in this island, at any time within the space of Twelve calendar months next after the arrival of such master within this island, to the payment of a fine not less than Five pounds nor more than Twenty pounds sterling; and in default of payment of such fine, either immediately, or at the time fixed by such justices at the time of making such conviction, to imprisonment in the house of correction of such parish in which the conviction shall have taken place, for any time not less than One nor more than Three calendar months.

Information must be laid within twelve months.

20. Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That nothing herein contained shall take away or abridge any right of suit or action which may accrue to any emigrant in any such ship or vessel, or to any other person, in respect of the breach or non-performance of any contract made or entered into between or on the behalf of any such emigrant or other person and the master, owner or owners of any such ship or vessel.

Emigrant not debarred right of suit arising legally.

21. And be it enacted, That where any act, matter or thing is by this Act directed to be done or performed by, to or with the agent at any port or place, the same, in case there shall be no such agent, or such agent shall be absent or incapable to act, shall or may be done or performed by the Governor or Lieutenant-governor, or any person appointed for the purpose by the Governor or Lieutenant-governor of the port or place, if the same shall be a British possession, or by the British Consul or Vice-consul of the port or place, if the same shall not be a British possession from whence such ship or vessel shall be cleared out.

Governor, &c., of British possessions, and Consul at foreign station, authorized to act in case of there being no agent, &c.

22. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained, in respect of the proportion to be observed between the number of passengers and the registered burden of such ship or vessel, or in respect to the situation of the berths of such ship or vessel, or to the superficial measurement of the deck or platform of such ship or vessel, or to the provisions to be laden on board of such ship or vessel, or with respect to the counterpart of the list to be certified on the certificates to be granted at the port or place of embarkation, shall extend to any ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this island, in case where the number of persons shall not exceed the number of One person for every Five tons (old measurement) of the registered burden of such ship or vessel, or to any case where the number of emigrants arriving in any ship or vessel at one and the same time shall not exceed the number of Twelve, or to any ship or vessel in the service of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Admiralty, or in the service of Her Majesty's Postmaster-general, or of the East India Company; but in all such cases no passage or maintenance money shall be allowed or paid in respect of such emigrants, unless the agent-general or sub-agent of immigrants shall have first ascertained, by personal inspection of the ship or vessel and passengers, that such emigrants have not been induced to emigrate by any fraud, or false or unreasonable representations, and that every proper care and attention has been paid, by the master of such ship or vessel, to the health, comfort and safety of such emigrants during the passage, and shall have certified the same to the Governor, by certificate under his hand.

Persons breaking the provisions of this Act, not entitled to any of the benefits herein provided.

Agent's certificate required.

23. And be it further enacted, That in every case where immigrants are imported under the provisions of this Act, One-third at the least of such immigrants shall consist of females.

One-third imported must be females.

24. And be it further enacted, That no immigrant arriving in this island, under the provisions of this Act, or otherwise, shall be required to serve in the militia, except in the case of martial law.

Emigrants exempted from militia duty.

25. And be it further enacted, That the said agent-general shall render to the commissioners of public accounts quarterly statements of the number of immigrants imported, and of the monies expended under this Act.

Quarterly returns of number imported to be rendered to commissioners of accounts.

26. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said agents to use all such means as may be requisite to procure persons willing to immigrate to this island, and to lay before such persons the proposals that may be transmitted to the said agents, and fully to explain the same, and to embark such persons for this island, and to defray the expense of conveying such persons to the port of embarkation, or incidental thereon, or to enter into arrangement with any person or persons willing to defray such expense, or any part thereof, and to agree for the passage-money, and for the proper care, feeding and accommodation on ship-board, as hereinbefore prescribed, and the landing in this island of such immigrants, and generally to make such arrangements as may be requisite: Provided always, That previous to the embarkation of any immigrants, they, he or she shall give an acknowledgment in writing to the said agent, which shall be valid and in full force in this island, that they, he or she shall be liable for the due repayment of the passage-money and expenses incidental on their embarkation and importation, if, on their arrival in this island, they, he or she shall refuse to enter into and complete the proposals shown to them as aforesaid, in consequence of which they had agreed to emigrate (of which proposals

Agent-general may remit funds requisite to carry Act into effect, and authorize payment of drafts made by sub-agents.

27. And be it further enacted, That for meeting the expenses of the said agents in the discharge of their duties, under the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the said agent-general from time to time to transmit and lodge in the hands of such banking-house in London, as to him shall seem fit, such sums of money as may be requisite for the said purpose, upon the usual terms, and shall authorize such banking-house to pay and discharge the drafts of such authorized agents as aforesaid, of whom due information is to be given to the said banking-house; and with each such draft the said agent shall forward to the said banking-house, in duplicate, and by the first mail packet, to the said agent-general in duplicate, a particular account of the expenses for which each separate draft shall be so drawn.

Emigrants may make their own agreements.

Location of emigrants.

29. And whereas it is necessary to provide that immigrants shall not be exposed to liability of sickness, privations and hardships, from being engaged by persons who might employ such immigrants in low and unhealthy situations to which, without having been duly acclimated, they are not adapted, or by persons not having adequate means for their support, or proper dwellings for their reception; be it enacted, That if any person or persons shall engage the service of any European field labourer within three years after their arrival in this island, and who may have been imported under the provisions of this Act, and shall locate in dwellings, or employ in labour such field labourers as are herein contemplated, in or upon any situation or place not approved of by the agent-general, without such written permission as hereinbefore directed, such person or persons, whether owner or acting manager, or person in possession of any lands on which such immigrants shall be so employed or located, with the privity of such person or persons owning, managing or in possession, without such written permission, any or either of them shall be liable, for each and every such offence, to a penalty not exceeding Thirty pounds, with full costs, for each immigrant so employed or located as aforesaid, to be recovered in a summary manner before any two justices of the peace; and enforced by warrant of distress under the hands and seals of the said two justices; the said penalty or penalties to be one-half to the informer, and one-half to the collecting constable, for the use of the parish; and in default of goods whereon to levy, the said offender to be liable to imprisonment for any time not exceeding Two months: Provided, That nothing herein shall be taken to prevent any person or persons from employing or locating in dwellings any European domestic servants, or such European immigrants intended to be employed as pen-keepers, shepherds or ploughmen, or as tradesmen, without the approval of the agent-general; nor shall the restrictions stated be taken to apply to any European emigrants who may come to this island from the United States of America, or any European climate, who shall show that they have been not less than Three years in such countries from whence they have embarked for this island.

Agent to supply proprietors applying with suitable labourers.

30. And whereas it is expedient to give encouragement to the proprietors of estates in this island to send out labourers; be it enacted, That in case any such proprietor shall apply to any agent appointed under this Act, it shall be the duty of such agent, and he is hereby required to see that the persons so intended to be sent out are of a proper description, and also that the rules and conditions prescribed by this Act, for their proper accommodation and protection on board of ship, are strictly complied with; in which case, upon the arrival of the vessel in this island, and presentation to the agent-general of the counterpart list of the persons on board, as hereinbefore provided, it shall be lawful for the agent-general, and he is hereby required to pay to the importer or his agent the expense incurred in sending out such persons, provided that the expense so incurred shall not exceed what is customary from the port of their embarkation; and provided also that they are approved of by the agent-general as a proper description of people for the location intended.

Proviso.

Receiver-general to supply the requisite sums to agent-general.

31. And be it further enacted, for the raising and supplying of the funds requisite for the purposes of this Act, That it shall and may be lawful for the said agent-general from time to time to draw upon the Receiver-general for the time being for such sums as may be required in each and every year, not exceeding in the whole the sum of Fifty thousand pounds sterling in any one year; and the Receiver-general for the time being is hereby authorized and directed to pay such orders or drafts out of any names he may have in his hands applicable thereunto.

32. And

32. And be it further enacted, That the said agent-general, by and with the consent of the Governor for the time being, shall have full power to make such bye-laws and regulations for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act as to him shall seem fit and proper. Agent empowered to enact bye-laws.

33. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of dispute between immigrants imported under this Act, and their employers, any two justices of the peace shall have full authority, and are hereby empowered to adjudicate upon the same, and to make such order thereon as to them shall seem just and equitable in the complaint made, and if deemed necessary, to annul and make void any contract or indenture between the parties, and to impose a fine on either party, not exceeding the sum of Twenty pounds sterling, to be recovered by warrant of distress, under the hands and seals of the said justices; the said fine to be paid to the collecting constable for the use of the parish; and in default of goods whereon to levy, the offender to be committed to the house of correction for any time not exceeding Thirty days, unless the fine be sooner paid; and in all such cases it shall be lawful for the said justices to examine the plaintiff or defendant, or either, upon oath. Disputes arising between employers and emigrants to be adjudicated by two justices of the peace.

34. And be it further enacted, That the agent-general be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to purchase land for the formation of villages for the settlement of European immigrants in such parishes as the Governor or person exercising the functions of Governor of this island for the time being may approve, not exceeding Twenty acres, in any one place or part of such parish, whereon to build and erect cottages of such description as may appear best suited to the agent-general, for the purposes contemplated by this Act: Provided, That none of the said cottages shall cost more than Fifty pounds sterling; such cottages to have a garden attached, consisting of not more than One-half of an acre of land; and that no parish shall have more than Two villages erected during the continuance of the present Act, nor shall more than Four villages be commenced or completed in any One year: And provided, That the whole amount to be expended in the formation of such villages shall not in any One year exceed the sum of Six thousand pounds sterling. Agent-general empowered to purchase land and build villages. Proviso. Proviso.

35. And be it further enacted, That emigrants shall be imported, suited to the location of the said villages, and to the description of labour usually obtained in the neighbourhood of such villages, and who shall be placed in the several cottages on their arrival, the said immigrants agreeing to pay such rent as may be fixed on by the agent-general; and a sufficient sum of money or rations shall be allowed each such immigrant for their support, for a period not exceeding Two weeks; after which each immigrant, or family of immigrants, shall be left to their own industry and exertions. Emigrants to pay rent.

36. And be it further enacted, That on the completion of not less than Twenty cottages in any such village or villages, a fit and proper person shall be appointed a schoolmaster, at an annual salary not exceeding Fifty pounds sterling, and be allowed a cottage rent-free: Provided he shall, by a written agreement to be by him entered into with the agent-general, bind himself to teach the children of the village in reading, writing and arithmetic, at a rate not exceeding Three-pence sterling per week for each scholar. Provision for schoolmasters. Proviso.

37. And be it further enacted, That all immigrants imported under the provisions of this Act, upon their settling in any of such villages, shall have the right of purchasing the cottages in which they shall reside, or any other that may be unoccupied, by means of any monies which such immigrants may have brought with them to this island, or have acquired by means of their industry since their arrival in this island, at a valuation to be fixed on by any Two respectable tradesmen, one to be appointed by the agent-general, and the other by such immigrant desiring to purchase such cottage; and, upon a moiety of the purchase-money being paid down, a title shall be lodged in the hands of the rector of the parish in which the village shall be situate, to be delivered to the purchaser on his or her producing a receipt of the payment of the remaining moiety, such remaining moiety to be paid by Two yearly instalments, with interest at the rate of Six per centum; and all rent shall cease from the day on which the first moiety shall be paid. Emigrants may purchase the cottages in which they reside. Time allowed for payments of one moiety.

38. And be it further enacted, That on the purchase of any land for the purposes of this Act, the title thereto shall be taken in the name of the rector and churchwardens of the parish in which such lands are situate, who are hereby empowered to grant titles to immigrants desirous of purchasing cottages as hereinbefore mentioned. Rector and churchwardens appointed trustees for land purchased.

39. And be it further enacted, That the agent-general shall and he is hereby required to account quarterly for all monies that he may receive under the provisions of this Act with the commissioners of public accounts; and which monies shall be applicable to the general purposes of this Act. Agent-general to render quarterly accounts.

40. And be it further enacted, That the several agents in America, Great Britain and Ireland, and elsewhere, by virtue of a power to them for that purpose to be granted by the agent-general, shall and they are hereby required to offer grants of land to emigrants of good character, of America, Great Britain and Ireland, and such parts of Europe where it may be supposed such offer will meet with attention; such grants of land to be in proportion to the amount of capital such emigrant may bring with them to this island; the land so to be granted at no time to exceed in value the amount for which such emigrant will engage to expend on the buildings to be erected, and in the cultivation of such lands: Provided always, That no emigrant taking such grants of land shall be allowed to sell or give away the same under Ten years subsequent to such grant, and until they shall have satisfied the Agents may offer grants of land to emigrants. Proviso.

the proper authorities that the amount agreed on shall have been expended as hereinbefore contemplated.

Encouragement to inhabitants of towns to settle in the interior.

41. And be it further enacted, That in case any of the inhabitants of the several towns of this island, who may have a desire to settle in the interior districts of this island, shall have grants of land secured to them on their entering into bond with sufficient security, engaging to put up all necessary buildings, and to cultivate the said lands to be so granted, subject to the like proviso contained in the preceding clause with respect to immigrants.

Parties importing emigrants under late Act to be reimbursed.

42. And be it further enacted, That parties who may have located emigrants under the Act to encourage immigration, and passed last session, and who may have paid a moiety of the expense of importing such immigrants, be refunded the said moiety so paid, and that the agent-general be authorized to refund the same.

Act to be in force to 31 December 1842.

43. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall be and continue in force until the Thirty-first day of December One thousand eight hundred and Forty-two, and no longer.

Extract Despatch from Lord John Russell to Sir C. T. Metcalfe, 30 April 1841.

WITH reference to my despatch, No. 217, of the 26th instant, in which I informed you that many of the Acts of the last Jamaica session were under reference to other departments of Her Majesty's Government, I have now the honour to acquaint you that the Act, No. 3382, amending the Immigration Act of the previous Session, having embodied the suggestions contained in my despatch, No. 128, of the 16th September, Her Majesty will be advised to leave it to its operation.

I enclose for your information an extract from the Report of the Commissioners of Colonial Land and Emigration on this Act, containing some information which may be useful to the Legislature in their reconsideration of this subject.

No. 3.
Extract Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq. 8 April 1841.

IT remains to notice two additional sets of provisions, one relating to the settlement of European immigrants in villages, and the other offering to the inhabitants of the island, and to immigrants, free grants of lands, upon conditions of improvement. The first of the plans contemplated by these enactments, and probably both, would appear to be especially intended for the benefit of immigrants, and we should hope that the former, at any rate, will be productive to them of real advantage. We feel assured, also, that Lord John Russell will notice with satisfaction the provision made by the 35th clause, for the important object of education. If this village system should prove beneficial, we hope it is probable that its advantages will be extended to others besides European emigrants. With respect, on the other hand, to the 39th and 40th clauses, which authorize free grants of land to be made upon certain conditions of improvement, we do not quite understand whether those provisions are intended to apply to immigrants of the labouring classes, but certainly there are no words in them limiting their operation; and as they mention grants in proportion to capital, there appears reason to presume that their effect was intended to be general. We are obliged, therefore, to make the remark, that in every part of the world where it has hitherto been tried, the practice of making free grants of land, with whatever conditions it may be accompanied, has always proved disadvantageous; that the enforcement of those conditions has never been found practicable, and that, owing to the economic evils introduced by it, the system has not merely been a waste of the resources of each colony where it has existed, but has further inflicted a positive and serious injury. With regard to persons of capital, the best proof that an individual possesses the requisite funds for the improvement of lands, and intends to apply them, is the fact of his being willing to pay a fair price for the property. On the other hand, as regards people of the humbler classes, a very general experience has shown, that excepting, perhaps, occasional small allotments as a remedy against destitution, the making of free grants only withdraws them them prematurely from the condition of labourers, and does them no real good, while it hurts the general interests of the community. It is no doubt very likely that the customs connected with former times in the West Indies may still render it expedient that labourers should be placed in possession of provision grounds; but we presume that if such be the case, the land ought to be supplied from the estates of the parties who take the labourers into employment.

We are far from offering an opinion, whether these considerations should constitute a sufficient objection to the confirmation of the present Act, of only temporary duration, and containing within itself so many important provisions, conducive to the welfare of the island. But if Lord John Russell should approve of the remarks just thrown out, we cannot help thinking that the point is one to which it would be desirable to call Sir Charles Metcalfe's attention; and that in any re-enactment of the laws, it would be well to endeavour to prevent the insertion of such provisions as would expose Jamaica to the danger of the same evils which other colonies have experienced from free grants.

EXTRACT from Mr. Special Justice Hewitt's Report, dated Buff Bay, St. George's, 1 December 1841.

NO villages have as yet been formed in St. George, though the climate of the mountains and the fertility of the soil render it a most excellent situation for the location of European immigrants; the vicinity, too, to the Kingston market (about fifteen miles from the highlands) is peculiarly favourable to settlers.

African emigration, when tried, has succeeded remarkably well.

EXTRACT from Mr. Stipendiary Magistrate Peter Brown, dated Parish of Portland, Port Antonio, 14 October 1841.

THERE appears to be no regular laid out towns or villages in the interior, with the exception of "Moor Town," inhabited by the Maroons, and "Altamount," a township at which an attempt has been made to locate Scotch emigrants, but which has turned out a complete failure; the men, with two exceptions, having died, leaving a number of widows and children in a helpless and destitute state, to which several have fallen victims.

EXTRACT from Mr. Stipendiary Magistrate, Thomas M'Cormack, dated Golden Grove, St. Thomas the East, 1 September 1841.

I HAVE always been opposed to the immigration of white labourers, at least for the lowlands, and every day's experience confirms my opinion more strongly.

EXTRACT from Mr. Stipendiary Magistrate Thomas Abbott's Report, dated Savanna-la-Mar, 8 June 1841.

ON the subject of immigration it will perhaps be expected that I should say a few words, although the greater part of nearly 300 Irish and Scotch imported to this parish in January last have not been engaged in agriculture, but principally found employment as domestic servants and mechanics; some of them are located in the neighbouring parishes; on one estate in the highlands, about sixty are chiefly engaged in the field, and, I am informed, give great satisfaction; unfortunately a great many of the domestics have proved less successful in their situations, and have already left their employers. They appear to have felt much disappointment in their expectations of this country, no doubt in many instances too highly raised; I trust when they become more habituated to the great change they must have experienced, they may have no cause to regret leaving their native country. Many are very hard-working people, and from being accustomed to endure hardship at home, I think are likely to bear the climate of this country. I should observe that on several estates there are also a number of the liberated Africans located upwards of a twelvemonth; they generally are paid the same as the estates' negroes, work remarkably well, and give every satisfaction.

JAMAICA.

EXTRACT from Mr. Stipendiary Magistrate Hall Pringle's Report, dated Clarendon, 23 November 1841.

IT might be inferred from this statement that this state of things, in a pecuniary point of view, must necessarily be equally favourable to the European labourer: such is not the case. The white man requires a portion of his diet to consist of animal food to support his enervated frame; the negro seldom uses it. The white man cannot, like the negro, exist on a sweet potatoe or a cocoa, and on the salt and refuse of a herring barrel, nor can he live for weeks on the fruits of the country as the negro labourer frequently does; the negro with impunity can go unclothed in all seasons, in the noonday sun or under the midnight damps, defying the rains, and inhaling the malaria of the swamps with perfect safety. It is well known how fatal all this would be to the European, yet I have known white emigrants ignorantly expose themselves unnecessarily to all these dangers. The necessaries of life which the white labourer requires are precisely the same as in his native country (with the exception of firing), and these are only to be purchased at double the cost of the same articles in England; while his wages, estimating them at about 1*s.* 6*d.* sterling per day, are not higher than the wages which may be procured in England, and are much lower than are usual in other colonies, where the demand for labour is great, and the climate not of that dangerous description like the climate here. In this country, where sickness so much prevails, the charge to the poor for medicine and medical advice is from three to four times the price of the same in England; and with respect to food, the price of salt pork, not of the best quality, varies from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 1*s.* sterling per lb. The price of yams (used as a substitute for potatoes) has within the last four years varied from 12*s.* to 8*s.* sterling per cwt. The cost of these articles sufficiently, as an example, proves the excessive cost of the necessaries of life in this colony.

It is not to be inferred from these observations that I have any desire to retard the increase of population in Jamaica by emigration,—the country is not sufficiently peopled; but by my report to you, dated 1 January 1841, I then showed that the working population of Jamaica had been increased rather than diminished by the change of apprenticeship to freedom. I am satisfied that it is easy to prove that the colony cannot reap advantage from a system of immigration which drains it of capital, nor any permanent augmentation of the numbers of the population from the importation of white labourers, bound to servitude and depressed in spirit by disappointments, alternately the subject of the mockery of the free negro or the object of his pity. It is very possible that individual speculative proprietors of sugar estates and coffee properties having great command of capital may reap from this scheme a partial and present gain; but it would be difficult to show how the community can be benefited by the introduction of a population which (by deaths at the same ratio at which they have hitherto occurred) must in less than ten years disappear from the face of the earth.

No. 5.
Letter from Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 10 Nov. 1841

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,
Sir, Westminster, 10 November 1841.

WE request permission to direct Lord Stanley's attention to the subject of the free emigration which has taken place from the United Kingdom to Jamaica, since the passing of the Immigration Act in that colony.

An officer of the colonial government, styled the Commissioner of Immigration, arrived last year in this country, after visiting America, and on his way to Sierra Leone. He published accounts of the colony and of the demand for labour which existed there, and held out to the poor in different parts of the United Kingdom the expectation of certain advantages, which were minutely specified, as an inducement to them to emigrate to the colony. He appointed, as he was authorized to do by the Jamaica Act, emigration agents, to act on behalf of the island; and in conjunction with them, before he quitted this country, he made preparations for despatching a number of emigrants, not exceeding 1,000, to be taken, principally in families. He was in communication with our board, and we saw no reason to be dissatisfied with his proceedings. The promised rate of wages did not appear exaggerated; the emigrants were not to form contracts with employers until they arrived in the colony; due preparation was to have been made for their reception on an estate before a proprietor would be allowed to engage their services; and above all, ample security appeared to have been taken for their early removal to localities enjoying a temperate climate. They were also, it is to be observed, to land under the protection of the agent-general for immigrants, an officer who gives security to the amount of 12,000*l.* for the faithful and just discharge of his duties.

A strong

A strong feeling, however, arose, principally in Ireland, against the removal of persons of the labouring class to Jamaica; and it was carried to that height in respect to the ship "Robert Kerr," which was taking in emigrants at Limerick, that she was compelled to put to sea a month or six weeks before the time appointed for her sailing, without the full number of passengers; and though there were three steamers in the port, not one ventured to tow her down the river. After this, the emigration, which was not considerable, was carried on principally from the port of London, and excitement on the subject had, as far as we knew, subsided.

Having, however, recently seen in the newspapers accounts, professing to come from persons in Jamaica, of an ill-treatment of the emigrants who had arrived from the United Kingdom, and especially of a great mortality amongst those who had proceeded to the colony in the "Robert Kerr," we directed the Government emigration agent at Limerick to endeavour to ascertain whether any authentic information of the fate of these persons had been received by their friends and relatives in Ireland.

We have obtained from him in reply the enclosed letter, accompanied by two hand-bills, which he states had been posted about the town, and exhibited in shop-windows. The statements contained in these hand-bills, it will be observed, are calculated to induce the belief that the emigrants were imposed upon and deluded in this country; that they have not received the wages and the food which they were led to expect; that they have been forced to work in the "lowlands;" that they have been treated with neglect and cruelty by their masters, for which the law did not afford them redress; and that, in a great many instances, their sufferings had been terminated by death. If the facts stated in these publications be true, it is undoubtedly right that they should be made known; and that any renewal of the emigration from the United Kingdom should, if possible, be prevented. If they are not true, the statement of them is deeply injurious to the colony of Jamaica, and may create an ill-founded prejudice against emigration, and a distrust, on the part of the poor, of the promises and expectations held out to them by responsible parties, who may be instrumental in inducing them to quit their native country. 2.

As the accounts now published are very circumstantial, and the names of all the parties are given, together with the places where the events occurred, it would probably not be difficult to ascertain whether the alleged facts did actually occur, and whether the inference drawn from them, as to the treatment generally received by the emigrants from the United Kingdom, is correct. One point on which we think it would be most expedient to have authentic information is, whether there really exist any security against the employment of European labourers in the lowlands of the colony.

The subject is one which has already been adverted to in Parliament, and on which we think it likely that Her Majesty's Government would, on every account, desire to be furnished with full and accurate information. We, therefore, take the liberty of suggesting that the enclosed hand-bills, together with our present communication, may be referred to the Governor of Jamaica, with a view to his returning such explanation on the subject of them as he may be enabled to obtain.

We have, &c.

Government Emigration Office, Limerick,
1 November 1841.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, and beg to inform you, for the information of the Commissioners of Land and Emigration, that no information whatsoever had been communicated to me by any of the friends or relatives of the emigrants who had embarked in the "Robert Kerr." The only accounts I have had of their fate is that contained in the Dublin and Limerick newspapers from time to time, and also from printed bills posted some months past about this town, and exhibited in the shop-windows of those persons connected with the Anti-slavery Society, Dublin, two of which bills I enclose, for the information of the board. The Society of Friends here are very hostile to the Jamaica system of emigration, and are determined to oppose it at any future period.

On the receipt of your letter, I called on the proprietor of the Limerick Reporter, which paper warmly opposed the Jamaica system of emigration; from him I could glean nothing authentic; he said their information emanated from communications brought to their office, by letters, &c. &c.

JAMAICA EMIGRATION.

Fruits of the Nefarious Emigration Scheme.

Irishmen and Irishwomen committed to the pestilential West India Gaols!! just as the Slaves used to be!!!

Dismal state of the Emigrants by the "Robert Kerr."

Letters and newspapers have been received yesterday from Jamaica, giving a most deplorable account of those emigrants who went out by the "Robert Kerr," from this port. Twenty-one persons out of the one hundred and twenty-seven who went out by that vessel are stated to have died up to the 19th of April.

The following extracts will be read with interest:—

The Rev. Mr. M'Knibb, whose exertions are most enterprising in the cause of humanity and freedom, writes as follows:—

"I have arrived at Savana la Mar, on a missionary visit, last week, and the first objects that arrested my attention were two poor females, one in the last state of pregnancy, and both in utter destitution. Their husbands were in gaol, charged with a trifling theft, which had not been proved. Their tale of woe would pierce the heart of any one, except the slavery-loving gentry of Jamaica; for what they care, they may die in the streets, and there these would have perished, had they not been discovered, and provided for by my esteemed brother-missionary who resides here, the Rev. J. Hutchings. I have visited the men in the gaol, and care has been taken that the desolate women, who are nearly broken-hearted, have a shelter from the sun, and food to sustain their sinking frames.

"While in the gaol my attention was directed to a young female of the name of Eliza Kennedy, not 17 years of age, who came out in the 'William Pirrie,' from Belfast, a few weeks since. The gaol is situated in the centre of a morass, where death awaits his prey; and the inspector of emigrants is a Mr. Whitlock, one of the staunch colonial union men, famed for the destruction of chapels and thirst for missionary blood.

"Eliza Kennedy informed me that she had agreed with the senior magistrate of the parish, a Mr. Hilton, of Retirement, as a house servant, for 8 l. sterling per annum, including food and lodgings; that a few days after reaching Retirement, she was told by Mr. Hilton that the wages she was to receive was only 6 l., and that from it was to be deducted 17 s. 4 d. due to the vessel in which she came. On hearing this, she refused to work, and said if he was not satisfied, she would leave. The remainder is soon told; she was called into the house of her master, where two magistrates of the name of Mason were seated; being refused permission to call a witness to the verbal agreement, a Mary Ann Boyle, she was, in her master's house, by those two magistrates, sentenced to pay a fine of 3 l. sterling, to be levied on her goods, or, there being no goods, to be committed to gaol for fifteen days, fed on the coarsest food given to the vilest criminals. The gaol is eighteen miles from Retirement; through a burning sun she was walked, her feet so blistered, that she was obliged to rest a night on the road in some outhouse or other, conducted by one of our vile policemen, who are a disgrace to humanity, and is placed in gaol in Savana la Mar. The moment I heard her simple tale, told in the simplest manner, I paid the fine, not because it was just, but to rescue an innocent young creature from degradation and from death. The commitment, which is signed by two magistrates, states that she is thus sentenced 'for refusing to do the duty she had agreed upon to perform,' and that the sentence is in accordance with, and under the authority of, an Act to encourage emigration to this island. It is not directed to any gaoler or to any one else. I intend to try the validity, if I can, but with poor chance of justice in this country. Eliza Kennedy is now under the same roof as myself, and, if she chooses, shall remain in the mission family.

"I shall send this case to the Governor, and shall publish the facts; but let me implore you to prevent any others from coming here to perish and die. Many, even from the last vessel, are already gone into eternity, and others are exhibiting all the wretchedness of human woe."

Let our countrymen and countrywomen weigh well what the above contains, and they must conclude, that every thing pointed out to them by the Press and the Anti-slavery Society is now to be realised to those beings who, deaf to their remonstrance, went to Jamaica.—Morning Register.

Doctor Palmer writes as follows:—

"Lest I forget, let me here remark, that within the last twenty-four hours I have learned from credible authority, though I do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement, that out of the one hundred and twenty-seven Irish emigrants landed from the "Robert Kerr," no less

less than twenty-one have already gone to their account! fifteen in the neighbourhood of Kingstown, and six in the vicinity of Spanish Town.

"I denounce it as a gross and scandalous delusion from beginning to end. The reckless planters never will fulfil their promises, by means of which they are seducing the people from their homes. Let your people understand this distinctly. Look at the facts: the planters can get their work done, and well done, by black labourers, for wages averaging, when employed by day labour, and after deducting the amount of rent, to about 3*s.* or 4*s.* sterling per week; and yet they talk of giving white labourers, who cannot be expected to do equal work, from 5*s.* to 7*s.* 6*d.* per week, besides providing them with lodgings rent-free, medical attendance, &c. Is it reasonable to suppose that they sincerely design to fulfil such promises? No, no. Let them once get the poor creatures here, and they will make their own terms with them. Honor Glyn was promised 5*s.* or 6*s.* per day for comparatively light work, but when here she is compelled to accept about eight-pence a day. Eliza Kennedy is put into gaol for refusing to work for 6*l.* per annum,—a precious recompense for a voyage of 5,000 miles!

"It grieves me to the heart every time I hear of a fresh arrival, knowing, as I do, that, ere twelve months are over, fully one-half will be in their graves, and the remainder dragging out a life of misery and disappointment. Several thousands have been imported since 1834. Where are they now? I trust that every effort will be made to arrest this murderous scheme. Your people may be badly off; but they must be thought that it is better 'to bear the ills they have, than fly to those they know not of.' Picture to yourself a poor man with a wife and two or three children arriving here: suppose them drafted off to the mountains for their seasoning; they are put to work; they are given the coarse food on which the native labourers commonly subsist—cocoas or plantains, and salt herrings or shads. This diet even the poorest European labourer loathes and detests. Presently they break out with malignant ulcers on the feet and legs; they are unable to work, or even to walk (this is the case with the great majority of new-comers, both in high and low lands); whilst not working they of course get no wages; then comes neglect. Medical attendance, if supplied, is usually of the most indifferent description. Suppose the man, after several weeks' painful confinement, recovers; he goes to town to procure some little comforts for his family; he travels by night, to avoid the intense heat of the day; he imbibes the noxious miasma, and a day or two after his return is laid prostrate with a bilious remittent, or, perchance, with a yellow fever. In a few hours he is carried off, leaving his wife and helpless children in a state of utter destitution, in a strange land, with none to care for or sympathise with them. I am satisfied that in three cases out of every ten such will be the result of Europeans coming hither in the capacity of labourers. Go on in the work you have so nobly begun. Let it be dinned into the ears of your people, that Jamaica is no place for them; that they must place no faith in the fair promises held out to them; let them be warned that in coming here they rush upon almost certain destruction; and let any man who engages in the iniquitous kidnapping scheme be held up as an enemy, or the tool of an enemy.

"I have not heard any thing of the people who have been located with Dr. Spalding; but I apprehend that an awful tale will yet have to be disclosed. In stating that one of the poor Africans who were placed under the tender mercies of the Doctor had committed suicide, I find I was mistaken; it was two, not one, that destroyed themselves! I devoutly hope the Irish emigrants will not follow so dreadful an example. I have neither time nor space for more. Should I resume my paper, a large share of my attention will be devoted to the exposure of the wrongs of the emigrants; and I shall enter more into detail, and in better order, into the merits of the question. Pray excuse the slovenly and jumbled manner in which this is put together.

"I am, my dear friend, very sincerely yours,

"Richard Allen, Esq.,

Sir, Downing-street, 18 November 1841.

10 Nov.

I TRANSMIT to you the copy of a letter, and its enclosures, from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, on the subject of the free emigration which has taken place from the United Kingdom to Jamaica, since the passing of the Immigration Act in that colony.

I have to request that you will ascertain, as far as possible, the actual condition of the emigrants who went out by the "Robert Kerr."

No. 7.
Despatch from Sir Charles Metcalfe to Lord Stanley, 1 March 1842.

28 Feb. 1842.

My Lord, King's House, 1 March 1842.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 18th November, No. 15, I have the honour to transmit a report on the location, and, as far as can be ascertained, the actual condition of the emigrants who came out by the "Robert Kerr."

The Report is prepared by the sub-agent at Kingston, and is confirmed by the agent-general, from whom a letter on the subject is likewise enclosed.

I do not comprehend the sub-agent's concluding allusion to Mr. * * *, who accompanied the emigrants in the "Robert Kerr" to this island, further than as it seems to have reference to differences of opinion at Kingston, on the subject of the treatment of the emigrants at the depôt, from which differences the sub-agent has experienced considerable annoyance.

Enclosure in No. 7.

Encl. in No. 7.

Sir, Kingston, 28 February 1842.

I REGRET that the difficulty of procuring authentic information regarding the different immigrants who have arrived in this island has delayed my reply to your despatch, bearing date the 12th ultimo, until now. I have the honour to enclose, for his Excellency the Governor's information, a list of the people who arrived in the "Robert Kerr" from Limerick in February last, and such account of them to date as can be procured.

I consider the statement sent herewith may be relied on. I had an opportunity of knowing the disposal of the people by the "Robert Kerr;" and I can assure his Excellency that, whatever was the after destiny and location of these people, in the first instance all were engaged to and removed to as healthy locations as any in the island, and that no labourers were employed in the lowlands. Those who remained in the lowlands were domestics, stock-minders and mechanics, and whose employment in the lowlands was sanctioned by the law.

Considering the number of bad and intemperate people sent out, the number of deaths is by no means so great as I could have expected. The case of Patrick Cunningham stated, and made so much of in the hand-bill enclosed to me, is grossly exaggerated. I believe the man's removal to the hospital in Spanish Town, and about a mile from the property where he met with the accident, secured to him the best medical attendance; and as to neglect of the employer, it is entirely without foundation. Mr. Harrison, the proprietor of Ensom Pen, and who employed Patrick Cunningham, resides fifty or sixty miles from town, in Manchester, and was accidentally at Ensom when the accident happened to Cunningham, and proceeded the morning afterwards to his home, leaving word with the overseer to have him removed to the hospital, where he would be attended to, and where I believe he was liable for every expense.

I believe when Mr. Harrison heard the termination of the accident to Cunningham, and the reflections cast on his character, that he took the earliest opportunity and refuted them. The jury were under a mistake as to the law having been contravened in this case. He was not employed in field labour in the lowlands, but as a stock-minder.

I do not believe that the people by the "Robert Kerr" were deluded or deceived on the subject of wages or other advantages, as I questioned and spoke to many of them soon after their arrival, and could not find any one individual who would honestly state that any deception was practised. I believe many of them deceived themselves; for, although fairly told what their prospects were, they worked themselves up on board ship, where they were much better fed and cared for than they were accustomed to, to believe they were going to an "el dorado," and were much disappointed, on being brought to their sober senses, on finding that they must work fairly for their subsistence. It is a most lamentable circumstance that those immigrants of the Robert Kerr who went to the properties of Dr. Spalding, and who were for a time really doing well, should have been tampered with and induced to quit the employment of a gentleman who was disposed to make them comfortable. I believe these people are still about Kingston; and as their agreement with Dr. Spalding terminates in a few days, I trust they will again speedily find employment.

I can positively assert that every security against Europeans being employed in the lowlands as field labourers was given by the law; but unfortunately, many of these who on their arrival were employed and removed to healthy locations, being a dissatisfied set, absconded and went to the lowlands, more particularly from all parts to Kingston, where death but too frequently awaited them; no remedy could be found to prevent this, for these people generally made themselves so troublesome and disagreeable to their first employers, that when they did abscond there was but little inducement to follow them. The amended Immigration Act places the chances for success in those who may be determined on importing Europeans on a better footing than before.

Agreeably to your desire, I return the original documents forwarded to me in your despatch of the 12th ultimo.

LIST of IMMIGRANTS who arrived in the "Robert Kerr" from Limerick, Ireland, at Kingston, Jamaica, on the 28th February 1841.

No.	Name.	Age.	By whom Employed.	Present Circumstances.
1.	Egan, Lawrence	50	- - - - - -	now in the Police.
2.	„ Catherine	40
3.	Boland, Michael	26
4.	„ his Wife	—
5.	„ Nelly	12
6.	„ Pat	6
7.	„ Michael	4
8.	Keough, Michael	27	- - employed by Dr. Spalding on his coffee plantations, in the parish of St. Andrew and St. George, at the current rate of wages paid for labour; in addition to which they had cottages and land free of rent, and medical attendance and medicine gratis for the first year. They all enjoyed good health in the mountains, but were induced to come to Kingston in the hope of getting their agreements annulled, and have lived for some months in a state of idleness, at the public expense.	- - Betty Keough died in Kingston Hospital since leaving the mountains.
9.	„ Betty	28
10	„ Kitty	6
11.	„ Ellen	4
12.	Carroll, Thomas	24		- - Carroll died in the mountains, after having been in Kingston three or four days in search of the first person (per Hopewell) who absconded from Dr. Spalding's. The death of this man was to be regretted, as he was endowed with strong natural powers, and had complete control over the others; and it is more than likely that had he lived, all the subsequent unfortunate circumstances would have been prevented.
13.	„ Mary	30
14.	„ James	4
15.	Marshall, Michael	30

118.	„ Honora	20
119.	„ Mary, infant	—
120.	Boland, Patrick	18	- - - - - -	entered on his own account.
121.	Leo, Martin	19	- - - - - -	of intemperate habits. Died.
122.	Quin, James	32	Walter Pollock, Esq., St. Mary	- - Mrs. Quin was of very intemperate habits; she died in St. Mary. The husband has been seen in Kingston since.
123.	„ Honora	27
124.	„ Julian	5
125.	„ William	2½
126.	Myers, Mary	18	A. H. Lewis, Esq., Spanish Town	still in situation.
127.	Frost, the Rev.	30	- - - - - -	- - left the island, having been shut out from the society of his countrymen in Kingston, for giving a candid and fair statement of this island, and the advantages to be derived by his countrymen on emigrating hither.

This Return has been drawn up from the personal knowledge of the parties by the Sub-agent, and from the best information derived by him. It cannot be considered official, since no death took place whilst the immigrants were under his charge, and the law did not require that any death should be reported to him. It may, however, be relied on as substantially correct.

I believe the foregoing contains as correct an account of the disposal and after circumstances connected with the immigrants who arrived in the "Robert Kerr," from Limerick, as can be procured, and agrees with my own information on the subject.

* REMARKS.—The term Colonial Bounty is herein applied to the passage-money, and other expenses paid under Acts of the Island Legislature. There is no emigrant tax; the sum granted for immigration is paid out of the general revenue of the Island. The payments for immigrants have amounted on an average to 12*l.* 6*s.* 2½*d.* per head. By the Act of 1840, 50,000*l.* was granted annually for three years. By the Act of 1841-2 it is reduced to 20,000*l.* in one year.

—No. 1.—

EXTRACT of a LETTER from R. Vernon Smith, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, dated Downing-street, 9 September 1840.

I AM directed by Lord John Russell to refer to you an Act passed by the Legislature of Barbados, empowering the Governor to make regulations for ensuring the health and safety of persons emigrating from that island.

His Lordship requests that you will take this Act into consideration, with reference to the Act of Parliament recently passed extending the Act for regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels to the West Indies, and report to him your opinion how far it may be desirable that the Royal Assent should be given to the Barbados Act, or whether any, and, if any, what amendments should be made therein.

I transmit also for your information copies of a former correspondence with the Governor on the subject of this Act.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

(No. 721.)

Encl. 1, in No. 1.

AN ACT to empower the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of this Island for the time being to make such Regulations as he shall deem expedient for ensuring the Health and Safety in their Passage of Persons emigrating from this Island, and to appoint an Assistant Harbour-Master, to see such Regulations carried into effect.

Preamble.

WHEREAS slavery having been totally abolished in this island, and the labouring population having become freemen, and consequently entitled to exercise all the powers and privileges incidental to a state of freedom, among which is the right to emigrate and carry their labour to the most eligible market: and whereas humanity requires that, while freely permitted to exercise this right, the labourers in the present early stage of their new condition should be protected in every way against the evils to which their want of information might expose them, and, among the rest, from the hardships and danger to which they might be liable from the misconduct of the owners or masters of vessels employed in their conveyance from this to any other land:

Clause 1. Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency Sir Evan John Murray M'Gregor, baronet, Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief of this island, the Honourable the Members of Her Majesty's Council, and the General Assembly of this island, That the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of this island shall be and he is hereby authorized and empowered, from time to time, to make such regulations as he shall deem expedient for ensuring the health and safety, in their passage, of persons emigrating from this island; and for the purpose of seeing that such regulations are carried into effect, the Governor or Commander-in-Chief of this island for the time being is hereby authorized and empowered to nominate and appoint some fit and proper person as assistant harbour-master in this island, and from time to time to remove any such person so to be appointed, for misconduct or inefficiency, and in case of any vacancy arising by any such removal, or by the death or resignation of the person so to be appointed, to appoint some other fit and proper person in his place or stead, whose duty it shall be to see that all such regulations are duly complied with; and the secretary of the island is hereby authorized and required to withhold the requisite permit from vessels sailing hence with emigrants for British Guiana or any other colony, until the assistant harbour-master shall have produced to him a certificate, signed by such assistant harbour-master, that all such regulations have been duly complied with.

The Governor to appoint an assistant harbour-master, and in case of removal for misconduct, &c. to fill up the vacancy.

Secretary not to clear vessels with emigrants until he receives a certificate from the assistant harbour-master.

Powers of assistant harbour-master.

Clause 2. And be it further enacted, That the said assistant harbour-master shall have, and he is hereby invested with, full power and authority to visit any ship or vessel in which any such emigrating labourers are to be conveyed, for the purpose of ascertaining that all such rules and regulations have been duly complied with; and if the master or commander of any such ship or vessel, or any other person or persons, shall refuse to permit the said assistant harbour-master to visit such ship or vessel, or shall in anywise obstruct him in the discharge of his said duty, such master or commander, or other person or persons, shall forfeit a sum nor exceeding Fifty pounds, nor less than Ten pounds, current money of this Masters obstructing assistant harbour-master in performing his duties, to be fined 50*l.* currency, to be recovered as servant's wages, or committed to prison for three months.

this island, to be recovered as in case of servant's wages, and in default of payment, shall be committed to the common gaol of this island, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding Three months, unless the forfeiture be sooner paid; one-half of which forfeiture shall go to the informer, and the other half be paid into the public treasury of the island, for the public uses thereof.

Clause 3. And be it further enacted, That the said assistant harbour-master shall be paid a salary at and after the rate of One hundred and fifty pounds current money of this island per annum, to be computed from the date of his commission, and so in proportion for any time less than a year, out of the public treasury of this island, by even half-yearly payments; and the treasurer of this island for the time being is hereby directed to pay the same accordingly.

Assistant harbour-master to receive a salary at the rate of 150 l. per annum out of the treasury.

Clause 4. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall not continue in operation for a longer period than Three years from the date of its passing.

Act to be in force for three years.

PREAMBLE.

CLAUSE 1.

Empowering the Governor to make fitting regulations, and to appoint and remove persons to and from the situation of assistant harbour-master; and authorizing the secretary to withhold permission from vessels sailing with emigrants, unless the regulations be complied with.

CLAUSE 2.

Empowering assistant harbour-master to visit vessels, and imposing a fine on those who may obstruct him in his duty, and in default of payment, inflicting imprisonment.

CLAUSE 3.

Fixing assistant harbour-master's salary at One hundred and fifty pounds currency per annum.

(signed) Richard Hort, Actg. Col. Secretary.

OPINION.

THIS Act has been passed in conformity with the recommendation of Lord John Russell, in his Lordship's despatch of 29th November 1839 (Barbados, No. 14), and enables his Excellency the Governor effectually to carry out the principles and policy of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the passage of emigrants from this colony to any other, and will remove those doubts entertained by his Lordship, and which he considered it proper should be cleared away, respecting the validity of instructions issued by the Executive to the departments of the Colonial Secretary and Harbour-master.

That such an appointment as that for which the Act provides a salary is indispensably called for, the letter of the 16th instant, addressed to his Excellency's acting private secretary by the present harbour-master, is conclusive proof; and there is no doubt, by means of the powers thus vested in the Governor to issue and enforce his regulations on this point, that the "complete effect" which, in the despatch above adverted to, his Lordship deems it "desirable should be given to Lord Glenelg's views for the protection of emigrants," will be effectually accomplished by adopting, as nearly as practicable, the provisions of 5 & 6 W. 4, c. 53.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

Sir, Downing-street, 19 December 1838.

I HAVE received your despatches, enumerated in the margin, on the subject of immigration into British Guiana.

There seems no reason to doubt that a well-conducted plan of immigration would be advantageous to the colony; and you are right in assuming that no objection would be entertained by Her Majesty's Government to lawful and unexceptionable means to secure this end.

Your first despatch on this subject was written in unavoidable ignorance of the provisions of the recent Order in Council for regulating contracts for labour; and as your subsequent despatch of the 19th of September, written after your receipt of that Order in Council, removes all ground for apprehension that, in the case of any future immigrants, its provisions would not be strictly adhered to, I shall content myself with observing, that Her Majesty's Government would feel it impossible to sanction any measures inconsistent either with the spirit or the letter of that order.

To the general object and purport of the resolutions of the Court of Policy, transmitted in your despatch of the 1st of October, it does not appear to me that any just exception can be taken. Some important modifications, however, of the proposed scheme appear to me to be requisite, in order to secure the emigrants against fraud and oppression. It is undoubtedly desirable that proper means should be adopted for accurately informing labourers in other colonies of the rate of wages which they may expect to receive, and of the advantages which would be offered them in Guiana. The payment of the passages of willing emigrants from other places, under proper regulations, seems also to be a legitimate object for the appropriation of a moderate portion of the colonial revenue. The appointment of emigration agents in the colonies from which emigrants may be expected to proceed, as well as in British Guiana itself, to superintend their transit and location, is moreover calculated, if placed on a proper footing, to check abuse and to prevent fraud.

The principle, however, on which the remuneration of such agents is proposed to be granted appears to me objectionable. The remuneration is made to depend on the number of emigrants engaged by the agents. But this gives them a direct interest in increasing that number to the utmost, and thus diminishes the inducement to vigilance in securing the emigrants against imposition.

It is true that the first motive of the measure in question, and its ultimate object, is to supply labourers to a colony which is in want of them; but independently of higher considerations, the best mode in the long run of securing a regular supply is, by taking effectual care that there is no fraud or deception in the process of obtaining it; and that the labourers are not only willing to emigrate, but perfectly apprized of all the facts and circumstances connected with or bearing on the emigration. The agent, therefore, though paid by the colonists, must be appointed on behalf of the emigrants. He is to be their guardian and protector. His duty is to preserve the emigrants from the disappointment, dissatisfaction and misfortune to which ignorance and inexperience might expose them; to explain to them in the clearest manner the real nature of the inducements to emigrate which can be fairly held out to them, to caution them against extravagant or unwarranted expectations, and to protect them from the hardship and danger to which they might be liable from the misconduct of the owners or masters of vessels employed in their conveyance. Experience has proved the necessity of strict precaution against such misconduct. It is therefore indispensable to any plan of emigration, sanctioned by the Government, that the seaworthiness of the ships should be ascertained; that the number of emigrants to be embarked in each ship, and the amount of provisions and water for their passage, should be regulated in a manner calculated to secure the health and safety of the passengers. It is also indispensable that every emigrant, prior to emigration, should be made completely to understand the nature and prospects of the proposed service, the distance of the place, and the difficulties of return; and also that the emigrant's knowledge of all these particulars, and entire willingness to enter on the speculation, should be proved to the satisfaction of the agent by personal communication with the emigrant; and that the health of the emigrant should be attested by a medical man selected for that purpose by the agent, and acting under his inspection.

In order to carry these purposes into effect, it will be necessary that proper regulations should be carefully framed, and that a strict observance of them should be made a positive condition of the payment from the public revenue of any sum for the passage of emigrants to Guiana. The best mode of enforcing this will be to allow the proposed payment of the passages of emigrants only in those cases in which the master of the vessel in which they arrive shall have received a certificate from the emigration agent, or other Government officer appointed for this purpose in the colony from whence they arrive; the certificate to be signed by such agent or Government officer, and countersigned by the Governor of such colony, and to certify that the regulations for ensuring the health and safety of the passengers have in every respect been complied with; the truth of which certificate must be verified as far as possible by personal inspection of the ship and emigrants on their arrival in Guiana by the resident agent. It will further be desirable, that masters of ships arriving in British Guiana with emigrants should be subjected to penalties in the colony, in the event of their not having conformed to such regulations as shall have been formed on this subject. In order to assist you in passing such regulations, I transmit to you a copy of the English Passengers' Act, which, although of course requiring considerable modifications in order to render it applicable to the West Indies, may serve as a useful guide. I have to request that you will transmit for my consideration these regulations when framed. I observe that it is expressly stipulated in the third resolution of the Court of Policy, that the rules and regulations laid down for the guidance of emigrants applying for a free passage to Guiana shall not affect their free choice of employers, nor in any way restrain them from hiring their services to the best advantage. I consider the fair and bonâ fide application of this principle essential to the proposed measures, and indispensable to any plan for procuring additional labour in the colony. In order to remove all doubt on this point, some alteration is required in the notice transmitted in your despatch of the 15th of October. The rule proposed for the distribution of the emigrants prescribes that each applicant, according to priority of application, should have ten; and that no person should be entitled to any additional number until all are supplied. Such a rule, if enforced with unqualified rigour, would lead to many evils. But waving other objections, I remark on it here as appearing at least to militate against the entire freedom of the emigrants in making their own agreements with the parties anxious to obtain their labour. It is indeed added, that this arrangement is optional with the labourers; but the terms of it, nevertheless, more than imply an interference on the part of the Government agent in the distribution of labour. Yet such interference ought not for a moment to be admitted. The labourers, on their arrival, should be at liberty to enter into any engagements, sanctioned by the existing law of the colony, with any parties who are willing to engage them; and the business of the resident agent, as it respects them, should be strictly confined to the giving them such information as he may consider useful for their guidance, and the protecting them against any unfair dealing. I have to request that, after considering these observations, you will bring the subject again under the notice of the Court of Policy, with a view to revise the proposed arrangements in the several points to which I have adverted; and that at your earliest convenience you will inform me of the result.

I have, &c.

(No. 14.)

Sir, Downing-street, 29 November 1839.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 19th September (No. 95), enclosing various documents on the subject of the proceedings, at Barbados, of Mr. Thomas Day, an agent employed by the government of British Guiana to superintend the introduction of emigrant labourers into that colony from Barbados.

My despatch (No. 10) of the 7th of October (Trinidad), on the subject of the emigration ordinance of that island, will have already apprized you of the disallowance by Her Majesty of the ordinance of the Governor and Court of Policy of British Guiana, under which Mr. Day's appointment took place. Under these circumstances, the only immediate practical question arising on your despatch of the 19th of September is that which respects the validity of the instructions of the 10th of September, addressed by you to the assistant harbour-master, in which that officer is directed to carry into execution the views explained by Lord Glenelg, in his despatch of the 9th of December 1838. It appears that until the assistant harbour-master shall produce to the Colonial Secretary a certificate of the compliance with the regulations prescribed by Lord Glenelg, the Colonial Secretary has been instructed to withhold the requisite permit from vessels sailing from Barbados with emigrants for British Guiana.

However desirable it may be that the most complete effect should be given to Lord Glenelg's views for the protection of emigrants, I am not satisfied that the Colonial Secretary would be justified in withholding a requisite permit from any vessel, merely because the master had not conformed to those contemplated regulations. It does not appear that they have ever been established as law by any Act of Assembly; and there is certainly no Act of Parliament imposing any such restriction on the intercourse by sea between any two British colonies. I observe, however, that you issued these instructions under the sanction of the opinion of the solicitor-general of Barbados; I must presume, therefore, that there are some sufficient grounds of law justifying the refusal of clearance in cases of non-conformity to the regulations in question, although those reasons have not occurred to myself. It is, however, my duty to call your attention to the subject, in order that if there be any real doubt as to the lawfulness of the directions given to the Colonial Secretary and to the assistant harbour-master, any such doubts may be cleared away before those instructions are further acted on and enforced.

Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 22 October 1840.

No. 721.

—No. 2.—

Copy of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
9, Park-street, Westminster, 22 October 1840.

Sir,

In compliance with your letter of the 9th ultimo, we have the honour to state that we have perused the Act passed by the Legislature of Barbados therein enclosed. This Act authorizes the Governor to make such regulations as he shall think right for ensuring the health and safety in their passage of persons emigrating from Barbados; and it also sanctions the appointment of an assistant harbour-master, whose certificate of the due observance of the Governor's regulations will be requisite before any vessel is allowed to clear out with emigrants on board.

From the papers which accompany your letter, we derive the following view of the origin of this measure.

On the 19th December 1838, Lord Glenelg addressed to the Governor of Barbados a despatch explanatory of the measures taken for the protection of emigrants in this country, and recommended the adoption of them in that island.

The Governor immediately established, by his own authority, such rules as Lord Glenelg had suggested.

On this being reported, Lord John Russell, in a despatch of the 29th November 1839, expressed a doubt whether the Governor had the power to make or to enforce such rules; and observed that those doubts should be cleared away before the Governor's instructions were further acted on. The present Act has accordingly been passed, evidently for the purpose of putting the Governor's authority on the subject beyond question.

We have no doubt that the measure has been adopted with a real desire of meeting the views suggested by Her Majesty's Government, and it must be unwillingly, we are persuaded, that Lord John Russell would find himself precluded from recommending its confirmation. But we fear there are some serious objections to the law as it is now proposed.

The owners of ships, and commercial men generally, regard with great and not unreasonable jealousy all restraints on navigation, and expect to have the most ample means of knowing beforehand what such restrictions are, in order that they may give the necessary instructions to the masters of their vessels, and may make, with due information, their arrangements with the underwriters. Nothing but an actual law can secure the publicity and the certainty required for these purposes. The authority which it is the object of the present measure to delegate to the Governor is one which in this country Parliament has not intrusted to the Crown itself. The regulations regarding emigrants are all set forth in detail in the imperial statute-book; and it certainly therefore would be more consistent with the practice in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions, and with the expectations of commercial men in such cases, that in Barbados, also, the rules respecting the conveyance of emigrants should be enacted in detail by the Colonial Legislature.

It will be for higher authority than ours to decide whether or not, adverting to these considerations, the present Act can be confirmed. But if a more detailed measure is to be proposed, we enclose a sketch of the regulations which we think it might with advantage embody; and we would propose the same outline to be communicated to the Governor for his guidance, in case it be determined that the regulation of the subject may still be left to the executive authority.

We have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 2.

Encl. in No. 2.

Outline of Enactments or Regulations which it would appear desirable to establish respecting the Conveyance of Emigrants from Barbados.

1. The first enactment should regulate the number of persons to be carried, the height of the vessel between decks, and the arrangement of the sleeping berths. On these points the 2d clause of the British Passengers' Act might be adopted.

2. Next should be settled the quantity of provisions. On this subject there seems no reason reason not to adopt the 3d clause of the Passengers' Act. It has been taken for a rule in an Emigrant Act passed in the island of Jamaica.

3. The number of computed weeks or days of the principal voyages which emigrants are likely to make for Barbados should be stated.

4. An authority should be named to examine the provisions and water before the departure of the vessel; and to inquire, if necessary, into her seaworthiness. These functions are devolved, in Great Britain, upon the officers of Customs. In Barbados it seems to be proposed to assign them to the harbour-master; and to this, if rendered expedient by local circumstances, there appears no objection. But there can hardly be any reason why an assistant harbour-master, with a salary of 150*l.* per annum, should act singly and on his own authority. The principal harbour-master ought to be the responsible officer; and in cases where a survey of a ship is to be called, no authority less than that of the Governor, himself (to whom the harbour-master would report) should be sufficient; and the Governor, also, should be the judge of the measures to be founded on the result of the survey. In other words, the name of the Governor should be substituted for those of the Collector and Comptroller of the Customs, and afterwards of the Commissioners of Customs, in the 7th clause of the Passengers' Act. With the modifications thus adverted to, the objects of the present paragraph might be met by an adoption of the 5th and 7th clauses of the Imperial Act.

5. The 8th clause of the British Act, requiring that copies or authenticated abstracts of the Act should be kept on board for the information of the passengers, should be adopted.

6. For voyages computed to exceed four weeks, the 9th clause of the Passengers' Act ought to be adopted, requiring the presence of a surgeon.

7. The 10th clause of the Passengers' Act, limiting the quantity of spirits to be carried; the 11th clause, providing for lists of passengers; the 12th clause, prohibiting the landing of passengers at a different place from that contracted for; and the 15th clause, conferring a right to maintenance for forty-eight hours after arrival, all appear to be enactments which it would be desirable to repeat in Barbados.

8. The fine on masters violating the law might be fixed at not less than 5*l.* nor more than 20*l.*, according to the precedents in the 16th and 17th clauses of the British Act.

9. With regard to the prosecution and recovery of penalties, the 18th clause of the Passengers' Act provides, that the same means may be taken as under the Acts of Parliament for the prevention of smuggling, or relating to customs and trade. It appears doubtful how this machinery may be available out of the United Kingdom, and it would be desirable that the local Act should provide some cheap and expeditious resource, being at the same time one deserving of confidence for deciding cases under this law.

10. Ships of war, and vessels in the service of the Post-office, should be excepted from the operation of the law, as in the 20th clause of the Passengers' Act; but the exception should not be extended, as in that Act, to ships not carrying above a certain proportion of passengers to their tonnage. It would be better to say, absolutely, that vessels not carrying more than a defined number of passengers in all, say five or ten, as may be thought best, should not fall within the law.

In the preceding summary no notice has been taken of the 6th clause of the Passengers' Act, regulating the sale of provisions on board; the 14th, establishing fines in case of detention; and the 19th, requiring the master to enter into bond, because it was thought that these would not be applicable to the circumstances of the ports and ships concerned in emigration from Barbados; but if reasons should exist on the spot to think otherwise, they can of course be reported and be acted on.

No. 3. Despatch from Lord John Russell to Sir E. J. M. M'Gregor, 14 Nov. 1840.

WITH reference to the latter part of my despatch, No. 61, of the 26th June last, I have the honour to acquaint you, that I thought it desirable to await the issue of the Bill extending the Act for regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels in the West Indies, before I addressed you on the subject of the Barbados Passengers' Act, No. 721. That Bill having received Her Majesty's assent, I referred the Barbados Act to the Commissioners of Colonial Land for the iropinion how far it might be necessary to amend it, and I transmit to you, for your information and guidance, a copy of the Commissioners' report on this Act; and in suggesting the amendments proposed for the consideration of the Assembly, you will bear in mind that this subject is one which is not merely of a local, but of general interest.

AFTER mature consideration, Her Majesty's Government have come to the conclusion that they will be justified in admitting the colony of Sierra Leone into the list of the places from which emigrants may be introduced into British Guiana, under the provisions of any Ordinance which may be proposed by the Government and Court of Policy, in the terms which have been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government.

Sir, Government House, Demerara, 23 Feb. 1841.

YOUR Lordship's despatch, No. 150, date 30th December, by which permission was granted to include Sierra Leone in the list of places whence emigrants for this colony might be sought, was published for general information by my order, and it attracted the notice of the unofficial members of the Court of Policy.

Accordingly, they requested an interview with me as a body. I preferred, however, to receive their communication on the subject in court, and assembled it, though adjourned to the 25th instant, on the 15th. Mr. Rose having explained that he wished immediate advantage to be taken of the permission, I read a short minute, of which I have the honour to transmit copy.

I have always wished to encourage emigration on fair terms; and as the Emigration Ordinance (No. 4, 1841), passed by Sir Henry Macleod, had been published, and consequently was law, I hesitated not to carry it into effect, and issued a proclamation, of which the annexed is a copy. The unofficial members having requested me to allow them to hire a vessel for the purpose of communicating municating with Sierra Leone and Madeira, I appointed a committee of three non-officials and one official, to make the preliminary arrangements.

It appears that a large number of the peasantry of Madeira, excited by the intelligence of the success of their fellow citizens in this town, and of the money to be obtained by their industry even as agriculturists, have applied to a respectable merchant in Madeira to obtain a passage for them. I have therefore communicated to that person the terms of the Immigration Ordinance, and my proclamation appointing him agent for the colony, which has been fixed at 150 l. per annum.

I considered it would be more for the advantage of the colonists that the Governor of Sierra Leone should have the appointment of an agent, whose salary has been limited to 400 l. per annum. I have therefore transmitted to him a blank commission, to be filled up at his pleasure. It will prevent all jealousy of the acts of this government, and will I hope prove that no unfair objects are desired.

The appointment of an agent-general resident in this colony was to me a subject of deep consideration. Luckily I was relieved from my difficulty of selection by an application from Mr. James Hackett, who had arrived here from Canada some short time ago to look after property, his possession, in this colony. His antecedents of service under Sir Benjamin D'Urban, Sir Michael M'Turk's estimation of him and recommendation, and your Lordship's favourable disposition towards him in your letter of introduction to Lord Sydenham in July last, which was laid before me, enabled me at once to decide, and I felt happy in securing the services of an intelligent, active, and independent-minded man, not unknown to your Lordship, for the important object of attention to the emigrants on their first arrival, and for carrying into effect the views of Her Majesty's Government on the subject of emigration. I respectfully submit Mr. Hackett's appointment for your Lordship's approbation.

I have the honour to annex a copy of a letter to Sir John Jeremie.

Sir,

In consequence of the colony under your Excellency's government being one of the places from whence Her Majesty's Government have permitted emigration to the West India colonies, I have deemed it advisable, in compliance with the wishes of the Court of Policy of this colony, to despatch a vessel to Sierra Leone for the purpose of conveying my proclamation to your Excellency, and of placing at your Excellency's disposal a commission for the appointment of an agent to encourage and regulate the emigration to this colony of labourers in husbandry, and Kroomen, from such parts of the continent of Africa as are within the limits of your government, and in accordance with the recent instructions from Her Majesty's Government. I hope your Excellency will excuse the trouble I have imposed upon you in leaving the nomination of this officer in your Excellency's hands, for whom, I beg to state, a salary, at your Excellency's discretion, not exceeding 400*l.* sterling per annum, has been voted by the Court of Policy, to be drawn for quarterly, in the same manner as officers on half-pay draw their bills, and payable at the house of Messrs. Hall, M'Gard & Co., London, to whom I beg your Excellency will be good enough to give notice of the appointment.

Although the immediate object of my sending this vessel is to place your Excellency and the inhabitants of Sierra Leone in possession of my proclamation, she has, nevertheless, been fitted up for the reception of passengers, and will bring any number, not exceeding the Act of Parliament, that may be disposed to try their fortunes in British Guiana. The rate of wages to labourers here varies from one-third to half a dollar, for a task that can readily be finished by one or two o'clock in the afternoon. The cottages provided for labourers are mostly of a very comfortable description; their protection is amply secured through the vigilance of an efficient stipendiary magistracy; and their religious and moral improvement are equally well provided for.

My instructions, under pain of dismissal from his office, to the agent-general here, with regard to new comers, are, that he is to prevent emigrants from being located, on their first arrival, on estates where there is want of ample accommodation in cottages, or the slightest reason to doubt of liberal treatment. Under these circumstances, I can venture to claim your Excellency's good offices in favour of British Guiana.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the merchant vessel Superior, hired by gentlemen connected with British Guiana in England, to proceed to Sierra Leone, for the purpose of procuring labourers for British Guiana, arrived here yesterday, 24th inst., bringing 200 effective Africans, most of them speaking English; the number first embarked, not diminished by a voyage of 23 days; only 35 women followed their husbands, the remainder prudently determining to wait till it was found that the change was beneficial.

The vessel was in charge of Lieutenant Kingston, Royal Navy; and, by his judicious treatment, it appears no sickness had arisen among the passengers.

Lieutenant Kingston brought me a despatch from Mr. Carr, the acting governor in the room of Sir John Jeremie, whose lamented death he announced. He stated that he had appointed a Captain Taylor, of one of the regiments in garrison, to be emigration agent, and has raised the spirits of the colonists here by his disposition to favour emigration from Sierra Leone if it be proved of advantage to the inhabitants of that settlement.

The vessel sent from hence with despatches to the Governor of Sierra Leone did not remain there long enough to enable the previous formalities to pass for the departure of emigrants, and therefore proceeded to Madeira, whence she is expected to bring many Portuguese ready to emigrate to this colony.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Light to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Government House, Demerara, 1 June 1841.

I TAKE advantage of a sailing vessel, which leaves this to-day for England, to forward to your Lordship an account of my subsequent arrangements with regard to the emigrants from Sierra Leone, whose arrival I announced in Despatch No. 59, date May 25th.

I had the honour of stating that the proportion of women was not in accordance with the ordinance; the men wishing to ascertain the nature of the country before they brought their wives and families.

It appears that the agents of Trinidad and Jamaica circulated reports of this colony, which were believed by many who had put down their names for emigration, afterwards withdrawn, from suspicions being excited unfavourable to British Guiana. I can scarcely credit that the principals were guilty of wilful falsehood, but it was believed that snow, ice, and pestilence would destroy those who came here; and this ended by the embarkation of half a dozen men from the different villages in the neighbourhood of the chief town of Sierra Leone, who agreed to embark, with the emigrants, on condition of being conveyed back to give their friends a true account of British Guiana.

The anxiety to obtain the service of the emigrants by the proprietors here, and the attempts made to induce the choice of one estate more than another, rendered it necessary for me to guard against the first location being on spots either unhealthy or not in the immediate vicinity of the stipendiary magistrates.

I therefore addressed a minute to the members of the Court of Policy, whom I had allowed provisionally as a committee on affairs connected with emigration, and a selection of the most healthy estates was cheerfully acquiesced in and sent to me; from these I chose those named in document No. 2.

I went the same day on board the emigrant ship, accompanied by the agent-general, and assembling the emigrants, addressed myself to the head-men, and desired the agent-general to read to them the recommendation of the locations named, named, stating, at the same time, that they were free to choose for themselves, and that they need not stay one hour on any estate, if, on reaching it, they chose to go elsewhere. I directed that they should choose their own companions, and settle amongst themselves who would go together. I told them that the stipendiary magistrates would take care they should be properly protected against ill-treatment, and bid them apply immediately for redress, if any were required. I recommended them by no means to attempt double wages, or to exert themselves in extra labour for at least three months after their arrival. There was not the least hesitation to adopt my advice, and the following morning they were disembarked and taken to the different estates as herewith reported.

Amongst the party were 25 Kroomen, who were not located on estates; they were disembarked, lodged, and boarded for a day or two in the town, when they were soon hired as boatmen, under advice of the agent-general, by agents of different estates.

Though separated in squads of 10, 15, and 20, yet the labourers are settled on estates within a short distance of each other; and from the reports of the stipendiary magistrates and the agent-general, are so highly satisfied that they have determined to send for their wives and families.

The Superior, which brought the emigrants from Sierra Leone, has been chartered to return there; she will sail in a day or two.

The agent for Madeira writes, that from the reports of the Portuguese emigrants, who had returned from hence to that island with large earnings, there has been a great desire in the labouring population to come here; that he has 2,000 names for embarkation by the first opportunity, and that there is such an overflowing, from abundance of unemployed hands, almost in a state of starvation, that many thousands will flock willingly to such a colony as this, where labour is so well compensated.

I am happy to say that, with the exception of five of the Africans of the captured slaver, the Dous de Fevereiro, who died after landing, the remainder are in perfect health; they have remained at the charge of the colony for the last three weeks in the building prepared for them at New Amsterdam, with ample provision for their wants, and full liberty to look about them.

The collector of Her Majesty having taken charge of the price, I am waiting to have the Africans formally delivered to me. I shall then locate them with the same precautions as have been used for the emigrants from Sierra Leone. When this takes place, I shall submit my arrangements for your Lordship's approval.

MEMORANDUM for the Committee of Emigration.

THE consideration which will principally govern my recommendation to the people who have arrived from Sierra Leone to locate themselves, will be:—

1st. The healthiness of the estate; and under this head I give a decided preference to the sea coasts of the colony.

2d. The nearness of the estate to some place of worship according to the form to which the people have been accustomed.

3d. Regard being had to the accommodation afforded on the estate, it is desirable to distribute the people as extensively as possible over the colony, in order that any vicious or superstitious practices to which they may be addicted may not be perpetuated by their being kept congregated together.

I think 20 a sufficiently large number on any one estate.

Keeping the above considerations in mind, I request the committee to suggest, for my approval, a list of estates which they consider eligible locations for me to recommend to the Africans now on board the Superior.

MEMORANDUM.

HAVING given my best attention to the Africans now on board the Superior, and after having received the advice of the Emigration Committee, I strongly recommend the labourers to locate themselves on the following estates, and in the following numbers :—

Plantation Enmore,	on the east sea coast of Demerara -	20
Plantation Turkeyen	ditto - - ditto - - - -	10
Plantation Greenfield	ditto - - ditto - - - -	15
Plantation Le Resouvenir	ditto - - ditto - - - -	15
Plantation Helena	ditto - - ditto - - - -	20
Plantation Dochfour	ditto - - ditto - - - -	10
Plantation Annandale	ditto - - ditto - - - -	20
Plantation Lima,	west sea coast of Essequibo - -	20
Plantation Reliance	ditto - - ditto - - - -	20
Plantation Land of Plenty	ditto - - ditto - - -	20
Plantation Hoff Van Amich	ditto - - ditto - - - -	10
Plantation Aberdeen	ditto - - ditto - - - -	10
Plantation Walton Hall	ditto - - ditto - - - -	10

The labourers will remain unindentured, make their own bargains for daily, weekly, or monthly work; and after giving the estates above mentioned a fair trial, if dissatisfied, they are of course free agents, and may remove themselves to any part of the colony in which they may think they will be better off.

The emigration agent-general is to consider the numbers affixed to the estates merely as guides to him in reference to the proportion of labourers to be placed on the several estates; the absolute number must be determined by the relationship existing between the parties; and where no relationship exists, then by the mutual consent of the parties.

The agent will notify this recommended distribution to the town attorneys of the estates; and if the recommendation be acquiesced in by the labourers, they may at once be landed, housed, and provided for at the residences of the said attornies, or in such other suitable places of accommodation as they may provide, until an opportunity offers for conveying them into the country.

REPORT of the Agent-General for Immigration, on the arrival of the Ship Superior, from Sierra Leone, with 199 Free Labourers.

Sir, Immigration Office, 29 May 1841.

I HAVE the honour to submit the following report for the information of his Excellency the Governor.

On Monday last, the 24th instant, arrived the ship Superior, 412 tons, from London viâ Sierra Leone, where having remained 24 days, and taken on board 199 free emigrant labourers, reached here, after a passage of 25 days, all well.

I immediately

I immediately proceeded on board the vessel and inspected, in person, between decks, the accommodations prepared for the passengers, the quality of food and water provided for their use, and examined individually every immigrant on board; and it affords me great satisfaction, in the discharge of this part of my duty, to be able to inform his Excellency, that nothing could exceed the cleanliness and good order which everywhere prevailed, and which reflect much credit on Mr. Kingston, the superintendent on board, and Mr. Clarke, the surgeon of the vessel.

The immigrants appeared all in excellent health and spirits, the passage having been performed without any death or casualty; not even (as the doctor reported) a single case of sickness during the time.

In carrying into effect the instructions conveyed to me by his Excellency's memorandum (Copy attached, No. 1. Extract Minute attached, No 2), founded upon the recommendation of the Immigration Committee, with reference to the allocation of these people, every consideration and acquiescence have been accorded to their wishes and inclinations.

In no instance have I permitted any separation of families, ties of relationship, or (when made known to me by the parties) even friendship contracted in their own country, to be broken or interfered with. And the more effectually to accomplish this object, so conducive to their future contentment and happiness, their relative positions towards each other, in their present distribution, have been made as analogous to their former locations at Sierra Leone as possible; so that in most instances the same children will continue to receive instruction together, and the same families to enjoy an unbroken intercourse, and to meet at their respective places of worship on Sundays.

I am sure it will afford his Excellency great satisfaction to know that the kind and impressive manner in which he addressed these people on board the vessel, has inspired them with redoubled confidence, and that they have departed for their respective destinations not only in high spirits, but convinced that his Excellency's recommendation to them to accept of those healthy situations in the first instance where good accommodation had been provided for them, was wholly for their own advantage and that of their families. Inseparable from this feeling of reliance on his Excellency's word, was that of the obvious consciousness of independence with which they went forward, from the assurances given them; at the same time, that although such was his Excellency's advice regarding their immediate location, yet as they were all free men, unindentured, and at liberty to work where and for whom they pleased, they might quit their locations for any other which they might think more advantageous to them, even on the following day, should they think fit to do so. With regard to the disparity between the sexes, although considerable as relates to this body of immigrants, being 149 males to 50 females, it is, I humbly conceive, in a great measure satisfactorily explained by the people themselves, with whom I have particularly conferred on the subject, and from the reasons adduced by them, it can hardly be doubted (should the means continue to be afforded) that such disparity would speedily be amended.

They state, in explanation of so many men having come without their wives and families, that they preferred leaving them with their friends at home, rather than hazard the uncertainty and danger of bringing them to a strange country of which they themselves knew nothing but by hearsay. That they wished to be convinced from personal knowledge and observation of this country, that the condition of those dependent on them would be bettered, before they could venture on so decided a step as their actual removal; and that, as the means of reporting to Sierra Leone, by the return of their representatives (or headmen), had been promised them, they awaited that opportunity of communicating with their families and friends as to their following them here by coming vessels or not.

This explanation does not apply to the Kroomen, who never do bring their wives from home; there being 23 of this class, the majority of males would consequently be reduced, that number making it only 76.

I have not failed to convey his Excellency's desire, and to impress upon the minds of those gentlemen under whose protection and care these people have been respectively placed, the necessity of rendering them in every way comfortable—preventing over exertion at work, or too much exposure to the sun, &c. And it is but just to say that every assurance of such indulgences have been given.

I fear I have extended this report beyond what under ordinary circumstances might be considered necessary. The subject, however, I feel to be one of deep importance, and of such interest to all classes of this community, indeed to humanity itself, that any prolixity I may be betrayed into, has been not only from the sympathies which the event has excited, but from a desire to afford his Excellency the fullest information, and to gratify that wish which he has so deeply evinced in the protection and welfare of those people.

I have, &c.

&c. &c. &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lord John Russell to Governor Light.

Sir, Downing-street, 19 July 1841.

I HAVE received your despatches of the 25th May and 1st June, Nos. 59 and 60, reporting the arrival of 200 African labourers from Sierra Leone; and I have to convey to you my approval of the steps which you had taken for ensuring their location on such estates as you considered most likely to be conducive to their health and personal comforts.

I rely, however, on the promise that the women, whom you state to have been left behind until the men could ascertain the nature of the country, should be sent for, and that the proportion of females to males laid down by the Ordinance should be adhered to.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Light to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Government House, Demerara, 9 June 1841.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship copy of a letter I wrote to the officer administering the government of Sierra Leone, by the Superior, which left this on the 7th instant, chartered to convey emigrants from Sierra Leone to this province.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry Light.

Encl. in No. 8.

Enclosure in No. 8.

Sir, Government-house, Demerara, 6 June 1841.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's despatch delivered to me by Lieutenant Kingston, of the Superior, on the arrival of that vessel here on the 24th ultimo.

While regretting the lamented death of Sir John Jeremie, I have to congratulate you on the assumption of a government which now attracts so much interest at home, and whence from its own progress in civilisation yet may arise such new sources of wealth to the mother country, while it will probably contribute much to the prosperity of the West Indies, without interference, I trust, with the welfare of the tribes of Africans who seek the protection of Great Britain.

It will be satisfactory to your Excellency to know that the emigrants from Sierra Leone reached this colony in 24 days, and all were in perfect health.

I obtained a list of the most healthy estates in the colony, and went on board the Superior, on the 25th May, with the agent-general, and having assembled the emigrants, addressed myself to the headmen, and ordered the agent-general to read my recommendation of the estates to them, stating at the same time that they were fully at liberty to choose for themselves, and to remove immediately from the estates recommended, if they thought right to do so, on arrival there; but I observed to them, that in relying on me, they would escape the possibility of being induced to locate themselves on spots which perhaps did not offer such advantages as those I recommended.

I named so many for each estate, in squads of 10, 15, and 20, desiring the emigrants to choose amongst themselves who should go together. I assured them of the protection of the stipendiary magistrates, to whom in all cases for redress they were to apply.

They willingly adopted my recommendation, and were disembarked the following morning, and conveyed in the estates' schooners to their locations.

Having

Having previously obtained a list from every estate in the colony, of the means of accommodation for labourers each estate possessed, I knew where to place the emigrants, selecting the most healthy spots, carefully avoiding distance from churches, chapels, schools, and magistrates, and at the same time I placed the different squads within such reasonable contiguity of each other, that they might always in the course of four or five hours have communication with each other, or with their friends; begging you to bear in mind that they were pretty nearly divided between the sea-coast of Essequibo county, called the Arabian Coast, and the eastern coast of Demerara, both considered as the healthiest districts in the province.

The reports of the agent-general and the stipendiary magistrates up to this date, state that the emigrants are highly satisfied, and those who have left their families at Sierra Leone are desirous of having them here.

The Kroomen, 25 in number, were not included in the locations, but were landed, boarded and lodged liberally for two days in town, when they were engaged under the recommendation of the agent-general, as boatmen on different estates, at the rate of 10 and 12 dollars per month, with a daily proportion of salt fish and plantains.

I trust these details will satisfy you that the emigrants are well protected, and may reap largely by the advantages this province offers to industry.

I have to express my perfect approval of Captain Taylor as agent for Sierra Leone, with the salary you have considered necessary. He will communicate with the agent-general on all subjects connected with emigration, and I shall be happy to support him on every subject connected with his office.

If I am not too late, I should suggest, it would be premature in Captain Taylor to leave the army entirely, that is, to sell out; for, on the delicate subject of emigration from Africa, though at present permitted, yet, if the sons of Africa can be equally well off in their own quarter of the world, will the emigration from Sierra Leone continue to be the policy of Great Britain?

I understand a heavy charge is made for passports at Sierra Leone; if so, I beg to draw your attention to a despatch I received from Lord John Russell, recommending the abolition of all fees on passports to labourers from this colony, desirous of quitting their country, which recommendation has been strictly adhered to; it will facilitate the progress of emigration, if such fees at Sierra Leone can be remitted.

In conclusion, I beg to assure your Excellency that the emigrants who may choose to seek their fortunes here, have, with prudence, as great a prospect of worldly happiness here as in any part of the world, and are in all cases of dispute between labourers and employers, entirely under the arbitration of an efficient summary stipendiary jurisprudence, accountable to the executive alone.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Light to Lord John Russell.

Government-house, Demerara,
7 October 1841.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship the arrival from Sierra Leone, on the 22d ult., of 225 emigrants in the ship Superior, chartered here, and sent to the above-named colony.

The Superior was 36 days on her passage from Sierra Leone; the number of emigrants embarked, 226, therefore one death occurred; and it appears from the letter of the agent-general, copy of which is herewith annexed, that the deceased was in a bad state of health, and was allowed to embark from humane motives.

The emigrants, though recommended to locate themselves on estates, according to my selection, as the healthiest parts of the colony, and where I had heard of the best accommodation, appear to have been guided by their friends to other places. No inconvenience has arisen from this, and they are thus made sensible of their full freedom of choice.

I have thought it right to transmit to your Lordship copy of a letter from the agent at Sierra Leone to the agent-general, by which your Lordship will perceive that this colony has every prospect of a large influx of labourers from Sierra Leone. The difficulty will be to obtain regularly an equal portion of the sexes, which, as by the annexed return, is not according to the terms of the Emigration Ordinance.

It is more than probable that as confidence increases as to the advantages of this this colony, the disproportion will decrease; it may then be unnecessary to urge the strict enforcement of the law.

Mr. Taylor alludes to the misconduct of some of the delegates sent back from thence to Sierra Leone. This is an accident which will be easily guarded against; the nature of this country is now pretty generally known at Sierra Leone, and therefore it will be unnecessary to send delegates from hence.

A ship has been chartered at Berbice to proceed to Sierra Leone, and I have no doubt will be successful in obtaining emigrants. It is evident the natives of Africa are the most fitted for this country; little or no sickness has occurred amongst those who have lately arrived here, while great sickness, and on some estates great mortality, have occurred amongst the Portuguese from Madeira.

I have, &c.
(signed) Henry Light.

Enclosure in No. 9.

Sir, Sierra Leone, 12 August 1841.

Encl. in No. 9. ACCOMPANYING the emigrants in the ship Superior, are the six delegates who returned from Demerara in that ship. Whilst they have been here I have given them the means of subsistence at the rate of 1 s. per day. This sum was by no means adequate to their wishes; but as my object throughout has been to do these people strict justice, and yet go upon as economical a plan as I could, I inquired from several people in their own station of life, and found that that sum was quite sufficient.

One of these men, named William Hoare, applied to me, through Captain Dinning, for the sum of 10 dollars, a gratuity which he stated was given to the other men, but which he embarked without receiving, and which I advanced.

I would strongly urge upon the authorities at British Guiana the necessity of not sending these men back as delegates; they are not required, and I found them quite inefficient, and totally useless, with the exception of Tom Freeman, the head Krooman, who has been most active.

One of the men is called Thomas Cole; I have had every reason to be much dissatisfied with his conduct. He has appeared several times before me in a state of intoxication, and has been the source of much annoyance and complaint, even from the authorities here. Owing to his misconduct I have not advanced him anything, but I have been well aware that he has had the means of subsistence.

One man came in the Superior, calling himself a delegate; but as he was not recognised by the headman, Charles Turner, I have refused to hold any communication with him.

Were I to suggest a plan to the authorities at British Guiana, it would be, send back either Tom Freeman or the head Krooman. I send Charles Walker and the headman of the liberated Africans, Charles B. Christian: it would inspire the people here with confidence, and I believe them to be intelligent, sober, and active.

A native of Sierra Leone, by name John Emanuel, who came here with Mr. Dunlop, with high testimonials from members of the honourable the Court of Policy, has been very active in collecting emigrants; he has laboured under much sickness, but I have had every reason to be satisfied with him since his recovery. Being in absolute want of money, he showed me his credentials, and also a paper signed by the four members of the honourable the Court of Policy, comprising the committee for promoting immigration into British Guiana, allowing him a salary of 35 dollars a month; and upon this I have advanced him altogether the sum of 16*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* He does not appear willing to return to the West Indies at present; but beyond the nine months specified in the paper I shall not advance him any money, nor should I have done so now until I received instructions, had he not been in a state of utter destitution.

I have found it also necessary to draw on Messrs. M'Garel & Co. (as you will see by the accompanying document) for 23*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, the sum required for the passports for the emigrants by Government, as well as for the other items contained in that amount. I have applied to Messrs. Hiddle & Co., the consignees of the ship Superior, to cash the bills I required, and they have agreed to do so. I trust my having advanced money for the passports will meet with approval, as it is the plan adopted by all the other West India emigration agents. The people sell all they have from the moment they receive their tickets, and have barely the means of subsistence until they go on board, and are, therefore, quite unable to afford to pay the required 2*s.* 6*d.* The clothes sent are as much or more than will be required, and the consignees have informed me that they receive directions to supply the immigrants with mats.

Should the authorities not think it necessary to send back any delegates, I am very sanguine as to the result of the next voyage. The emigrants I have embarked, I believe, will be found, for the greatest part, strong healthy labourers. It is true that other ships are freighting, or about to be freighted, for the other West India colonies; but the satisfactory accounts received from the emigrants at Demerara, and the inducements held out in your despatch by his Excellency Governor Light, particularly to carpenters, have caused hundreds to apply to emigrate whom I could not send by this vessel.

I now can only trust that my exertions will meet with the approval of the authorities at British Guiana.

I have, &c.

Sir, Immigration Office, 23 September 1841.

I HAVE the honour to announce, for the information of his Excellency the Governor, the arrival yesterday morning of the ship Superior, from Sierra Leone, with 225 liberated Africans on board; all well.

The Superior had a passage of 36 days, the only casualty occurring during the time being the death of one man, whom, upon investigation, it appears was in a bad state of health when he embarked, which he was only allowed to do to gratify a wish he had to accompany some of his relatives hither, and in the hope that the voyage might tend to his recovery. All the others arrived in the most excellent health, high spirits, and in regard to appearance, intelligence, and civilisation, I think are much superior to this vessel's last party.

I had the ship placed in quarantine, to prevent interference or confusion on board, until I had gone through the muster-roll, and personally inspected every individual of the party; after which I called up all the principal people and the headmen, and addressed them in the name of the Governor, who, I informed them, was out of town, or they would have been welcomed in person by his Excellency himself, but that I was prepared to convey to them his Excellency's recommendation and advice regarding their future locations, as being not only considered the most healthy, but better provided with accommodations, &c. I then read his Excellency's memorandum, naming the various estates on which it was proposed they should be advised to go. They appeared very much gratified, and thanked the Governor for his kindness; but it was evident that the headmen or delegates who have returned with them, had already made a different disposition in favour of the estates on which they had themselves been located, and the consequence has been that the plantations Lima, Turkeyen, La Resouvenir, Lusignan, and Paradise, have each got a portion, and the remainder (through the exertions of parties who came on board after the yellow flag was taken down) were distributed among the following estates, viz. Ogle, Belair, Peter's Hall, and Houston.

I regret that I have not been more successful in giving effect to his Excellency's intentions, as contemplated by the memorandum, in the allotment and location of these people; but more than urge his Excellency's advice to them I could not do, and they have pleased themselves.

I enclose the despatches received from Captain Taylor, at Sierra Leone, which appear very satisfactory.

The accounts brought by this ship hold out the most favourable prospects for British Guiana, as regards emigration from Sierra Leone, the Africans there giving a decided preference to this colony over either Jamaica or Trinidad; these latter places, they say, being much too far away for them.

Could the Superior have accommodated 1,000 people, the captain says he could have got them with ease.

I had nearly forgot to mention the important fact that of the number now come, about 60 are Kroomen, several of whom have brought their wives, and many more of the same class are waiting to follow.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Light to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Government House, Demerara, 21 August 1841.

I HAVE the honour to transmit returns for the month of July of the state of the emigrants from Sierra Leone.

Your Lordship will perceive that they are in good health, and are a valuable addition to the labour of the colony; one woman was unfortuately drowned in one of the trenches; a copy of the inquest on the body is annexed to Mr. Lyon's return.

A remark by Mr. Allen on the cause of dissatisfaction at Plantations Lima and Walton Hall, in some of the people, produced the correspondence I have the honour to transmit.

Mr. Rose seems to have remedied the evil complained of.

It is essential that the emigrants should not be placed in temporary buildings; if it does not produce dissatisfaction, it causes habits of indifference to comfort and cleanliness, which tend to disease.

Although every pains are taken to prevent location on estates where cottages are not ready for the reception of emigrants, yet it is evident that planters are not scrupulous on that point.

Sir, Government Secretary's Office, Demerara, 11 August 1841.

I AM desired by the Governor to acquaint you that there has been this day received from the stipendiary magistrate of the district in which Plantation Lima is situate, a report, of which, so far as relates to Plantation Lima, the following is an extract:—

"None of the Africans on this estate seem satisfied. The dissatisfaction of the Africans on Lima may, perhaps, be chiefly ascribed to there having been no distinct and comfortable means of accommodating them on their arrival. Though cottages are in progress for that purpose, four men and one woman left towards the end of July, with the view of bettering their situation, of whom one man and his wife went to Plantation Reliance, and three men to Bathsheba's Lust, District G.

"No blame, however, seems to attach to the manager on this or any other account having reference to these people."

I AM desired by the Governor to acquaint you that there has been this day received from the stipendiary magistrate of the district in which Plantation Walton Hall is situate, a report, of which, so far as relates to Plantation Walton Hall, the following is an extract:—

"These people (the Africans) are lodged in the sick and school-house, no cottages being ready for their reception. Since this report was made out, two men and women have left Walton Hall for Windsor Castle. The dissatisfaction of the Africans on Walton Hall may, perhaps, be chiefly ascribed to there having been no distinct and comfortable means of accommodating them on their arrival, though cottages are in progress for that purpose."

Sir, Demerara, Georgetown, 12 August 1841.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, containing an extract from a report of the stipendiary magistrate of the district in which Plantation Lima is situate, relating to the Africans on that estate.

I have to request you will be pleased to inform his Excellency the Governor, that it is my intention to transmit to Mr. Hutson, the manager of Lima, a copy of the extract sent to me, with a request that he will immediately furnish me with a detailed statement of every circumstance which relates to the Africans on Lima, since their location on that property. When I am in possession of the particulars, I will, without loss of time, transmit the same to you for his Excellency's information.

In the meantime I may, however, remark that it appears to me that the stipendiary magistrate is under some mistake as to the cause of dissatisfaction, if any now exists.

With respect to their accommodation, in a letter dated the 28th May, from the manager of Lima, he states, "The Africans have all arrived; they are comfortably lodged in the school-house; I have given Thomas Cole half of the adjoining cottage; I am much pleased with him and the people; they are the sort of immigrants we want; we can repair the old ranges for a hundred more. I have given them all provision-grounds, and have allowed them a day or two to weed and plant them on their own account." Again, on the 13th July, Mr. Hutson writes, "An African came here from Bathsheba's Lust, on Friday last, and was harboured on the estate until Sunday, without my knowledge. He told the Africans that if they would go to Bathsheba's Lust, they would be fed for six months, get a present of clothes, plates, knives, forks, spoons, &c. &c. &c. He succeeded in cramming these people, and abducted five of them in the middle of the night. I regret the absence of Thomas Cole; his presence would have prevented this."

From these abstracts from Mr. Hutson's letters, it would appear that the cause of the people quitting Lima was not occasioned by their having no distinct and comfortable means of accommodating them on their arrival; the real cause appears to have been that assigned in Mr. Hutson's letter of the 13th July.

The building designated the school-house is a large one, raised upon brick pillars with two floors, which has been divided into apartments, and, I believe, has ample accommodation for all the Africans sent to Lima. I am, however, happy to be able to state for his Excellency's information, that three of the Africans arrived in town from Lima on Monday morning; they returned again yesterday morning in the estates' schooner; they appeared to me happy and contented, and expressed to me their anxiety to get back, as they were losing money by remaining in town; they added, that they did not like this large town, Lima was much better.

I shall direct Mr. Hutson to communicate with the stipendiary magistrate (Captain Allen), as it is my wish that he should be made acquainted with all the facts of the case.

Sir, Georgetown, Demerara, 19 August 1841.

I BEG leave to enclose you copy of a letter which I received last night from Mr. Hutson, the manager of Plantation Lima, in reference to the Africans located on that property, which I request you will be pleased to lay before his Excellency the Governor.

ORDER.

A proprietor will never keep emigrants who cannot place them in cottages. I am glad Mr. Rose has given cottages. The agent-general will be directed to endeavour to prevent any emigrants from going on estates where they are to be lodged as in barracks.

H. E. F. Young, Government Secretary.

My dear Sir, Plantation Lima, 16 August 1841.

I RECEIVED this morning your letter of the 12th instant, with copy of an official communication of same date annexed.

The Africans upon this estate appeared cheerful and contented from the day of their arrival here, on the 27th of May, until about the 10th of June, when an African from Bathsheba's Lust, named Wilson, came upon this estate, and was harboured here for two days. This man completely unsettled the Africans: he told them, that if they would go with him to Bathsheba's Lust, that they would be fed for six months, and get clothes, knives, forks, spoons, and all manner of presents. He spread discord and dissatisfaction among them, and succeeded in enticing away four men and one woman, by names James Peter, Samuel M'Auley, James Carew, James Johnson, and Fanny Johnson, who left this estate on the night of the 12th July. I am confident that these five Africans would have remained, and become permanent labourers upon this estate, if unfair means had not been resorted to; and this would not have occurred had Thomas Cole, the headman, remained upon the estate, instead of returning to Sierra Leone.

I really considered that the 16 Africans were very comfortably lodged on their arrival upon this estate. Seven men, four women, and one boy, were lodged in the building that was formerly a school-house. The accommodation there afforded them was four separate apartments for the four women and their husbands, and the son of one of them; and three separate apartments for the three single men. The remainder of the Africans, viz. one man, his wife, daughter, and a boy, occupied the whole half of a new cottage.

I supplied each of the Africans with a saucepan for cooking, and with provisions for five weeks, gratis. I allotted garden grounds to each, and allowed them a week to cultivate the same: I paid their wages weekly, at the same rate as our other labourers; and I also advanced money to them to buy clothes with.

Captain Allen visited the Africans upon this estate in the beginning of this month. He approved of the cottages, but disliked the plan of the building already alluded to, which he compared to a barrack, and said it would only answer as a receiving-house for immigrants. He recommended me to remove the Africans into cottages, to which I have already attended; and most of the Africans upon this estate are now lodged in cottages that, I think, will stand a comparison with any in this country.

Captain Allen is at present in Pomeroon, which prevents my communicating with him on this subject until he returns to the coast.

I have, &c.

Peter Rose, Esq. (signed) Henry Hutson.

They had at first apartments in the upper part of the hospital, but have now two rooms in a cottage. A room has been offered to each, but declined on their part, in my presence, when they expressed perfect satisfaction with the accommodation they possess. Their wages as boatmen are ten dollars per month and rations, but from this date they cease to be boatmen, being under the impression that they can make more money in the field. Their wages in the field are to be five bitts for a task, and at the rate of six bitts for any portion of additional work performed in the same day. They told me that they expected to be able to earn a dollar a day in the field. They seem to be, and expressed themselves to be, perfectly happy and contented.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Light to Lord John Russell.

No. 12. Despatch from Governor Light to Lord John Russell. 22 September 1841.

Arabian Coast, Essequibo,
22 September 1841.

My Lord, ——

I HAVE the honour to transmit the stipendiary magistrates' returns, for the month of August, of the Africans from Sierra Leone.

There is a great inequality in the sexes amongst the first arrivals from Sierra Leone, and of emigrants from the islands, who will not bring their families here till they have had experience of the place. I shall exert myself to prevent the continuance of this inequality.

It is very satisfactory to report the few complaints adjudicated by the magistrates between planters and labourers, and the general health of the newly-arrived Africans from Sierra Leone.

I have, &c.

They all perform the ordinary tasks, and, in some cases, extra labour, and are paid in proportion to the quantity of work done. In course of last month 16 men, four women, and four children, removed themselves from plantation Cuming's Lodge to other estates, the greater part of them to plantation Chateau-Margo. No influence whatever appears to have been used by any party to induce them to make this change; the reason they assigned for it themselves was, "that they could perform the task in Chateau-Margo with more ease, and in a shorter time than they could do on Cuming's Lodge." With this exception, and a few individual removals, the Sierra Leone emigrants have remained very steadily on the estates upon which they were originally located in this district.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Macphail, administering the general Government of the Leeward Islands, to Lord John Russell.

No. 1. Despatch from Lieut.-governor Macphail to Lord John Russell, 20 November 1840.

My Lord, Government House, Antigua, 20 November 1840.

I DO myself the honour of transmitting to your Lordship authenticated transcripts, in duplicate, of two Proclamations which I have issued, with the advice of the Solicitor-general, to give effect in this island to the provisions of the Imperial Statutes 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 53, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, for regulating the conveyance of passengers in merchant vessels.

The selection of articles of food authorized to be substituted for those named in the British Act, and the scale of average duration of passages from Antigua, were furnished officially to me by the harbour-master of this port and two masters of vessels, all of them long and intimately acquainted with the subject referred to them.

It was deemed expedient to declare the extended Act of Parliament in force from the date of the Proclamation, because, owing to there not being a single authenticated copy of it to be found in the island, it was impossible for the magistrate to adjudicate in any case of breach of its obligations. It has since been placed on record in the Secretary's office, from a copy obligingly lent for that purpose by Mr. Trew, the Collector of Customs, and which was contained in a volume of the laws relating to the Customs, compiled by Mr. Hume, of the Board of Trade.

I trust that these Proclamations may be found to be framed according to law, and that they may receive Her Majesty's gracious confirmation.

I have, &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS by the third clause of an Act passed by the Imperial Parliament, bearing date the Third day of July, in the third and fourth year of the reign of Her most Gracious Majesty, intituled, "An Act to extend to the British Colonies in the West Indies an Act passed in the fifth and sixth year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, for regulating the carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," it is enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Governor or officer administering the government of any of the British Colonies in the West Indies and South America, and in the Bahama Islands, or Bermuda, by any Proclamation or Proclamations to be by him from time to time issued for that purpose, to substitute for the articles of food and provisions specified in the said recited Act, such other articles of food and provisions as shall be a full equivalent for the same, having regard to the average duration of the voyage and to the number of the passengers to be conveyed in any such ship, in such manner that the proportion prescribed in the said recited Act between the probable number of days to be occupied by the voyage and the number of days during which provision is made for the subsistence of the passengers shall be duly preserved:

I do hereby declare and proclaim, That for the purposes of the said extended Act, corn, meal, rice and farine shall be reckoned and considered as breadstuff, and that it shall be lawful lawful to substitute three pints of pease, or seven pounds weight of yams for seven pounds of potatoes, for the daily ration or allowance for each person on board; and two pounds weight of salt fish for one pound of pork or beef; and further, that a supply of fresh water, at and after the rate of one gallon per diem for each day of the computed voyage for each person on board such ships, shall be carried in tanks or sweet casks.

And I do also hereby declare and proclaim, That the number of hours or days deemed to be necessary for the voyage of any such ship, according to her destination, shall be determined by the following rule of computation; that is to say, to a voyage to—

No. 2. Despatch from Lord John Russell to Lieut.-governor Macphail, 6 March 1841.

Sir, Downing-street, 6 March 1841.

I HAVE had under my consideration the Proclamations issued by you for giving effect to the provisions of the Imperial Statute for regulating the conveyance of passengers in merchant vessels, and which accompanied your despatch (No. 81) of 20 November last.

With respect to the short voyages mentioned in the Proclamation, I am of opinion, that although the place of destination may be only a few hours distant, yet there ought always to be at least one day's provision on board, and with regard to places a little more distant, and to which the voyage is more than a day's sail, there should be provision on board for at least two or three days beyond the mere average passage.

I have to signify to you my approval of the Proclamation, subject to the above-mentioned remarks; but it will be necessary that they should be revised on the points to which I have adverted.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Macphail to Lord John Russell.

No. 3. Despatch from Lieut.-governor Macphail to Lord John Russell, 5 August 1841.

My Lord, Government House, Antigua, 5 August 1841.

HAVING in the month of September last submitted to the Council and Assembly of this island your Lordship's circular despatch of the 24th of July 1840, transmitting a copy of the Imperial Statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, extending to these colonies the operation of the Act 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 53, I received a few days ago the enclosed transcript of a Bill, which had been passed by those bodies, at their meeting on the 29th ultimo, to give effect to the rules and regulations enacted in the British Statute.

On a careful examination of this Bill, and on a comparison of its provisions with those of the Extension Act of Victoria, on which it is founded, it occurred to me that its effect would undoubtedly be to counteract, at least in some degree, the facility afforded under the law, as it now exists, for the carrying in small vessels, such as are chiefly navigated between these islands, of any number of passengers, not exceeding twenty.

By the 1st clause of the 3 & 4 Victoria, it is enacted, that the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. shall not in these colonies extend or apply to vessels carrying less than twenty passengers; by the concluding clause (7), it is further enacted, that nothing shall be contained in any local enactment which shall be repugnant or contrary to that Act or any part thereof; and that if any such clause or clauses be enacted, they shall be to all intents and purposes null and void. Now the particular object of this Bill is to extend the operation of the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, to vessels carrying less than twenty passengers; hence it appears to me, on this ground alone, that I should not be at liberty to assent to it, while, for the reason mentioned above, I have been led to consider it as coming clearly within the scope of the seventeenth Royal Instruction; and consequently that it would be my duty either to require the annexation of a suspending clause to the Bill, or to transmit to your Lordship a draft of it in its actual form, in order that I may be favoured in due course with your Lordship's instructions upon it.

Having stated that I apprehend the Bill may be considered as contrary to the enactments of the Imperial Statutes, it is nevertheless right for me to observe, that the rules and regulations thereby established are as much called for in reference to the class of small vessels employed in inter-colonial commerce as to any other; few comparatively convey at one time more than twenty, if so many, from this island, and consequently they evade the law altogether, and there are no means of ascertaining whether or not any arrangements have been made for the comfort and convenience of their passengers, or if sufficient stores and water of proper quality have been laid in for the voyage.

I need but refer to the case of the "Betsy," reported in my despatches to your Lordship, noted in the margin, to prove the recklessness with which such vessels are navigated: ill found, with but few seamen on board, perhaps without a compass, or the master ignorant of its use if he has it; the consequences of a deviation from this course or encountering bad weather are easily imagined, and it is matter of surprise, indeed, that so few accidents are known to occur; but from the circumstance of the persons who trust themselves to such means of conveyance being chiefly of the labouring classes, their privations while on board are seldom brought to notice.

Montserrat, 73. October 13, 1840. General, 35. Dec. 26, 1840.

The hurricane season having just commenced, but little traffic is to be anticipated during the next three or four months, which could be affected by this Bill; and I hope, therefore, that I have adopted a course in respect to it which, by avoiding inconvenience on either side, will be so fortunate as to receive your Lordship's approval.

I have, &c.
(signed) John Macphail,

P. S.—Since writing the preceding despatch, I have received the opinion of Mr. Attorney-general Lee upon the Bill, and I beg to enclose a copy of it for your Lordship's information.

AN ACT to extend, to the case of Ships or Vessels carrying Passengers in less Number than Twenty, from any Port or Place in the said Island, the Rules and Regulations established by an Act passed in the third and fourth year of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, for extending to the British Colonies in the West Indies an Act passed in the fifth and sixth year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, for regulating the Carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels.

Encl. in No. 3.

THE Legislature has passed this Act in furtherance of the British Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into full and complete effect, under the impression that the framers of the Imperial Act were unaware of the fact of emigrant passengers under Twenty being transported from one colony to the other, in small vessels of from five to fifteen and twenty tons burthen, in consequence of which, serious inconveniences and mischief have arisen in consequence of the British Acts of Parliament not extending to such number of persons so circumstanced, but as the seventh clause of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, declares that any enactment, provision, rule or order which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to that Act, or to the Acts of his late Majesty William the Fourth, should be null and void and of none effect, doubts may arise whether the Act of this island may not be so considered. I will, therefore, venture to suggest to your Excellency the expediency of this point being established by the authority of Her Majesty's law officers of the Crown in England, previous to your Excellency's decision on the subject.

Copy of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq.

No. 5. Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq., 19 January 1842.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,

Sir, Westminster, 19 January 1842.

In obedience to the directions conveyed to us by your letter of the 15th September last, we have considered the despatch from Major Macphail, dated 5th August 1841 (No. 57), together with the draft of a Bill therewith transmitted for the consideration of the Secretary of State, which had passed the Council and Assembly of Antigua, but from which, for the reasons he states, he had withheld his sanction.

We have the honour to report, for Lord Stanley's information, that we find the object of this Bill to be, to apply to vessels carrying less than twenty passengers the provisions of the British Passengers' Act, which by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, had been extended, with certain exceptions, to the West Indian colonies.

Such an enactment, however, would be contrary to an express provision of the Extension Act here referred to. In the first clause of that Act it is stated that the rules and regulations required are to be observed in the case of ships carrying twenty or more passengers; and as such limitation is not expressly provided in the British Passengers' Act, there can be little doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature, in passing the Extension Act, to exclude from its operation the small class class of colonial vessels referred to by Major Macphail, in which fewer than twenty passengers are conveyed. By the 7th and last clause of the Extension Act, it is further provided that it shall not be lawful for any Colonial Legislature, or for Her Majesty in Council, to make any enactment repugnant or contradictory to either the Imperial Acts or any part of them, but that every such enactment shall be absolutely null and void. We conclude, therefore, that there is no power but in the Parliament of this country to enact or permit the enactment of such a measure as that which has been proposed by the Council and Assembly of Antigua.

Major Macphail, in pointing out this objection to the confirmation of the Bill, adds at the same time the expression of his opinion, that the rules and regulations of the Passengers' Act are as much called for, in reference to the class of small vessels employed in inter-colonial commerce, as to any other. He expresses, however, his surprise that but so few accidents are known to occur, and, indeed, only refers to the case of the "Betsy," a vessel which conveyed passengers from Montserrat, in proof "of the recklessness with which such vessels are navigated." But in this case, it is to be remarked that the official reports state that about eighty passengers were on board the vessel, and that she was subject to the provisions of the Act, but that the master was determined to evade them; the vessel accordingly put to sea in opposition to the authorities of the place, and was fired at from the fort in quitting the harbour.

The case, therefore, is perhaps not strictly in point; but under any circumstances we should have been unable to submit our opinion to Lord Stanley, that it was expedient to apply to Parliament for power to effect the proposed further extension of the Act.

By our letter, however, of this day's date, and its enclosure, containing the body of amendments which we have proposed for the Passengers' Act, we have entered fully into the nature and extent of the regulations which it appeared desirable that the Imperial Legislature should impose upon the conveyance of passengers within the West Indies. It will be seen that the present exception of all vessels conveying fewer than twenty passengers is retained, and that it is also proposed to exempt from the Act all vessels proceeding upon voyages of which the computed duration is less than three days. As we have stated in our notes, it is possible that experience may eventually prove that this description of intercourse among the colonies may require and admit of regulation and superintendence; but the exigencies of the case might then, we conceive, be met by a simpler and less burthensome enactment, of which the provisions would require to be framed upon a knowledge of minute details incident to the separate localities.

We have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

Sir, Government-house, Montserrat, 5 December 1840.

I HAVE the honour to transmit for your Excellency's information the enclosed proclamation, which I considered it necessary to issue, in consequence of the recent violation of the Act of Parliament "For regulating the Carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," by the schooner Betsy, that took away labourers from this island to the colony of Trinidad.

Observing your Excellency's proclamation in the Antigua papers upon this subject, and presuming that it may have arisen from similar results, I have only to express my hope that your Excellency will not consider I have departed from the strict line of duty in what I have done, without obtaining in the first instance your Excellency's sanction and approbation to do so.

I have, &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, by an Act passed by the Imperial Parliament, bearing date the 3d day of July, in the third and fourth year of the reign of Her most Gracious Majesty, intituled, "An Act to extend to the British Colonies in the West Indies, an Act passed in the Fifth and Sixth year of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, for regulating the Carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," it was enacted, that the provisions of the said recited Act should be thenceforth extended, except as thereinafter excepted, to the British colonies in the West Indies and South America, and in the Bahama Islands, and in Bermuda.

I do hereby proclaim that the provisions of the said extended Act are, except as aforesaid, in force in this island, Montserrat, from this day forth, and all Her Majesty's subjects are to take notice thereof, and govern themselves accordingly.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said island, this 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1840, and of Her Majesty's reign the Fourth.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

Sir,

MONTSERRAT.

Sir, Government-house, Antigua, 12 December 1840.

I HAVE been duly favoured with your Honour's despatch, No. , dated the 5th instant, enclosing to me the copy of a proclamation issued by your Honour, announcing the operation in the island of Montserrat of the Imperial Act extending to the West India Colonies the provisions of a former Act regulating the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels.

I beg to convey to your Honour my approval of this proceeding, and at the same time to remind your Honour that a subsidiary proclamation is also necessary, in virtue of the third clause of the Act in question, to fix the average duration of passages from Montserrat to other places with which communication may ordinarily exist, and to authorise the substitution for the kinds of food prescribed in the imperial statute, of other articles more commonly employed as sea stores among these islands.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, by the third clause of an Act passed by the Imperial Parliament, bearing date the third day of July, in the third and fourth year of the reign of Her most Gracious Majesty, intituled, "An Act to extend to the British Colonies in the West Indies, an Act passed in the fifth and sixth year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, for Regulating the Carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Governor or officer administering the Government of any of the British Colonies in the West Indies and South America, and in the Bahama Islands, or Bermuda, by any proclamation or proclamations to be by him from time to time issued for that purpose, to substitute for the articles of food and provisions specified in the said recited Act, such other articles of food and provisions as shall be a full equivalent for the same, having regard to the average duration of the voyage, and to the number of the passengers to be conveyed in any such ship, in such manner that the proportion prescribed in the said recited Act between the probable number of days to be occupied by the voyage, and the number of days during which provision is made for the subsistence of the passengers, shall be duly preserved.

I do hereby declare and proclaim, that for the purposes of the said extended Act, corn, meal, and rice shall be reckoned and considered as bread-stuff, and that it shall be lawful to substitute three pints of peas or seven pounds weight of yams for seven pounds of potatoes for the daily ration or allowance for each person on board, and two pounds weight of salt fish for one pound of pork or beef; and further, that a supply of fresh water at and after the rate of one gallon per diem for each day of the computed voyage for each person on board such ships, shall be carried in tanks or sweet casks.

And I do hereby also declare and proclaim, that the number of hours or days deemed to be necessary for the voyage of any such ship, according to her destination, shall be determined by the following rule of computation; that is to say, a voyage to—

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart., to Lord John Russell.

No. 1.

Government House, Barbados,
My Lord, 1 November 1840.

REFERRING to my despatches of the 30th of September last, Nos. 40 and 41, I have the honour of transmitting to your Lordship, together with copies of a despatch from his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor of Tobago, and of the Crown Law Officer's opinion thereon, an Act passed by the Legislature of that island, intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration."

Act, No. 335. Letter from Lieut.-governor to the Governor, 22 Oct. 1840, No. 89. Mr. Solicitor-general Clarke's opinion, 28 Aug. 1840.

In bringing this Act before your Lordship, I cannot withhold the submission of my respectful impression, that no officer administering the government of a West India colony should be authorized to disturb any neighbouring British settlement by the excitement inseparable from the employment of emigration agents amongst their inexperienced peasantry, who, if spontaneously disposed to emigrate, will be at no loss to effect that purpose.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 1.

(No. 335.)

AN ACT to encourage Immigration.

Encl. 1, in No. 1.

Tobago, 8 October 1840.

WHEREAS it has become necessary, for the continued cultivation of this island, that provision should be made for increasing the labouring population thereof: Be it enacted, by the Lieutenant-governor, Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's island of Tobago, and it is hereby enacted and ordained by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor for the time being, from time to time to nominate and appoint such person as he shall see fit, as Agent-general of immigrants, who shall be paid an annual salary of Three hundred pounds sterling, which the public treasurer is hereby authorized to pay by half-yearly payments on the warrant of the Lieutenant-governor in Council.

Preamble.

Lieutenant-governor to nominate Agent-general of Immigrants at a salary of 300*l.* sterling.

2. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who may be desirous of locating immigrants under the provisions of this Act on any property, may and shall make application to the Agent-general hereinbefore mentioned, fully setting forth in writing proposals for the situation of such intended location; and the number and description of the immigrants required, the nature of the labour to be performed, the rate of wages, the rent per annum at which land may be had on lease, with all other particulars; and every such application, with the above particulars, shall be transmitted by the said Agent-general to the several agents hereinafter provided, in the several places or ports from whence immigrants are to be shipped, for their information and guidance.

Persons desirous of locating immigrants to apply to Agent-general, setting forth particulars.

3. And be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor to nominate and appoint a Commissioner to proceed to the United States of America, and thence to Great Britain, or elsewhere, for the purpose of carrying into effect the object of this Act, by making all necessary inquiries as to the description of people most likely to suit the colony, and appointing agents for embarking emigrants under the provisions of this Act.

Lieutenant-governor to nominate Commissioner to proceed to United States, Great Britain or elsewhere.

4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor to name the several ports and places from whence labourers coming to this island shall not be entitled to the benefits of this Act.

Lieutenant-governor to name ports and places from whence labourers are exempted from the benefits of this Act.

5. And be it further enacted, That at any port or place from time to time selected by the Lieutenant-governor, it shall be lawful, in case the Commissioner hereinbefore provided shall not have appointed such agent, for the Lieutenant-governor to appoint some fit and proper person as an agent, for the purpose of facilitating the immigration of labourers into this island, and to allow to such agent such remuneration, to be paid by the public treasurer, as to the Lieutenant-governor may seem reasonable: Provided always, That such remuneration shall not in any case be given merely in proportion to the number of emigrants sent to this island by any such agent.

In case Commissioner shall not appoint an agent at the port or place selected by the Lieutenant-governor, he may appoint such agent, allowing agent reasonable remuneration.

Salary of Commissioner at and after the rate of 1,000 l. sterling per annum, with travelling expenses.

6. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner to be appointed under this Act shall be allowed at and after the rate of One thousand pounds sterling per annum, and his travelling expenses.

Agent-general to give security in the sum of 1,000 l. sterling.

7. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general shall find good and sufficient security faithfully and justly to discharge the duties of his office; such security to be approved of by the Lieutenant-governor, and to be to the amount of One thousand pounds sterling.

Agents to ascertain that emigrants are not induced to emigrate by fraud or false pretension, &c. and to explain the real advantages to be derived, &c.

8. And be it enacted, That such agent shall ascertain by personal communication with every emigrant previous to his or her embarkation from the port or place for which such agent shall have been appointed, that such emigrant has not been induced to emigrate by any fraud, or false or unreasonable representation; and is aware of the distance of this island from the place whence he or she is about to emigrate, and the difficulty of return; and such agent shall explain the real advantages likely to be derived by such emigrant from a removal to this island, at the same time cautioning such emigrant against unreasonable and unwarranted expectations; and such agent shall also ascertain that every such emigrant is in good health and not incapacitated for labour, by old age, infirmity or disease.

Proportion of number of passengers to the tons burthen of the vessel, and what conveniences she must possess.

9. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful to ship on board of any ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this island, any number of passengers exceeding the proportion of Three persons for every Five tons, old measurement, of the registered burden of such ship or vessel, the master and crew being included in and forming a part of such prescribed number; and that no ship or vessel carrying emigrants, and having more than one deck, shall have less than the height of Five feet and a half at the least between decks, and in case such ship or vessel shall have only one deck, a platform shall be laid beneath such deck, in such manner as to afford a space of the height of Five feet and a half at the least, and that no such ship or vessel shall have more than Two tiers of berths, and that no such ship or vessel, having Two tiers of berths, shall carry passengers on any such voyage to this island, unless there shall be an interval of Six inches at the least between the deck or platform, and the floor of the lower tier throughout the whole extent thereof; and whatever may be the tonnage of the ship or vessel, no greater number of passengers shall be taken on board such ship or vessel than shall be after the rate of One such person for every Ten superficial feet of the lower deck or platform, unoccupied by goods or stores not being the personal baggage of such persons.

Computation of children.

10. And be it further enacted, That in the computation of the number of passengers within the meaning of this Act, Two children, each being under the age of Fourteen years, or Three children, each being under the age of Three years, shall in all cases be computed as one person only, and that children under the age of Twelve months shall not be included in such computation.

Amount of ship stores and water during the voyage.

11. And be it further enacted, That there shall be actually laden and on board of every ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island, at the time of the departure of such ship or vessel from the port or place at which such labourers shall be embarked, good and wholesome provisions for the use and consumption of the said passengers, over and above the victualling of the crew, to the amount or in the proportion following; that is to say,—a supply of pure water to the amount of Five gallons to every week of the computed voyage for every passenger on board such ship or vessel; such water to be carried in tanks or sweet casks, and a supply of bread, biscuit, oatmeal or bread stuffs, to the amount of Seven pounds weight to every week of the computed voyage for every such passenger: Provided always, That when any such ship or vessel shall be destined to call at a port or place in the course of her voyage, for the purpose of filling up her water-casks, a supply of water, at the rate before-mentioned, for every week of an average voyage to such port or place of calling shall be deemed to be a compliance with this Act.

Proviso: If ship call at any place for a supply of water, the supply to be at the rate herein mentioned.

Number of weeks allowed for the voyage from different places.

12. And be it further enacted, That the number of weeks deemed to be necessary for the voyage of any ship or vessel to the colony of Tobago, from the places hereinafter named, shall be determined by the following rate of computation; that is to say,—for a voyage from the United States of North America, Five weeks; for a voyage from the British possessions in North America, Six weeks; for a voyage from the coast of Africa, North of Cape Palmas, Six weeks; and South of Cape Palmas, Ten weeks; for a voyage from Malta, or other port or place in the Mediterranean, Eight weeks; and from any place to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, Twenty weeks.

Before vessel is cleared, provisions and water for passengers and crew must be surveyed, and her sea-worthiness ascertained.

13. And be it further enacted, That before any such ship or vessel shall be cleared out on any such voyage, the agent appointed under this Act for the port or place from which such ship or vessel shall be cleared out, shall survey or cause to be surveyed out by some competent person the provisions and water hereinbefore required to be on board, for the consumption of the passengers, and shall ascertain that the same are in good and sweet condition; and also that over and above the same, there is on board an ample supply of water and stores for the victualling of the crew of the ship or vessel; and shall also ascertain that such ship or vessel is generally reputed sea-worthy, and that the directions hereinbefore contained for securing the health and safety of the passengers have been complied with, and shall grant a certificate thereof under his hand to the master of such ship or vessel.

14. And

14. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island shall be bound to provide for and furnish to every such emigrant and his wife and children a sufficient quantity of good and wholesome provisions for his, her, and their daily maintenance during such voyage, and during the space of Forty-eight hours next after the arrival of such ship or vessel in this island; unless in any case it shall have been expressly stipulated and agreed between any such emigrant and the master of such ship or vessel, that such emigrant, his wife and children, shall not be entitled to such maintenance.

Master during voyage to provide daily for each immigrant sufficient quantity of good food, and for forty-eight hours after arrival, unless otherwise agreed by the immigrant.

15. And be it further enacted, That two copies of this Act, authenticated by the signature of the agent at the port or place from which such emigrant shall come, shall be delivered to the master, on demand, by such agent at the time of clearance, and shall be kept on board of every ship or vessel carrying such emigrants as aforesaid; and that one of such copies shall, upon request made at reasonable times to the master of the ship or vessel, be produced to any passenger for his perusal.

Two copies of this Act to be delivered to the master; one to be produced to any passengers when required.

16. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this colony shall, before clearing out such ship or vessel, deliver to such agent at the port or place at which such ship or vessel shall be cleared out, a list in writing, together with a duplicate of the same, specifying accurately as may be, the names, ages and occupations of all and every the emigrants on board such ship or vessel; and such agent shall thereupon deliver to the said master a counterpart of such list, signed by such agent; and the said master shall, on the arrival of such ship or vessel in this island, and previous to the disembarkation of any such emigrants, give notice of the arrival of such ship or vessel, and deliver the said counterpart of such list to such Agent-general of immigration; and such Agent-general shall forthwith proceed on board of such ship or vessel, and shall ascertain, as far as possible, by personal inspection of the ship or vessel and passengers, whether the directions hereinbefore contained with regard to the situation of the berths of such ship or vessel, the proportion of the passengers to the burden and measurement of such ship or vessel, and the maintenance of the emigrants during such passage, have been complied with; and such Agent-general shall personally muster such emigrants, and compare the number and names of such emigrants, with the counterpart of such lists; and shall certify in writing, under his hand, upon such counterpart, the total number of emigrants then living and being on board of such vessel; and in case any such emigrant shall have died during the passage, or the number or names of the emigrants shall differ from the number or names stated in such counterpart, the Agent-general shall note such death or difference upon such counterpart, and thereupon shall grant a license under his hand for the disembarkation and landing of such emigrants.

Master before clearing out to deliver to agent a list of immigrants on board; a counterpart of which is to be delivered to the master, to be given on arrival to Agent-general, who is to proceed on board and ascertain the particulars herein set forth.

17. And be it further enacted, That if the Agent-general, on such personal inspection of the ship or vessel and emigrants, shall be satisfied that the provisions of this Act have been complied with, he shall grant a certificate, under his hand, of the arrival in this island of such emigrants respectively, and the place from which, and the ship or vessel in which such emigrants shall have arrived, and the sums of money payable in respect of such emigrants; and such sums shall be paid by the Public Treasurer on the warrant of the Lieutenant-governor, granted on the certificate of the Agent-general of immigrants.

If Agent-general be satisfied that the provisions of this Act have been complied with, he is to grant certificate, &c.

18. And be it further enacted, That such Agent-general shall keep a register of all persons in respect of whom any such certificate, as aforesaid, shall be granted, and of the ship or vessel in which the port from which and the time at which such persons shall have arrived in this island; which registry shall be made up to the First day of September in each year; and copies thereof laid before the Governor, Council and House of Assembly, at their first meeting thereafter.

Agent-general to keep register.

19. And be it enacted, That if any such ship or vessel bringing emigrants to this island shall carry any number of passengers exceeding by more than one person in fifty, the proportion authorized and allowed by this Act; or if such ship or vessel shall not be of the height between decks hereinbefore required; or if such a platform, as hereinbefore directed, shall not be laid and continued throughout the whole duration of any such voyage, in such manner as is hereinbefore required; or if there shall be more than two tiers of berths; or if there shall not be throughout the whole duration of any such voyage such an interval as is hereinbefore prescribed between the deck and the floor of the lower tier of berths; or if any such ship or vessel shall clear out and put to sea, not having on board such water and provisions as aforesaid, for the use and consumption of the passengers, of the kind, and to the amount, and in the proportion hereinbefore directed; or if any such ship or vessel shall be cleared out before such lists of emigrants shall have been delivered in manner and form aforesaid; or if any such list shall be wilfully false; or if the copy of this Act be not produced, as hereinbefore required; or if any emigrant shall not be maintained during such voyage, and for Forty-eight hours after his arrival, except in the case of a special agreement to the contrary; the master of any such ship or vessel shall, for and in respect of each and every such offence, be liable, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace in this island, at any time within the space of Twelve calendar months next after the arrival of such master within this island, to the payment of a fine not less than Five pounds nor more than Twenty pounds sterling; and in default of payment of such fine, either immediately or at the time fixed by such justices at the time of making such conviction, to imprisonment in the common gaol at Scarborough, for any time not less than One nor more than Penalty in case of the contravention of the provisions of the previous clauses.

Proviso: Rights of parties not abridged.

than Three calendar months: Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That nothing herein contained shall take away or abridge any right of suit or action which may accrue to any emigrant in any such ship or vessel, or to any other person in respect of the breach or non-performance of any contract made or entered into between or on behalf of any such emigrant or other person, and the master, owner or owners of any such ship or vessel.

When there is no agent, or in case of his absence, Governor or Lieutenant-governor of British possession, or person appointed by him, or British Consul or Vice-consul of foreign possession, may act.

20. And be it enacted, That where any act, matter or thing is by this Act directed to be done or performed by, to or with the agent at any port or place, the same, in case there shall be no such agent, or such agent shall be absent or incapable to act, shall or may be done or performed by the Governor or Lieutenant-governor, or any person appointed for the purpose by the Governor or Lieutenant-governor of the port or place, if the same shall be a British possession, or by the British Consul or Vice-consul of the port or place, if the same shall not be a British possession from which such ship or vessel shall be cleared out.

Provision of this Act in respect of certain particulars not to extend to certain cases, &c.

21. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained in respect of the proportion to be observed between the number of passengers and the registered burden of such ship or vessel, or in respect to the situation of the berths of such ship or vessel, or to the superficial measurement of the deck or platform of such ship or vessel, or to the provisions to be laden on board of such ship or vessel, or with respect to the counterpart of the list to be certified, or the certificates to be granted at the port or place of embarkation, shall extend to any ship or vessel carrying emigrants to this island, in case where the number of persons shall not exceed the number of one person for every five tons, old measurement, of the registered burden of such ship or vessel, or to any case where the number of emigrants arriving in any ship or vessel at one and the same time shall not exceed the number of twelve, or to any ship or vessel in the service of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Admiralty, or in the service of Her Majesty's Postmaster-general, or of the East India Company; but in all such cases no passage or maintenance money shall be allowed or paid in respect of such emigrants, unless the Agent-general of immigrants shall have first ascertained by personal inspection of the ship or vessel and passengers that such emigrants have not been induced to emigrate by any fraud, or false or unreasonable representations, and that every proper care and attention has been paid by the master of such ship or vessel to the health, comfort and safety of such emigrants during the passage, and shall have certified the same to the Governor by certificate under his hand.

Proportion of sexes not to exceed five males to four females.

22. And be it enacted, That, except as hereinafter provided, in every case of immigrants being brought to this island under the provisions of this Act, the numbers of males and females on board the ship or vessel in which such immigrants shall come into this colony shall be so far equal that the numbers of one sex shall not exceed the numbers of the other sex in a greater proportion than five males to four females: Provided always, That this shall not be construed to restrict labourers from the neighbouring islands from coming to or being brought into this colony in any number not exceeding ten in any one vessel, without regard to such equality in the numbers of one sex to the numbers of the other sex.

Proviso: Restriction not to extend to labourers arriving from neighbouring islands, and in numbers not exceeding ten.

Immigrants exempted from payment of taxes, or performance of public duty or service.

23. And be it enacted, That no immigrant brought into this island under the provisions of this Act shall be subject or liable to the payment of any tax or the performance of any public service, until such immigrant shall have resided in this colony for a space of two years, to be computed from the date of his or her arrival.

Agent-general to make out quarterly statements.

24. And be it further enacted, That the said Agent-general shall once in every Three months lay before the Lieutenant-governor in Council a statement of the number of immigrants imported, and of the monies expended under this Act.

Duty of agents.

25. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said agents to use all such means as may be requisite to procure persons willing to emigrate to this island, and to lay before such persons the proposals that may be transmitted to the said agents, and fully to explain the same; and to embark such persons for this island, and to defray the expense of conveying such persons to the port of embarkation, or incidental thereon, or to enter into arrangements with any person or persons willing to defray such expense, or any part thereof, and to agree for the passage-money, and for the proper care, feeding and accommodation on ship-board as hereinbefore prescribed, and the landing in this island of such immigrants, and generally to make such arrangements as may be requisite.

Agent-general to keep a register of persons desirous of employing emigrants, &c.

26. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general of immigrants shall keep a register of the names of all persons who are willing and desirous of giving employment to such immigrants immediately on their arrival in this colony, in which shall be stated the number and description of such immigrants which each of such persons is desirous of employing, and whom such person can accommodate with proper salubrious habitations, the nature of the employment, and the rate of wages and allowances which such person will pay and allow to such immigrants.

Information to be furnished immigrants by Agent-general of proposals for employment.

27. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general of immigrants shall, immediately on the arrival of any such immigrants in this colony, communicate to such immigrants the names of such persons desirous of employing them, as may be inserted in his register, the particulars of the proposed employment, and shall give to such immigrants all the necessary information and explanations, in order that they may clearly understand the locality of the residence of the several proposed employers, the nature of the several employments, the rate rate of wages, and the expenses of living in the several districts of the colony, and all other particulars necessary to enable such immigrants to choose freely, and in the manner most advantageous to themselves, the place of their location.

28. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general of immigrants shall give notice forthwith to such persons desirous of employing immigrants, who may be selected by such immigrants as their employers, so that the necessary means of transporting themselves, their families and baggage, to the place of their location may be provided without any delay.

Notice to be given by Agent-general of the selection by immigrants of their employer for the transport to the place of location.

29. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general of immigrants shall, on the first and fifteenth of every month, give in a return to the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being, stating the number of applications made to him by persons for employing immigrants, and the number of immigrants required by persons making such applications, to whom they can immediately provide proper and comfortable habitations.

Agent-general to furnish Lieutenant-governor with a return of immigrants, stating the number of applications made to him for employing immigrants, &c. on the 1st and 15th of every month.

30. And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall appear to the Agent-general of immigrants to be necessary to provide temporary accommodation in the town of Scarborough for any number of immigrants arriving here, he shall forthwith present to the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being, a requisition stating the number of such immigrants, distinguishing the male from the female and adults from children, and thereupon the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being shall make order for lodging such immigrants in the buildings already provided or which may hereafter be provided for that purpose, and shall also cause such immigrants to be provided with proper food during such time as to him shall seem proper, and shall cause the necessary expenses thereof to be paid from the colonial treasury: Provided always, That, except in case of sickness or other extraordinary circumstance, no such immigrants shall be so lodged and found at the public expense for any longer time than Three days, unless such immigrants shall be ready and willing to work for fair wages, and shall have been really and bonâ fide unable to find employment.

In case of Agent-general deeming it necessary to provide accommodation in the town of Scarborough for immigrants on their arrival, Lieutenant-governor, &c. shall, on a requisition from Agent-general for that purpose, make order for lodging and food for such immigrants.

Immigrants not to be lodged and found at the public expense for any longer time than three days, except in cases of sickness or want of employment.

31. And be it further enacted, That the Agent-general of immigrants shall, once in every Three months, lay before the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being, in Council, a return stating the amount of all sums expended in the lodging and finding of such immigrants, under the foregoing regulations, specifying in detail all the particulars of such expenditure.

Agent general to lay before Lieutenant-governor, &c. in Council once in every three months, a detailed return of expenses incurred in lodging and finding immigrants under foregoing regulations.

32. And be it further enacted, That, for meeting the expenses of the said agents in the discharge of their duties under the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for the said Public Treasurer from time to time to transmit and lodge in the hands of the Colonial Bank in London, such sums of money as may be requisite for the said purpose, upon the usual terms, and shall authorize such banking-house to pay and discharge the drafts of such authorized agents as aforesaid (of whom due information is to be given to the said banking-house); and with each such draft the said agent shall forward to the said banking-house in duplicate, and by the first mail packet to the said public treasurer, in duplicate, a particular account of the expenses for which each separate draft shall be so drawn.

Public treasurer to transmit money from time to time to meet the expenses of agents.

33. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being may and shall issue and pay from the colonial treasury, for or in respect of every labourer who shall come to this colony for the purpose of settling therein, from any port or place entitled to the benefits of this Act, such sums of money, for defraying the expense of the passage, and maintenance during the passage, of such labourer, and the wife and child or children of such labourer, as shall from time to time be fixed and allowed by order of the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being, with the advice and consent of the Council; provided, that the expense so incurred shall not exceed what is customary from the port of their embarkation; and provided also, that such labourers are approved by the Agent-general as a proper description of people.

Expenses of importation of immigrants to be paid out of the Colonial Treasury at a rate to be fixed by Lieutenant-governor.

34. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That the expenses of the passage, and maintenance during the passage, of all labourers who shall come into this colony for such purpose as aforesaid, shall in all cases be paid from and out of the colonial treasury, notwithstanding that the sums to be allowed for the same shall not have been previously fixed as hereinbefore directed; and that where no order shall have been made for fixing the same, the Agent-general of immigrants shall certify under his hand to the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being what reasonable sums should be allowed in respect to such labourers, their wives and children, with reference to the distance of the place from which they shall have come, and the nature of the voyage, and as nearly as may be in proportion to the sums already fixed by the Lieutenant-governor and Council in respect of other places; and it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government to direct that the sums so certified in respect of every such immigrant, his wife and children, shall be paid, and to issue a warrant for the payment thereof, by the public treasurer, out of any monies in his hands appropriated to the purposes of immigration.

Where no rates fixed, reasonable expenses to be paid as nearly as may be in proportion to the rates already fixed.

Labourers imported at the public expense not to depart this island within two years without repayment of expenses.

35. And for preventing frauds by persons disposed to entice such labourers to other places, after having been introduced at the expense of this colony; be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any labourer or person whose passage-money and expenses shall have been paid as aforesaid to depart from this island within Two years, to be computed from the day of his or her arrival here, unless such labourer, or some person on his or her behalf, shall repay into the public treasury such amount as shall have been paid for or on account or in respect of the passage and maintenance during the passage of such labourer as hereinbefore directed: provided always, that one moiety of the expense so to be incurred in bringing such labourer into this colony as aforesaid shall be repaid into the public treasury by the first employer of such immigrant, and such payment shall be considered as a payment on behalf of such labourer within the meaning of this enactment; but such payment shall not raise any implied promise or undertaking on the part of such labourer to work for such employer, or to repay him as for money lent or advanced, or paid, laid out or expended at the request of such labourer; and every person who shall employ any immigrant, and refuse or omit to pay into the public treasury, within Ten days after engaging the services of such labourer, a moiety of the expense incurred in bringing such labourer into this colony as aforesaid, shall, on summary conviction before any justice of the peace of such refusal or omission, forfeit to the use of Her Majesty, for the public service, the full amount of such expense, to be recovered by warrant of distress, under the hand and seal of such justice of the peace; and in default of goods whereon to levy, the offender to be committed to the nearest gaol for the space of Thirty days; and every such conviction shall operate to cancel the contract or agreement entered into between such employer and such immigrant.

Proviso: One moiety of such expenses to be repaid by the first employer, and shall be considered as payment on behalf of the labourer.

Penalty.

Bond to be entered into by masters of vessels not to carry away immigrants without a passport.

36. And be it further enacted, That every master or commander of every merchant-ship or vessel trading to this island shall, before he be admitted to an entry at the Custom-house, enter into bond, at the Secretary's office, with one good and sufficient security, to be bound jointly and severally in the sum of Five hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, conditioned not to carry off from this island any labourer or servant, without a passport granted to him or her by the Agent-general of immigrants, countersigned by the public treasurer, and certifying that such labourer or servant may lawfully depart the said island; and it shall be lawful for the Colonial Secretary to charge for the taking of every such bond the sum of Ten shillings, and no more; but it shall not be lawful for the said Agent-general of immigrants or public treasurer to demand or take any fee or reward for any such passport, but the said Agent-general of immigrants and public treasurer shall grant such passport gratis to every applicant who, having complied with the provisions of this Act, may desire to depart from this island.

No contract to be valid unless made on the land of this island.

37. And be it further enacted, That no contract for service, whether by deed or parol, shall be valid against or binding upon any labourer or servant entitled to the benefits of this Act, unless such contract shall be made upon the land of this island, and in the presence and with the approbation of the Agent-general of immigrants, or a stipendiary justice of the peace.

No contract to be valid against labourer for a longer term han one year.

38. And be it further enacted, That no contract for service, whether by deed or by parol, made or entered into by any immigrant shall be valid against or binding upon such immigrant for any longer term than Twelve calendar months.

Wages to be paid in money.

Penalty on trucking.

39. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any employer or person acting as the agent or subordinate of any employer, to truck with any labourer or servant for his or her wages, but such wages shall be paid in money; and every person guilty of trucking with any labourer or servant for his or her wages, in violation of this Act, shall for every such offence, upon conviction thereof before any justice of the peace, forfeit the sum of Five pounds to Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors, to the public uses of this colony, to be recovered by warrant of distress under the hand and seal of such justice of the peace, and in default of goods whereon to levy, the offender shall be committed to the nearest gaol for the space of Ten days.

No immigrants to be located unless provision has been made for his residence and maintenance.

40. And be it further enacted, That no immigrant brought to this island under the provisions of this Act shall on his arrival be located upon any property, unless the Agent-general of immigrants shall be satisfied that due provision has been made for the residence and maintenance of such immigrant, and shall give a written permission to the person wishing to employ such immigrant on his arrival, and likewise to such immigrant, to enter into any such mutual agreement as to them shall seem most advantageous.

Persons employing emigrants, &c. without the written permission before directed liable to a penalty of 50*l.*

41. And whereas it is necessary to provide that immigrants shall not be exposed to liability to sickness, privation and hardships, from being engaged by persons not having adequate means for their support, or proper dwellings for their reception; be it enacted, That if any person or persons shall engage the service of any immigrant or immigrants brought to this island under this Act, without such written permission as hereinbefore directed, or the owner or acting manager of any lands in which such immigrant shall be found dwelling, with the privity of such owner or manager, without such written permission, any or either of them shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding Fifty pounds, with costs, for each immigrant engaged or found dwelling as aforesaid, to be recovered in a summary manner before two justices of the peace, of whom one shall be a stipendiary magistrate, and enforced by warrant of distress, under the hands and seals of the said two justices; the said penalty to be one-half half to Her Majesty for the public uses of the colony, and the other half to the informer; and in default of goods whereon to levy, the said offender to be committed to the common gaol of Scarborough for any time not exceeding Three calendar months: Provided always, that this shall be construed to apply to persons engaging the services of or locating immigrants in the first instance only; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to restrain any labourer from changing his employ at the expiration or dissolution of his first engagement, without any such permission as aforesaid.

Proviso.

42. And be it further enacted, for the raising and supplying of the funds requisite for the purposes of this Act, That it shall and may be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor, or other officer administering the government for the time being, in Council, from time to time, to issue warrants upon the public treasurer for the time being, for such sums as may be required, in each and every year, not exceeding in the whole the sum of Ten thousand pounds sterling in any one year; and the public treasurer is hereby authorized and directed to pay such warrants or orders out of any monies he may have in his hands or at his disposal applicable thereunto.

Lieutenant-governor to draw on public treasurer, but not to exceed 10,000*l.* in one year.

43. And be it further enacted, That the said Agent-general, by and with the consent of the Lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government for the time being, shall have full power to make such bye-laws and regulations for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act, as to him shall seem fit and proper.

Agent-general may make bye-laws with consent of Lieutenant-governor.

44. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of dispute between immigrants imported under this Act and their employers, the stipendiary justice of the peace of the district shall have full authority, and is hereby empowered to adjudicate upon the same, and to make such order thereon as to him shall seem just and equitable in the complaint made, and if deemed necessary, to annul and make void any contract or indenture between the parties, and to impose a fine on either party, not exceeding the sum of Twenty pounds, to be recovered by warrant of distress under the hand and seal of the said justice, the said fine to be paid to the public treasurer for the uses of the colony; and in default of goods whereon to levy, the offender to be committed to the common gaol of Scarborough for any time not exceeding Forty days, unless the fine be sooner paid; and in all such cases it shall be lawful for the said justice to examine the plaintiff or defendant, or either, upon oath.

How disputes between immigrants and employers may be settled.

45. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall be and continue in force until the Thirty-first day of December One thousand eight hundred and Forty-four.

Act to be in force till 31st December 1844.

46. And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That whenever the term "Governor," or "Lieutenant-governor," is used in this Act, the same shall be construed and taken to mean the person administering the government of this island and its dependencies for the time being.

Words "Governor" and "Lieutenant-governor" defined.

47. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall not come into operation until Her Majesty's pleasure in that behalf shall be made known.

Enclosure 2, in No. 1.

(No. 69.)

Sir, Government House, Tobago, 22 October 1840.

Encl. 2, in No. 1.

YOUR Excellency having been pleased, in your despatch of the 29th August, No. 374, to authorize me to assent to the Bill for the promotion of immigration to this island, in the event of a suspending clause being added, I have the honour to acquaint your Excellency, that a new Bill having been brought in immediately on the opening of the present session, with the desired clause annexed, I have assented to it, and have now the honour to forward a transcript for transmission to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State.

TOBAGO.

With a view to lessen the chance of the Bill's rejection in England, I advised that the alterations suggested by the learned Solicitor-general of Barbados should be introduced; but this advice appears not to have been received as I could have wished, and the present Bill is a literatim copy of the preceding one, with the addition I have mentioned.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Major-general
Sir E. J. M. M'Gregor, Bart., K.C.B. & K.C.H.
&c. &c. &c.

OPINION of Her Majesty's Solicitor-general for Barbados.

I HAVE perused the accompanying Act, and proceed, in obedience to the desire of his Excellency the Governor-general, to state my opinion thereon.

By the 3d clause, the Lieutenant-governor is to appoint a Commissioner, who is to proceed to America or elsewhere, and the Commissioner is to appoint agents at the different ports from whence emigrants are to come to Tobago; by the next, the Lieutenant-governor is to name the several ports from which emigrants shall not be entitled to the benefits of the Act. I should suppose that the word not is inserted by accident, as its omission would much better effect the purposes intended, and prevent mistakes. It would, I think, be advisable that the agents appointed by the Commissioner should be approved by the Lieutenant-governor, or that the Commissioner should only appoint agents at places previously approved by the Lieutenant-governor, so as to avoid the establishment of an agency by the Commissioner at a place from whence emigrants would not be entitled to the benefits of the Act. The word elsewhere would comprise the East Indies and Africa, places from whence, according to the present policy of Her Majesty's Government, emigrants may not be obtained; and, although this may in practice be deemed to be sufficiently guarded against by the discretionary power vested in the Lieutenant-governor, to declare the ports from whence emigrants are to be brought, still it may be fatal to the Bill at the Colonial Office, as involving a principle inconsistent with the policy of the minister. In this view of the question, the omission of the word not is the more important.

By the 35th clause, it is not lawful for any labourer, imported at the expense of the colony, to depart from it for two years after his arrival, unless the expenses of his transit there be repaid to the colonial treasury; and the first employers of emigrants are to pay one-half of the expense, which is to be considered as a payment by the labourers.

By the 36th clause, masters of vessels are to enter into bond not to take away any labourer or servant without a passport from the agent-general or treasurer.

Supposing it to be prudent to adopt this mode of securing reimbursement to the colonial treasury of the expenses incurred for the passage of immigrants, and that it does not operate, so as effectually to defeat the objects contemplated by the Act, since it is not probable that labourers will select an island where they will meet with such a restriction and expense on the natural desire to return to their own country, when there are others equally eligible; in all other respects where they do not exist, there are other objections to these clauses. These restrictions or departures will apply to labourers and servants, and to that class only; the clause will operate, as well on the present domiciled labourers and servants of Tobago as on all future immigrants thither. It is true that the passport is to be obtained gratis; but there is no summary mode of enforcing the issue of the passport by one entitled to it—there is no remedy for delaying granting it; and no redress for wrongfully or capriciously refusing it, save the expensive process of a civil action, which, considering the class of persons who will alone be affected by such a restriction, amounts, in fact, to a denial of justice, or at any rate will, in most cases, prove a remedy more injurious than the wrong it first inflicted.

By the 40th clause, no immigrant can be located on any property without a written permission from the agent-general to the person wishing to employ such immigrant on his arrival, and to such immigrant to enter into such mutual agreement.

This is very objectionable, since it in effect vests in the agent-general the disposal of the services of emigrants among employers, and deprives emigrants of that perfect freedom of selection, which is due no less to themselves than to the success of any scheme of emigration.

By the 43d clause, the agent-general, with the consent of the Lieutenant-governor, is to make "such bye-laws and regulations for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act, as to him shall seem fit and proper." These are very comprehensive terms, and might be construed so as to include powers far beyond what the Legislature would seem to have intended, or the case requires; these regulations should be limited to such points of detail as are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the law.

In its present form, for the reasons above stated, I cannot recommend the Governor-general to give his assent to the Act, but would advise that his Excellency should recommend its amendment upon such of the above points as he may deem important.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart., to Lord John Russell.

Government House, Barbados,
7 November 1840.

My Lord,

I DO myself the honour of herewith forwarding an Act passed by the Legislature of Tobago, intituled, "An Act in aid of an Act, intituled, 'An Act to encourage Immigration.'"

Act No. 336.

The operation of this Act being postponed by a suspending clause, until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be known, and it being stated that the House of Assembly is desirous to have an "opportunity of learning what would be agreeable to Her Majesty's Government upon the subject," I beg leave to request your Lordship's attention to his Excellency Major-general Darling's despatch, to the opinions of the Solicitors-general of Barbados and Tobago, and particularly to the objections urged against certain provisions of the proposed law in the report of the latter law officer; of all which documents copies are enclosed.

Letter from Lieut.-governor of Tobago, 24 Oct. 1840, No. 73, with Mr. Solicitor-general Wattley's Report of 21 October.

Opinion of Mr. Solicitor-general Clarke, 5 Nov. 1840.

Enclosure 1, in No. 2.

(No. 336.)

AN ACT in aid of an Act, intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration."

Tobago, 19 October 1840.

Encl. 1, in No. 2.

1. WHEREAS it is necessary for the continued cultivation of this colony to promote immigration, and for that purpose to appropriate a larger sum of money than it is advisable to raise by immediate taxation: We, therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, his Excellency Major-general Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-governor and Commander-in-chief in and over the island of Tobago, and the dependencies thereof, the Council and General Assembly of the same, do humbly pray Your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That for the purpose aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government of this island for the time being, to raise a loan not exceeding Thirty thousand pounds sterling, by the ways and means hereinafter directed: Provided always, That no greater proportion of such loan shall be raised in any one year than Ten thousand pounds, nor any proportion thereof after the Thirty-first day of December One thousand eight hundred and Forty-three.

Preamble.

Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being may raise a loan not exceeding 30,000 l. to be applied to the purpose of immigration; but not more than 10,000 l. to be raised in any one year, nor any part thereof after 31st December 1843

2. And be it and it is hereby enacted, That from time to time, as it may be deemed necessary to raise monies for the purpose aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government for the time being, in Council, to authorize the public treasurer to receive monies upon loan, and in consideration of such monies, to grant and issue to the lenders thereof, treasury receipts or notes, redeemable on the Second day of January One thousand eight hundred and Forty-seven, which receipts or notes shall be transferable: Provided always, That for such consideration as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government for the time being, in Council, to authorize the public treasurer to issue a proportion of such treasury receipts or notes redeemable on the Second day of January next after the date of such treasury receipts or notes, not exceeding in amount Two-thirds of the probable surplus of the land-tax hereinafter imposed, which would remain to be applied to the reduction of the principal debt or loan, after the payment of interest as hereinafter mentioned and directed.

Public treasurer may be authorized to issue treasury receipts or notes for money redeemable 2d January 1847.

A proportion of such notes may be made redeemable on the 2d January after the date thereof.

3. And be it enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the public treasurer to grant or issue any such treasury receipt or note for any greater sum than One hundred pounds, nor for any less sum than Fifty pounds, nor for any part of the sum of One hundred pounds other than Fifty pounds.

Treasury receipts or notes to be for sums of 100 l. and 50 l.

4. And be it enacted, That all such treasury receipts or notes as aforesaid shall bear interest, and there shall be paid to the holders of such treasury receipts or notes interest at the rate of Six pounds per annum for One hundred pounds; and such interest shall be payable at the public treasury in Scarborough, and shall be paid by the public treasurer out of the monies to arise from the land-tax hereinafter imposed, on the Second day of January in every year, until such receipts or notes shall be called in or redeemed: Provided always, That if such interest shall not be drawn out when due, it shall not be added to the principal, nor bear nor carry any interest.

Treasury notes to bear interest at the rate of 6 l. per centum per annum.

5. And to meet the annual interest to accrue and become due upon such treasury receipts or notes, and for the purpose of paying off the loan hereby authorized to be raised; be it enacted, That between the First day of September and the First day of December in each and every year, there shall be levied and raised a tax of Five shillings sterling per head upon all cultivated per acre upon all lands, used for depasturing cattle and stock.

The loan to be redeemed by a land-tax of 5 s. per acre upon all cultivated lands (except pasture lands), and of 2 s. 6 d.

cultivated lands in this island of Tobago, lands used for depasturing cattle or stock excepted, and upon all lands used for depasturing cattle or stock, Two shillings and sixpence per acre, to be paid into the public treasury, and to be applied by the public treasurer, in the first place and instance, to the payment of the interest which will become due on the Second day of January thereafter on such treasury receipts or notes as aforesaid; in the second place and instance, to the payment of such treasury receipts and notes as shall have been made payable or redeemable on such Second day of January; and in the third place and instance, to the payment of such amount of treasury receipts or notes redeemable on the Second day of January One thousand eight hundred and Forty-seven, as the surplus, after payment of the salary hereinafter appointed for the commissioner of the land-tax, may be sufficient to pay off, and the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government, by order in Council, shall direct to be called in and paid off: Provided always, and it is hereby enacted, That all treasury receipts or notes made redeemable on the Second day of January One thousand eight hundred and Forty-seven, shall be numbered, and shall be called in, and paid off in numerical order: Provided nevertheless, That when any such treasury receipt or note which shall have been called in shall not be presented for payment at the time appointed for the payment thereof, such treasury receipt or note shall be placed after all other outstanding treasury receipts and notes, and the payment thereof be postponed accordingly.

Land-tax to be applied, in the first place, to payment of the interest of the loan; in the second place, to take up treasury notes issued, redeemable at short date; in the third place, to pay the salary of the commissioner of land-tax; and the surplus to be applied to the reduction of the principal debt.

Proviso:
All treasury receipts and notes redeemable 2d January 1847, to be numbered, and to be called in and paid off in numerical order.

When not presented at the time appointed for payment, to be postponed and placed after the lowest number outstanding.

Commissioner of land-tax to be appointed.

His duty.

6. And for the purpose of assessing the tax hereby imposed, be it enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Lieutenant-governor, or officer administering the government for the time being, a commissioner of competent ability as a surveyor, whose duty it shall be in every year to rate and assess all lands liable to be taxed under this Act, and on or before the First day of September, but after the First day of June in each year, to make a return of the names of the persons whose lands are liable to such tax, the number of acres on each estate, piece or parcel of land liable to such tax, the number or name or description by which such lands or land are or is known, and the parish in which the same lands or land are or is situate, and the name or names of the person or persons in actual occupation of such land or lands; and every such return shall be certified by the said commissioner to be a just and true return, and shall be by him delivered to the public treasurer on or before the said First day of September: Provided always, That every piece of land, being of less extent than an acre, shall be taxed proportionally: Provided also, That whenever any person shall feel aggrieved by the assessment of such commissioner, it shall be lawful for such person to appeal from such assessment to the Lieutenant governor, or officer administering the government for the time being, in Council, by whom such orders shall be made in the premises as shall be just and proper; and such order shall be conclusive to charge or exonerate the land of such appellant with or from the payment of the tax assessed in respect thereof.

His returns shall be delivered to the public treasurer on or before the 1st September in every year.

Proviso:

Persons aggrieved may appeal to Governor in Council, whose order shall be conclusive to charge or exonerate the land.

Commissioner at the time of rating the land to give a note of the assessment to the landholder and public treasurer in the first week of September, to publish a notice that tax is payable on or before 1st December, and that the commissioner's returns may be examined at the public treasury.

7. And in order that landholders may be prepared for the land-tax when it becomes due, and that they may have a proper opportunity of appealing from any unjust or excessive assessment, be it enacted, That the said Commissioners shall, in every practicable case, at the time of assessing the land, deliver to the person in occupation of, or to some person upon the land assessed, a note in writing of the number of acres rated, and the amount assessed to be paid in respect thereof; and the public treasurer shall, in the first week of the month of September in every year, cause a notice to be inserted in the public gazette of this island, and also to be posted on every church and chapel door, that the land-tax is payable into the public treasury on or before the First day of December, and that the returns of the commissioner of the land-tax may be seen and examined by any person desirous of examining the same, at the public treasurer's office in Scarborough, between the hours of noon and two o'clock afternoon every day, Sundays and public holidays excepted.

Salary of commissioner 200*l.* per annum.

8. And be it enacted, That the commissioner to be appointed under this Act shall be entitled to receive a salary at and after the rate of Two hundred pounds per annum, to be paid out of the surplus of the land-tax as hereinbefore directed.

Duty of the treasurer in cases of default in payment of the land-tax.

9. And be it enacted, That, in every case of default being made in respect of the tax hereby imposed, it shall be lawful for the public treasurer for the time being, and he is hereby required, if such tax be not paid into the public treasury on or before the First day of December, to issue a warrant to the Provost Marshal General to levy upon and sell such land, if less than One acre, or if One or more than One acre, then to levy upon and sell such One or One acre and as much more thereof as may be sufficient to raise the amount of the tax due in respect thereof, with the costs of such warrant, levy and sale; and the Provost Marshal or his lawful deputy shall thereupon levy upon and sell the said land, if less than One acre, or if One or more than One acre, then such One or One acre and as much more thereof as may be sufficient to raise the amount of the tax due in respect thereof, with the costs of such warrant, levy and sale, and shall return such warrant into the public treasury within Thirty days from the date thereof, certifying on the back what he shall have done thereupon; and the monies raised by such sale shall be paid, deducting the amount of the warrant, levy and sale, into the public treasury, to the credit of the land, as to so much of such monies as amounts to the sum of the tax for which such levy was made, and as to the surplus, if any, to the credit and use of the person or persons having right thereto: Provided

Land to be levied upon, and in what proportion.

vided always, That no such warrant as aforesaid shall be issued by the public treasurer until he shall have given public notice in the gazette of this island, that the land in respect of which such tax is due and in arrear will be levied upon, unless such tax be paid into the public treasury within Ten days from the publication of such notice: Provided also, That the same fees and costs shall be allowed upon every warrant, levy and sale under this Act as are allowed upon warrants, levies and sales under any other Act of the Legislature of this island authorizing the collection or levying of taxes for the use of Her Majesty for the public service of this colony.

Proviso: No warrant to be issued against the land until notice shall have been given that it will be levied upon for the tax in arrear, unless such tax be paid up within ten days from publication of such notice. Costs to be allowed on warrants.

10. And be it enacted, That all treasury receipts and notes issued under the authority of this Act shall be numbered and dated, and shall be signed by the Lieutenant-governor or officer administering the government for the time being, and shall be countersigned by the clerk of the council and the public treasurer, and shall be transferable and assignable by full indorsement and delivery, but not by blank indorsement and delivery, nor by delivery only.

How treasury receipts and notes shall be numbered, stated, signed and countersigned; and how transferred.

11. And be it enacted, That the public treasurer shall enter in his books, in an account to be kept for that purpose, the number and date of every treasury receipt and note issued under the authority of this Act, the name of the person to whom such treasury receipt or note was granted or issued, the sum of money specified in and made payable upon or secured by such treasury receipt or note, and the names of the persons by whom such treasury receipt or note was signed and countersigned; and whenever any transfer shall be made of any treasury receipt or note redeemable on the Second day of January One thousand eight hundred and Forty-seven, such transfer shall be made at the public treasury, and in proof thereof shall be entered by the public treasurer in his book under the number of such treasury receipt or note, otherwise such transfer shall not be allowed, and shall not convey any right or claim to the money, nor to the interest of the money specified in such treasury receipt or note; and every such entry by the public treasurer shall express the date at which, and the name or names of the person or persons to whom such transfer was made.

How treasury receipts and notes to be entered in the treasurer's books.

Transfers to be made at the treasury, and entered in the treasurer's books under the number of the note transferred.

12. And be it enacted, That if any person shall steal any treasury receipt or note granted or issued under the authority of this Act, every such offender shall be deemed guilty of felony, of the same nature and in the same degree, and punishable in the same manner as if he or she had stolen any chattel of like value with the interest or deposit to which such treasury receipt or note so stolen may relate, or with the money due on the treasury receipt or note so stolen or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied.

Stealing any treasury receipt or note made felony of the like nature, in the same degree, and punishable in same manner as if offender had stolen any chattel of like value with the money secured by such note or receipt. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29.

13. And be it enacted, That if any person shall forge, counterfeit or alter, or shall cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited or altered, or shall knowingly or wilfully act or assist in the forging, counterfeiting or altering any treasury receipt or note authorized or required to be made or issued under any of the provisions of this Act, or shall forge, counterfeit or alter, or shall cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited or altered, or shall knowingly or wilfully act or assist in the forging, counterfeiting or altering any indorsement on any treasury receipt or note made or issued under any of the provisions of this Act, or shall wilfully utter to any person, or shall wilfully deliver or produce to any person acting under the authority of this Act, any forged, counterfeited or altered treasury receipt or note, or any forged, counterfeited or altered indorsement on any treasury receipt or note issued or made under any of the provisions of this Act, or shall wilfully, falsely and deceitfully personate any true and real nominee or nominees, indorser or indorsers, indorsee or indorsees, or shall wilfully utter or deliver to any person acting under the authority of this Act any forged, counterfeited or altered register or copy of register of any birth, baptism or marriage, or any forged declaration, affidavit or affirmation, knowing the same to be forged, counterfeited or altered, or shall have in his or her possession any such forged, counterfeited or altered treasury receipt or note, or any forged, counterfeited or altered indorsement, knowing the same to be forged, counterfeited or altered, with intent to defraud Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors, or with intent to defraud the public of this colony, or with intent to defraud any person or persons, or any body politic or corporate, then and in every such case all and every person or persons so offending, and being lawfully convicted thereof, shall be adjudged guilty of Felony, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court before whom such offender shall be tried, to be transported beyond the seas for Life, or for any term not less than Seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding Four years nor less than Two years.

Forging, counterfeiting or altering any treasury receipt or note, or any indorsement, or uttering, &c. any forged, counterfeited or altered treasury receipt or note, or indorsement, &c. &c. made felony, punishable by transportation for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or imprisonment for not more than four nor less than two years.

14. And be it enacted, That whenever the Second day of January shall fall on a Sunday, all treasury receipts and notes made redeemable on that day, and all interest becoming due and payable on that day, shall be taken to be redeemable and payable on the Monday next thereafter.

2d January falling on Sunday, payments to be made on the Monday next thereafter.

15. And be it enacted, That all treasury receipts or notes issued under the authority of this Act, and made redeemable on the Second day of January One thousand eight hundred and Forty-seven, shall be made according to the following form, lettered (A.); and that all treasury receipts or notes made redeemable on the Second day of January next after the date of the same notes shall be made in the following form, lettered (B.)

Enclosure 2, in No. 2.

(No. 73.)

Sir, Government House, Tobago, 24 October 1840.

THE House of Assembly having brought in a Bill to authorize the raising of a sum of money in aid of the Bill to promote immigration, with a suspending clause annexed, I have assented to it, as being essential towards the efficiency of the latter. Encl. 2, in No. 2.

I have the honour to transmit a copy thereof, for record at Barbados, and an authenticated transcript to be forwarded to Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

I enclose also for your Excellency's information, copy of Mr. Solicitor-general Wattley's report on this Bill; with reference to which, I beg to observe, that while it was under consideration in the Assembly, I suggested that the proposed land-tax should not extend to persons whose whole possession did not exceed one acre of land, on whom such a tax would fall with greater severity than on the more wealthy land-owners; but the suggestion does not appear to have met with general approbation, and, after an amendment made by the council, the Assembly have consented that the tax should be proportionally for any smaller quantity than an acre, instead of the tax for a whole acre being put upon any indefinite small quantity, as at first proposed. 21 October 1840.

An objection has also been made by the Solicitor-general to an error in the form to be observed in obtaining receipts for deposits, which misquotes the title of the Bill. This having reference to a mere form of words, introduced into an appendix, may not perhaps be very material; and the House of Assembly hope both these Bills may be allowed to go forward, in order that (if disposed of) they may have the opportunity of learning what would be agreeable to Her Majesty's Government on the subject, to which they are most willing to conform in a subsequent enactment.

I have, &c.

REPORT on the Act, intituled, "An Act in aid of 'An Act to encourage Immigration.'"

THE Legislature having passed the Act to encourage immigration, which, while it has for its object the great advantage of increasing its labouring population, and thereby augmenting the produce, and consequently the wealth of the island, will necessarily cause a considerable expenditure of the public funds, rendered indispensable that an auxiliary Act should be passed, raising the means of carrying the project into effect.

This has given birth to the present Bill, which, taken in the whole, may prove beneficial to the colony, but to the details thereof, there are objections which I will endeavour to point out.

The 5th clause, providing for the payment and redemption of the loan designed to be raised by the Bill, imposes a tax of 5*s.* per acre on land used for depasturing cattle or stock; and the 6th clause provides that every piece of land of less extent than an acre shall be taxed proportionally. This, I fear, will bear heavily on the poorer part of the population, such as those who, from infirmity of body or old age, may be unable to keep in cultivation more than a small portion of land, yielding to the cultivator but a scanty morsel for his subsistence. I think that such pieces of land ought to have been exempted from taxation.

The 9th clause makes it compulsory on the treasurer, in cases of the non-payment of the tax, where the defaulter is possessed of one acre of land, to issue his warrant to the provost marshal to levy upon and sell such acre. This may prove a peculiar hardship on the subject.

TOBAGO.

A much smaller portion of land in cultivation than an acre may be amply sufficient to pay the tax on the acre, and all costs attendant upon the levy and sale; but such is the enactment contained in this clause, that the treasurer must, by his warrant, command the marshal to levy upon and sell the whole acre, and the marshal, in obedience to such warrant, must do so, thus causing perhaps the ruin of an individual; when, if the clause required the treasurer in such cases to direct by his warrant, that so much of the land (as it does where the defaulter is possessed of more than one acre) as would be sufficient to pay the tax and expenses should be levied upon and sold, the party defaulting might have a sufficient portion left to enable him to obtain a livelihood.

Added to these objections, there is an error in each of the forms annexed to the Bill, of the treasury receipts or notes to be granted to persons lending money to the colony by virtue of this Bill, which, ere the Bill is passed into a law, must be amended.

In each of the forms the deposit is declared to be made, and the receipt or note redeemable by virtue of an Act of the Legislature, intituled, "An Act to raise a Loan for, and appropriate to the purposes of Immigration, Thirty thousand Pounds, and to impose a Land Tax for the redemption of such Loan."

As no such Act has passed or is likely to be passed by the Legislature, and as the deposit cannot be said to be made, or the note redeemable, by virtue of an Act bearing such a title, but by virtue of the present Bill, its title must be inserted in lieu of the title at present in the forms, before the Bill can become a law.

Solicitor-general.

OPINION of Her Majesty's Solicitor-general for Barbados.

THERE being a suspending clause to this Bill, and his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor having stated that it has been passed, in order that, if disapproved of by Her Majesty's Government, an opportunity may be afforded to the local legislature of learning what would be acceptable on this important subject, they being most willing to conform to such wishes when known, I think it very desirable it should, for that purpose, receive his Excellency the Governor-general's assent, as its defects will doubtless be authoritatively pointed out.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,

No. 4.

Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 20 April 1841.

(No. 335 and No. 336.)

IN obedience to Lord John Russell's directions, conveyed to us in your letter of the 18th ultimo, we have considered the two Acts recently passed by the Legislature of Tobago for the promotion of immigration into that island, together with the despatches of Sir Murray M'Gregor, transmitting them to this country; and we propose in the present report to submit our opinion on the one intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration."

Before,

Before, however, we proceed to the provisions of that Act, we think it right to turn our attention to the observations of Sir Murray M'Gregor on the important subject of the inter-migration of labourers within the West Indian colonies. In his despatch of the 1st November, the Governor of the Windward Islands says, "I cannot withhold the submission of my respectful impression, that no officer administering the government of a West Indian colony should be authorized to disturb any neighbouring British settlement by the excitement inseparable from the employment of emigration agents amongst their inexperienced peasantry, who, if spontaneously disposed to emigrate, will be at no loss to effect that purpose." After giving our best consideration to the subject, we are obliged to say that we cannot agree in this opinion. It may be true that private and irresponsible agents might find it their interest to render the peasantry discontented in one colony, and induce them to emigrate to another, and for that purpose might circulate false and exaggerated statements of the advantages which would result to them from the change; but this is an evil which, we apprehend, cannot be prevented by legislation, and which is certainly not created by the legislative Act before us. By it, emigration agents for the island of Tobago will be appointed in certain places, not disapproved of by the Governor, to circulate amongst the labouring classes correct information as to the advantages which a residence in Tobago will afford them, and to collect and convey such persons as are willing to emigrate thither. These agents will act under official responsibility; they will have to report their proceedings and be answerable for their conduct to the government of the colony which employs them, as well as be under the observation of the authorities in the colony, which is the scene of their operations. It may be fairly presumed, therefore, that neither falsehood nor exaggeration will be permitted in their communications to the poor; and such being the case, we think it would be unfair in itself, and a departure from the spirit of the Emancipation Act, to prevent the labourers in the West Indies from obtaining the fullest information as to those places which furnish the best markets for their labour, and at the same time place the means of reaching them within their power. In Lord Glenelg's circular despatch of 30th January 1836, it is stated, "That during slavery, labour could be compelled to go wherever it promised most profit to the employer. Under the new system, it will find its way wherever it promises most profit to the labourer." No one, therefore, we conceive, who at all considered the good of the labourers, could object to their moving from one part of the colony to another, if they had reason to expect that they could thereby improve their condition; and we are unable to see any difference in principle, between their migration within the limits of one colony, and their emigration to another. Should the proprietors and employers of labour in the colony, from which the poor are likely to be exported, object to their emigration, and seek to prevent it, they will doubtless, if able to afford it, increase the wages and advantages which they give to labourers, until they are on a level with those which are offered by the importing colony, and if they cannot afford it, it appears obviously right that they should not cut off the poorer classes from the means of bettering their condition, and deprive them of good, greater than that which can be conferred upon them where they are. If the government of Tobago, therefore, should see cause to appoint emigration agents in other of the West Indian colonies, we think that it would be a measure tending to improve the condition of the poor, and to ensure for them a full remuneration for their labour; while, on the other hand, it would only subject the employers of labour to that competition amongst their own class to which the purchasers of any commodity may be justly liable, and which constitutes the true test of its value. Having taken the liberty of offering these reasons in explanation of the views we take upon this subject, we shall proceed to offer such observations as we have to make upon the provisions of the first of the two Acts referred to us.

It is an Act intituled, "An Act, to encourage Immigration," and it contains provisions which for the most part appear to us unobjectionable.

In the ninth clause, which fixes the number of passengers relatively to the size of the vessel, we would propose the same amendment which we recommended for adoption in respect to a similar clause in the Jamaica Immigration Act, namely, that the space should be fifteen instead of ten superficial feet, whenever the computed length of the voyage should exceed ten weeks. To this, for the present, we confine ourselves, though we doubt whether in the revision of the Imperial

TOBAGO.

Passengers' Act, it may not be desirable to require fifteen superficial feet for each passenger in all cases of voyages extending within the tropics.

By clause 22, it is enacted that the proportion of sexes is not to exceed five males to four females. By the Trinidad Ordinance the number is required to be equal; and we think the same rule, of course applying it only to adults, should be observed in this and all other cases.

By the 35th clause, it is not lawful for any labourer, imported at the expense of the colony, to depart from it for two years after his arrival, unless the expenses of his introduction be repaid to the colonial treasury; and the first employers of emigrants are to pay one-half of the expense, which is to be considered as a payment by the labourers; and by the 36th clause, masters of all vessels trading to the island are to enter into a bond not to take away any labourer or servant without a passport from the agent-general and treasurer.

We apprehend it must be open to insurmountable objections to provide by the general terms of a law, that all immigrants by public aid should, under certain circumstances, be prohibited for two years from leaving the island. Some of the people might be in ignorance of the provision till too late, and then would have just reason to complain of finding their liberty abridged in a manner for which they were not prepared; but if it were made a condition previous to removal, we should see no objection to the parties themselves being required upon their arrival to enter into contracts that they would be liable for the expenses of their passage, if they did not remain within the colony two years; and such contracts could then be enforced by the same general means as any other contract creating a debt. The plan of compelling the use of passports by all labourers leaving the island is one which we conceive could in no way be sanctioned.

By the 40th clause, no immigrant can be located on any property, without a written permission from the Agent-general.

This clause at first sight appears open to objection. We beg leave, however, to refer to the remarks which in our report of the 20th July last we had occasion to offer upon a similar clause in the Jamaica Immigration Act. We there stated that a condition of this kind appeared necessary to the general plan of the Act, as preventing the engagement of emigrants by persons who had not made due preparation for their reception; that the proper administration of the Agent-general would doubtless be secured by employing in that office some person of high character and standing, acting under the control of the Government; and further, that as the class most likely to be affected by any improper use of the power vested in the Agent-general by this clause was the proprietary body, they would be well able to assert their rights, and prevent any vexatious opposition to their obtaining the services of the labourers as they arrived in the colony. For the same reasons we are not prepared in this instance to object to the clause as it at present stands.

By the 43d clause, the Agent-general, with the consent of the Governor, is empowered to make bye-laws for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act. An apprehension has been expressed that this power might be construed too extensively. A similar clause, however, exists in the Jamaica Act; and we think that the power in question is sufficiently limited by being made subject to the approval of the Governor.

With the few exceptions, then, which have above been stated, we see no objections to the provisions of the first of the two Acts received from Tobago, intituled, "An Act to encourage Immigration."

Encl. in No. 1.

My Lord, Government House, Sierra Leone, 20 March 1840.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship, that a pretty extensive and growing disposition exists at present among the liberated African population, both of Freetown and the villages, to emigrate from the colony to their native countries to the southward and eastward. Some time ago, two small parties of 14 and 20 sailed for Badagry in the Bight of Benin; of which the first were, at their own request, landed and left at the British settlement of Accra, while of the second no intelligence has yet been received. At this moment not fewer than 200 persons, belonging chiefly to the Houssa country and the kingdom of Yarriba, lying east and west of the Niger, having subscribed the amount of four dollars each towards the formation of a fund, have purchased with it a condemned prize-vessel, in which it was their intention to proceed to Badagry, and from thence to seek their native homes, at a distance of some hundred miles inland. But as with this party were about to embark 100 children, I have deemed it imperative to prohibit for the present their departure and that of their parents. I have allowed passports for not more than 44 men and 17 women, who are all persons without children, and of an age so mature as renders them not likely to become the prey of the slave-dealer; and I shall wait until I am made acquainted with your Lordship's sentiments in the matter, before I permit the others to follow.

I have in vain cautioned them all against the dangers to which they may expose themselves, in returning without protection to those parts of the continent, of being again made captives, and again sold into slavery. They reply, that in their own countries they are free persons, and therefore not liable to be sold there, unless taken in war; and that in travelling through other territories in large bodies they encounter no risk. They allege that in this colony they are retarded in the career of improvement, that no opportunity is afforded them of increasing their means and further ameliorating their condition; and certainly they receive little encouragement from the Maroons and settlers, or from Europeans themselves, who on all occasions prefer for employment the tribes of Kroomen and Timmanees. The villagers complain that they are without a market for their produce. And to these causes is, no doubt, to be added, a restless spirit of change which appears to be natural to Africans.

At this moment it likewise happens that many of the Maroon and settler population, having been informed of the encouragement given to immigration in Trinidad and others of the West Indies, express the wish and purpose of removing thither with their families; and, in my opinion, nothing ought to be done to discourage their departure, which, if, as they conceive, it would be beneficial to themselves, would undoubtedly be not less so to the colony. But I am desirous of knowing from your Lordship what course it would be advisable for me to pursue, in the event of any considerable number of liberated Africans being induced by their example to decide upon removing likewise to the same part of the world.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Sir H. M'Leod to Lord John Russell.

My Lord, Trinidad, 21 July 1840.

No. 2. Despatch from Lieut.-governor Sir H. M'Leod to Lord John Russell. 21 July 1840.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 9th ultimo, No. 27, enclosing a despatch from Governor Doherty, reporting the wish of many of the Maroons and old settlers in Sierra Leone to emigrate to this island, and desiring me to state the advantages which might be placed within the reach of such of them as may be desirous of transferring their labour to Trinidad.

I have communicated on this subject with the best-informed parties in the island, and I find a great and general desire to obtain the services of such people as these settlers. They will, therefore, find on their coming here an extensive demand for their labour.

In addition to being furnished with a house and provision-grounds, they will receive for each task half a dollar in money, an allowance of half a pound of fish per task, and a small allowance of rum, or of money in lieu thereof, for each task, two of which are frequently performed in one day. As regards their conveyance to Trinidad, I find that if there were a probability of any considerable number of people coming, the outward bound ships to this island would make arrangements to call at Sierra Leone; or if your Lordship should prefer, without further communication, to instruct Colonel Doherty to meet the wishes of the Maroons and other settlers desirous of removing themselves hither, he might be authorized to take up the necessary tonnage according to the provisions of the Passengers' Act; in either case I would propose that the sum of 25 dollars a head should be paid for the passage of each person willing to work as an agricultural labourer. I would remark, however, that although we offer no encouragement by way of free passage to mechanics and others, that persons of that description are sure of finding ample employment with high wages.

On this subject, however, I write under the impression that your Lordship's attention will be directed to that part of the Queen's Order in Council of the 30th September 1839, which disallows so much of our Immigration Ordinance as refers to the introduction of emigrants from Africa, and that you will be pleased, if you think fit, to countenance the wish of these people to authorize me to make an exception in their favour.

If your Lordship should think it necessary to appoint an agent to superintend the embarkation of these people, and to inspect the vessels in which they should take their passage, perhaps Colonel Doherty would be good enough, with your Lordship's permission, to appoint one, at the charge of this colony.

My Lord, Government House, Trinidad, 14 Nov. 1840.

I HAVE the honour to enclose a letter which I have received from Dr. Rolph, of Upper Canada, with a copy of the reply I have made to him.

I have deemed it right to transmit these documents to your Lordship, as it involves a question of so large a body of emigrants coming from a British colony.

Encl. 1, in No. 3.

Sir, Ancaster, Gore District, Upper Canada, 31 August 1840.

I FIND on consultation with the coloured people of Canada, that from 300 to 500 will be happy to proceed to Trinidad to settle there permanently, provided I accompany them in the capacity of surgeon, as they feel reluctant to leave in numbers without that security; and they further repose in my known regard for them as a security against any interruption or interference on their route. As the season is rapidly advancing when they can no longer start from Quebec, I should like to be informed what encouragement the Council will hold out for my undertaking this voyage with them.

They are an industrious and loyal body of men, and would prove a most valuable acquisition to the beautiful island of Trinidad.

I think the Honourable Mr. Neilson can speak to their merits.

Enclosure 2, in No. 3.

Encl. 2, in No. 3.

Sir, Government House, Trinidad, 14 Nov. 1840.

I AM directed by the Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st August, which only came to hand on the 9th of this month. The season is so far advanced that it would be impossible now for emigrants to proceed by the St. Lawrence.

If it is your intention to come viâ New York, his Excellency would recommend you to put yourself in communication with Mr. Buchanan, the emigration agent at that city for this colony; but his Excellency wishes much that full information should be given to him of the class of persons coming, and of their expectations.

Those that are the most likely to succeed, and for whose passage here the public alone pay, are agricultural labourers. At present, an industrious man can earn his dollar a day; viz. half a dollar is the price for a task, two of which are constantly performed by the Americans who have arrived here. The allowances are, house-rent free; land for provisions for his family; three to five-and-a-half pounds salt fish or salt pork, with plantains, flour or biscuit, so much of each per week, and medical attendance gratis.

I am desired further to say, that the demand for field labour is very great, and any number of emigrants would find instant employment on their arrival; but, at the same time, it is fair to state, that unless a labourer is industrious, he will not find this colony answer his expectations. The Governor wishes that you would give him timely notice of their sailing, in order that preparation may be made for their reception.

With respect to your own remuneration, his Excellency could appoint you agent for the ensuing year, with a salary of 150*l.* sterling.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,

Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 21 January 1841.

No. 5.

Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen, Esq. 21 January 1841.

We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, transmitting, for our consideration and report, the copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-governor of Trinidad, enclosing a correspondence with Dr. Rolph, of Upper Canada, respecting the proposed emigration of a considerable number of coloured people from the province to the island of Trinidad.

It appears that Dr. Rolph's letter to the Governor of Trinidad is dated 31st August, but that it was not received in that colony till the 9th of November; and consequently, as the Governor remarks, it would have been impossible, by the time the answer was received in Canada, for the emigrants to have proceeded by the St. Lawrence. The Governor, however, alludes to the possibility that Dr. Rolph might think it well to conduct the emigrants by the way of New York, in which case he recommends him to communicate with the agent for Trinidad, in that city. Dr. Rolph, however, who has now arrived in England, states to us that he did not wait for the Lieutenant-governor's answer, but that he received it while on his journey through the United States, and forwarded it to his agent in Upper Canada. We think it, however, most improbable that the emigrants should already have left the province, especially as the Lieutenant-governor very properly requires that, previous to their departure, a full description should be transmitted to him of their capabilities and of their expectations; and that timely notice of their sailing should be given, in order that preparation may be made for their reception.

With regard to Upper Canada, we find that the question, whether there exists any important objection to encouraging the removal of the coloured population, has been referred to Sir George Arthur, and we doubt not that his report will give every information necessary for a decision on this point. Dr. Rolph states that the number of this people is about 16,000; and if they be as industrious and loyal as represented, their departure cannot be otherwise than a loss to their present place of settlement. But the general rule, we apprehend, must be, that no obstacle ought to be opposed to the migration of British subjects to any part of the Empire, which they are led, by authentic accounts, to consider favourable to their interests; and if the place to which they are desirous of going can afford them funds for their conveyance, we feel no doubt that none but the most serious objections will be deemed sufficient cause to deny them the benefit of the arrangement.

Passing by this consideration, we should say that the proposed scheme would fall within the object of the Trinidad Ordinance, for the encouragement of immigration into that island; and that the management of it would be sufficiently controlled by the provisions of that Ordinance. There is, however, one point to which we would suggest that the attention of the Governor of Trinidad should be particularly directed. Considering the demand there is in Upper Canada for labour, it would not appear to be certain, after making allowance for the difference of climate, that any body of useful labourers would materially improve their condition by emigrating from thence to Trinidad; and we are therefore desirous of recommending the addition of some precautions to those which are required by the Trinidad Ordinance to be taken for preventing persons from being led away by unfounded or exaggerated statements, as to the advantages which they would derive by their removal to that country. By the 8th clause of the Trinidad Ordinance, the duty of cautioning emigrants against unreasonable and unwarrantable expectations devolves upon the emigration agents appointed to act for the colony of Trinidad. But as these officers will be paid to collect emigrants, and the test of their merits will in fact be the number of emigrants whom they may transmit to the colony, some check upon their proceedings would appear to be desirable. We have recently recommended with regard to emigration from Sierra Leone; and we think that the same rule would be applicable to the present case, that every emigrant who has been accepted for a passage should be furnished with a printed paper, signed by the emigration agent for the colony to which he may agree to proceed, containing full information on all points relating to his removal and settlement in another colony, which would be likely to influence his decision; and that the date at which the paper was given to him should be written upon the paper by the agent, and 21 days allowed him to consider of the matter; after which period, he should be desired to set his own mark to the paper, in the presence of the emigration agent of the colony where he is residing, who should be required to witness under his own hand, that this had been done in his presence. In Upper Canada, the resident emigration agent at Toronto, whenever he is within reach, would appear to be the proper person to undertake this duty, and in all other cases, we would suggest whether it may not be done by local magistrates, without any additional expense.

The only change in the regulation which we would suggest, is that the words "a sufficient period" should be substituted for "21 days." We think that, as regards the emigration of coloured people from Upper Canada, that period might prove inconveniently long.

For the sake of greater convenience of reference, we enclose an extract of our paper on Sierra Leone emigration, mentioning the points of information with which we think it desirable that every emigrant should be furnished 21 days previously to his final engagement to emigrate.

We also take the liberty of suggesting that a copy of the Trinidad Ordinance should be forwarded to the Lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada, in order that he may instruct the officers connected with emigration in the province to co-operate with the Trinidad agent in seeing that effect is given to its provisions.

We have, &c.

ON each of the following points there should be given to every intending Emigrant as accurate Information as circumstances will admit.

1. WHAT would be the length of the voyage, and the difficulty of returning?
2. Whether, in the country to which it was his intention to proceed, it was customary to engage labourers by the day or by the year, or for a longer period, or for job work?
3. Whether, in return for his free passage, he would be bound to engage himself to any particular master for any fixed period, and at a fixed rate of wages?
4. What was the rate of wages and other advantages, such as lodgings, provisions, clothing, medical attendance, &c. usually given to black labourers?
5. Whether the wages would be paid regularly, or whether any deductions would be made on account of sickness or any other cause?
6. What was the usual length of a day's work; at what hour it commenced, and at what time it left off, and what time was allowed for meals?
7. What was the cost of subsistence, and in what particulars consisting?
8. Whether it was usual to work at extra hours during the season of crop, and whether any and what pay was given for such extra work?

Sir, Downing-street, 3 February 1841.

I HAVE received Sir Henry M'Leod's despatch, No. 93, of 14 November last, enclosing a correspondence with Dr. Rolph, of Upper Canada, respecting the proposed emigration of a considerable number of coloured people from that province to Trinidad.

Having referred this despatch to the Land and Emigration Commissioners, I now enclose for your information a copy of their report on the subject.

I have to express my concurrence in their views and suggestions, and I beg to recommend them to your attention. I have communicated copies of this correspondence to the Lieutenant-governor of Upper Canada.

My Lord, Government House, Trinidad, 13 Nov. 1840.

IN accordance with your Lordship's circular of the 27th July, transmitting an Act of Parliament, 3 & 4 Vict., c. 4, I have the honour to enclose an Ordinance, in conformity with your Lordship's instructions, which has been passed by the Legislative Council of this island, "To establish a Rate for Provisions and Allowances of Passengers carried on board of Merchant Vessels from this Colony."

Enclosure in No. 7.

(No. 13.)

TRINIDAD.

AN ORDINANCE to establish a Rate for Provisions and Allowances of Passengers carried on board of Merchant Vessels from this Colony.

Encl. in No. 7.

THIS Ordinance has been passed to establish a certain fixed rate for determining the usual length of voyages made from this island to other places, as required by the Acts 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 53, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 4.

(signed) Arthur White,
Colonial Secretary.

This Ordinance was brought into Council by the Attorney-general in order to give effect in this island to the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, which extends the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 53, to the British colonies in the West Indies. It has been assumed, though not without some doubt, that the regulations of the Passengers' Act, which are only enforced by that Statute in the case of vessels carrying passengers from any part of the United Kingdom, on a voyage to any port or place out of Europe, and not in the Mediterranean sea, are, by the terms of the first clause of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, rendered imperative on vessels carrying passengers from one of the West Indian colonies on a voyage to any place whatever, though only at the distance of one or two hours' sail, or even less, from the place of departure. Many, if not all of the provisions of the Passengers' Act seem to be provided exclusively for voyages of some considerable duration, and the enforcement of some of them, such as the 2, 5, 6, 8, 15 and 19 clauses would be excessively inconvenient in short passages, so that it seems very questionable whether it was the intention of the Legislature to extend them to such cases. I do not, however, think that the construction of the Act in this respect could be limited or affected by any local enactment. Some difficulty was also felt as to whether vessels sailing from this colony to any place in Europe or the Mediterranean would come within the terms of the Act; but it is assumed that they would do so, and, on this principle, such places have been included in the schedule, in which the average length of voyages is set forth, in order to determine the quantity of provisions required.

(signed) Edward Jackson,
Attorney-general.

AN ORDINANCE enacted by the Governor of the Island of Trinidad, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Council of Government thereof, to establish a Rate for Provisions and Allowances of Passengers carried on board of Merchant Vessels from this Colony.

WHEREAS by a certain Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the session held in the third and fourth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act to extend to the British Colonies in the West Indies an Act passed in the fifth and sixth years of his late Majesty King WILLIAM the Fourth, for regulating the Carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," it is amongst other things enacted, that the said Act should be, and the same is, except as thereinafter exempted, thereby extended to, and is declared to be in force in the British colonies in the West Indies in like manner and as fully as the same is in force in the United Kingdom; and that all and every the regulations required by the said Act to be observed in the case of any ship carrying passengers from any port or place in the United Kingdom, should, except as thereinafter excepted, be observed in the case of any ship carrying twenty or more passengers from any port or place in the British colonies in the West Indies: And whereas it is expedient that provision should be made for establishing and declaring a certain fixed rate for determining the usual length of voyages made from this island to other places, and for enacting that the quantity of water and provisions required by the said Act to be on board every vessel carrying more than twenty passengers from this island should be determined according to the rate so fixed: Now, therefore, be it enacted, and it is hereby enacted, declared and ordained by the Governor in and over the said island and its dependencies, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, and by the authority of the same, That the number of weeks deemed to be necessary for a voyage of any such ship or vessel carrying more than twenty passengers from this Colony to any other place shall be as follows; that is to say:—

	Weeks.
To the United States	5
To the British possessions in America	6
To any other part of North America	3
To South America, within the Gulf of Paria	½
To any other part of South America on the Atlantic north of the equator	2

Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to J. Stephen Esq. 1 March 1841.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office,
Sir, 9, Park-street, Westminster, 1 March 1841.

IN obedience to the directions contained in your letter of the 9th January, we have perused and considered the Ordinance therein enclosed, passed by the Legislative Council of Trinidad, "To establish a Rate for Provisions and Allowances of Passengers carried in Merchant Vessels from the Colony;" and we have the honour to report, for Lord John Russell's information, that, adverting to the tenor of the Imperial Act, under which the Ordinance has been issued, we see no objection to the enactments contained in it.

It is right, however, that we should mention, that the articles of food which may be substituted in the West Indies for those named in the Statute do not appear to have been declared by this proclamation, as permitted by the third clause. Unless the general words of the Imperial Act can be construed, without doubt, to include yams, rice and other similar food, some inconvenience might possibly arise from this omission.

With regard to the remarks made by the Attorney-general on the probable inconvenience of applying, without exception, the whole of the British clauses intended for long voyages and from the United Kingdom, to short passages, and between one West India island and another, we are obliged to express our concurrence in this view. We apprehend it would have been better if only the extension of two or three of the main clauses of the Imperial Act had been rendered imperative in the West Indies, and the adoption of the remainder left optional.

No. 10. Despatch from Lord John Russell to Sir Henry M'Leod, 20 March 1841.

I HAVE had under my consideration the Ordinance, No. 13, "To establish a Rate for Provisions and Allowances of Passengers carried on board of Merchant Vessels from the Colony of Trinidad," which accompanied your despatch, No. 92, of 13 November last.

Adverting to the Imperial Act under which the Ordinance has been issued, I see no objection to the enactments contained in it.

It is right, however, to mention, that the articles of food which may be substituted in the West Indies for those named in the third clause of the Statute do not appear to have been declared by this Ordinance. Unless the general words of the Imperial Act can be construed, without doubt, to include yams, rice and other similar food, some inconvenience might possibly arise from this omission.

You will, therefore, have the goodness to frame a Supplementary Ordinance to remedy the error or rather to remove the ambiguity I have pointed out. In the mean time I have to signify to you my approval of this Ordinance.

My Lord, Trinidad, 20 May 1841.

No. 11. Despatch from Sir Henry M'Leod to Lord John Russell, 20 May 1841.

I HASTEN to inform your Lordship of the arrival of 181 immigrants from Sierra Leone.

As there has been much diversity of opinion on the question of African emigration, I have considered that you would wish to be put in possession of the earliest information connected with this, our first attempt, at procuring labourers from that country; and I herewith transmit certain documentary proceedings relative thereto, as the mode best calculated to give your Lordship a true view of the subject.

I am happy to report that these people arrived in good health after a passage of 28 days, and I was rejoiced to find them much more advanced in every way than I had expected, all speaking good English, and many able to read and write.

This is to be traced to the Church Missionary and Methodist Societies, and reflects the highest credit on the exertions of these bodies.

I have seldom met persons more alive to their own interest, but I have recommended them to hire themselves in bodies of eight or ten; for, besides thus diminishing the feeling of strangeness, always more or less felt in a new country, it gives them a sort of mutual protection. I have also, as far as consistent with their free-will, given the preference to estates in the districts nearest to the seat of government.

Sixteen of these immigrants are Kroomen, vastly superior in appearance and bearing to the other races. They generally confine their labour to the shipping, but the high wages and other advantages on the estates have tempted even these to take that employment; but I do not look to their remaining at that work, and their return to their usual occupation will be of great value to the shipping ports.

We must not look to these people as settlers, but if this island answers their expectations, they tell me great numbers of their countrymen will come. They perfectly understand the facility afforded to them of returning to their native country, by working their passage vid England, and they are all, I believe, expert seamen. We shall thus establish a constant communication with Africa.

I enclose a statement of the terms upon which these immigrants have agreed on; but your Lordship will understand that they are perfectly free agents, and may leave their employers whenever they choose.

TRINIDAD.

As this is an experiment which I always advocated, I shall naturally be most anxious on the subject, and your Lordship may depend upon the fullest information on all things connected with it that Her Majesty's Government should be made acquainted with.

I have, &c.

Sir, Freetown, 18 March 1841.

Encl. in No. 11. Two gentlemen of great respectability have arrived in this colony, with a view of enabling such portions of its population as choose to avail themselves of the opportunity, to proceed, principally as agricultural labourers, to the West Indies.

And as this is a matter of much importance, it appears to me desirable you should be instructed not in any way to interfere with their proceedings, which you are neither to encourage nor discourage.

The people are free to go or to remain, exactly as they see fit; at the same time, if any fears you consider unreal, or if any hopes you consider delusive, are held out to the population of your district, you will have the goodness to inform me.

NOTICE to Emigrants to the Island of Trinidad.

IN addition to being furnished with a house and provision grounds, they will receive for each task half a dollar in money, an allowance of half a pound of fish per task, and a small allowance of rum, or of money in lieu thereof, for each task, two of which are frequently performed in one day.

PROCLAMATION.

By his Excellency Sir John Jeremie, Knt., Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Colony of Sierra Leone and its Dependencies, between the 20th degree of North and the 20th degree of South Latitude; Vice-Admiral, Chancellor and Ordinary of the same, &c.

JOHN JEREMIE, the Governor, being required to substitute by proclamation, for the articles of food and provision specified in the Act of Parliament passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, for "Regulating the carriage of Passengers in Merchant Vessels," such other articles of food and provisions as shall be equivalent for the same, having regard to the average duration of the voyage, and to the number of the passengers to be conveyed in any such ship, in such manner that the proportion prescribed in the said recited Act, between the probable number of days to be occupied by the voyage, and the number of days during which provision is made for the subsistence of the passengers, shall be duly preserved:

The Governor now proclaims that the following scale for victualling adult emigrants from Sierra Leone shall be established, for that set forth in the before-recited Act; viz.

1 quart rice, or 3 lbs. yams or cocoas, or 1 lb. biscuit.
½ lb. salt pork, or salt fish, or herrings.
2 gills palm oil.
¼ gill salt.
1 ½ gallon water.

For children in the proportions settled by the Act.

And it is ordered, that on board each and every ship carrying African emigrants there shall be a provision of at least one pound of yams or cocoas per day, for each and every adult passenger.

And it is also ordered, that the passage from Sierra Leone, and from the Gambia to Jamaica, or any other of Her Majesty's possessions in the West Indies, shall be considered likely to endure eight weeks, and from any part of the Gold Coast eleven weeks.

Given at Government House, this 30th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1841, and of Her Majesty's reign the fourth.

By his Excellency's command.

My Lord, Trinidad, 3 August 1841.

No. 13. Despatch from Sir Henry M'Leod to Lord John Russell, 3 August 1841.

I PERCEIVE in your Lordship's despatch to Sir John Jeremie, No. 24, dated the 20th March last, on the subject of emigration, that, although your Lordship considers it advisable that he should chiefly regulate himself by the laws of those colonies to which the emigrants are to proceed, yet that you do not prescribe this as an inflexible rule; I should trust, therefore, that your Lordship would be pleased to extend to this colony the indulgence granted to the Legislature of Jamaica, that the number of female emigrants, as regards the males, should be in the proportion of one-third.

I do not recommend that this ratio should be observed with respect to the emigrants from the West India colonies, but would confine it principally to the coast of Africa and America.

A strong reason for advising it in the former case is, that on the late arrival of emigrants from Sierra Leone, the Kroomen, on being told previous to their embarkation, that their passages would not be paid for by the Government, unless an equal number of females accompanied them, actually persuaded women of the very lowest character, and not of their own tribe, to embark with them.

As regards the labourers from America, who generally wish to emigrate in families, very great difficulties present themselves, on account of the proportion of males exceeding the number allowed by our ordinance.

If your Lordship should be pleased to give to this island the same advantages that Jamaica enjoys by the regulation as to the proportion of the sexes, I should solicit that the Order in Council relative to immigration into Trinidad may be so far altered as to meet the request I have made.

I have, &c.

No. 14. Despatch from Lord Stanley to Sir Henry M'Leod, 9 October 1841.

Sir, Downing-street, 9 October 1841.

I HAVE received your despatch, No. 77, of the 3d August, recommending that the Island of Trinidad should be placed on the same footing as Jamaica, in regard to the proportion of sexes to be maintained in the introduction of emigrants into the colony, viz. that the number of female emigrants as regards the males should be in the proportion of one-third.

Order in Council. 6th Oct.

I have the honour to transmit to you an Order of Her Majesty in Council, modifying to this extent the previous Order of the 30th September 1839.

I have, &c.

No. 15.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 11 October 1841.

No. 85. 20 Aug.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to you, for any suggestions and observations which you may have to offer, the enclosed despatch, which has been received from the Governor of Trinidad, transmitting a copy of the evidence taken before a Sub-committee of the Agricultural and Immigration Society in that colony.

For Despatch from the Governor Sir H. M'Leod, transmitting Evidence, vide Papers relative to Trinidad, presented by Command, 1842, page 62.

COPY of a LETTER from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to G. W. Hope, Esq.

No. 16. Letter from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners to G. W. Hope, Esq. 3 December 1841.

Colonial Land and Emigration Office, 9, Park-street,

Sir, Westminster, 3 December 1841.

IN obedience to Lord Stanley's directions contained in your letter of the 11th October last, we have considered the evidence and report upon the present condition of Trinidad, which have been recently forwarded to this country through the Governor of that island.

We find that this evidence has been taken by a committee of the Agricultural and Immigration Society of Trinidad, specially appointed by that body to inquire into the agricultural interests of the colony since the abolition of apprenticeship, their present condition and future prospects, and to recommend such measures as they might think conducive to the general prosperity.

The evidence runs to some length, no fewer than 21 witnesses having been examined, and there can be no doubt that a very full picture is afforded of the industrial condition of the colony, and of the means at present existing for raising produce from the soil. How far it may be also correct, and complete in all its parts, we are unable fully to determine. The Governor, in forwarding it to this country, at the request of the society, has not accompanied it with any remark. We conclude, also, that the society by which the inquiry has been instituted consists exclusively of the proprietors of the soil, or of those identified with them in interest. At the same time we feel bound to state that there is variety in the class of witnesses examined, and that there is apparent impartiality in the mode of conducting the inquiry. The character, moreover, and ability of the chairman of the committee, and above all the unanimity of the witnesses upon the most material points, give us reason to suppose that reliance may be placed upon several of the general results derivable from the investigation.

If we are correct in drawing this conclusion, the most useful service, perhaps, that we can render on the present occasion is to submit a brief digest of the evidence, and to offer, in conclusion, such remarks as the report of the committee, which is annexed to the evidence, appears to call for.

Before entering on the task, however, it may be right that we should state what is the general description of witnesses examined by this committee, and into what classes they may be divided; and as the main object of the inquiry undoubtedly was to ascertain the state of the relations subsisting between employers and labourers, it is necessary to consider whether the interests of the latter were sufficiently represented before the committee. We find, then, that the 21 witnesses examined may be divided as follows:

Planters and managers	7
Official persons	7
Roman Catholic bishop	1
Protestant clergymen	2
Miscellaneous	4

Of the seven planters or managers, one had formerly been a slave; but having been intrusted with the exclusive management of an estate, his feelings and interests may be supposed to have ceased to be identified with those of the labourers. The persons whom we have classed as miscellaneous are a native of Barbados, a surveyor, a professor of botany, and a barrister. It appears, then, that none of the labouring classes were themselves examined; and of those whose knowledge of them is derived from direct and personal intercourse with them, it is only the three clergymen, whose situation might be considered as in itself excepting them from all bias.

It may now be convenient that we should divide the digest of the evidence under three heads, which represent the most prominent objects of inquiry before the committee. First, the lands of the colony; viz., all that relates to their character and condition, and to the occupation of them. Secondly, the supply of labour at present existing in the colony, and the description and character of the labourers. And, thirdly, the introduction of fresh labourers, or immigration.

I.—Lands.

1. Fertility.—All the witnesses who speak on the point, agree in their testimony as to the unusual fertility of the soil over the whole island. Mr. Basanta, the late surveyor-general, appears to have made a calculation that four-fifths of the island were fit for cultivation, and two-thirds for the cultivation of sugar. But another witness, Mr. Brown, a sworn surveyor, who has resided in the colony more than 40 years, thinks that, with very trifling exceptions, the whole island is capable of most profitable cultivation; and that Mr. Basanta's assertion, that only four-fifths of the island were fit for cultivation, must have referred to sugars, which could not be cultivated profitably on the heights; but where any other description of tropical produce could be easily raised. Even on the small tract to the westward of the Arima river, to which alone, throughout the island, the witness considered that the term sterile might be applied, the most superior hardwood timber is found growing thick and close. Mr. Darling, a merchant and planting attorney, who has been between nine and ten years in the colony, says, "That cane-pieces have been pointed out to him which have been 40 years in cultivation, and are still perfectly good; and he believes that the island is capable of furnishing much more than a sufficiency of sugar for the consumption of Great Britain. Mr. Lockhart, who has been at the head of the botanical garden for more than 20 years, appears from his pursuits, and the opportunities he has had of making comparisons, to be the most competent of the witnesses upon this point. He has been into the interior of Africa, and has visited Cuba, Jamaica, the Bermudas, most of the Windward Islands, and Venezuela, on the Spanish Main; and he states that he has seen nothing in them equal to Trinidad, in the great variety and excellence of the soils, and particularly in its seasons, which are exempt from the droughts common to all the other islands, from Barbados to Cuba. He adds, moreover, that his experiments have proved that the spices of the east, and Mocha coffee, could be successfully cultivated.

TRINIDAD.

2. Superficial Extent.—The superficial extent of the island appears, by what the surveyor-general considers as the most probable calculation, to be 1,287,680 acres; and of this quantity only 208,379 acres have been granted, leaving in the possession of the Crown no less than 1,079,301 acres. It further appears, by the latest official returns, that of the land granted, only 43,265 acres are in cultivation, of which not quite one-half is planted in sugar-canes. In addition, therefore, to the large amount of land still held by the Crown, there are 165,114 acres of waste land in the possession of individuals.

3. Squatting.—The amount of unused land, joined to its extreme fertility, appears to have led to an extensive system of unauthorized occupation. This is stated to have arisen since the emancipation of the slaves, and to be upon the increase, although it is admitted that it has not extended into the interior. One planter mentions an establishment of 500 squatters in one locality, but the evidence is incomplete as to the actual extent to which this system has been carried. The return of all the persons who might be found squatting on the Crown lands, which was ordered by the Secretary of State in a circular despatch, dated 30th January 1836, is stated by a witness, who had filled the office of Colonial Secretary, never to have been made. There is an Order in Council against squatting, which was passed on the 6th October 1838, but the rules and forms of proceeding under it are stated by Mr. Knox, an English barrister, to be so numerous and complicated, that the order is virtually inoperative for private individuals, nor do proceedings appear to have been instituted under it by the direct authority of the Colonial Government. Mr. Darling also states, that the squatting cannot be prevented under the present Ordinance, from its inherent defects, and never will be, unless an executive officer is appointed by the Government to enforce it.

4. Roads.—Before quitting the first general head of "Land," it may be well to mention, that there is one point connected with the physical condition of the country, and the occupation of the lands, which is much dwelt upon by the principal witnesses—we allude to the difficulty of establishing lines of communication between different parts of the island, and of maintaining the roads which have been made. Mr. Brown states that this arises from the fertility of the soil. Another witness, that the nature of the soil is deep, stiff and tenacious, and that there is almost an entire want of the proper materials for constituting a road. Loss is hence occasioned to the planters, as, unless all the crop has been transported before the rain commences, it is impossible to move the remainder until the ensuing season, by which time it has declined much in quantity and quality. There is a concurrence of testimony from practical and scientific men in favour of railroads, which, from the level state of the country, and the abundance of good timber, it is thought would not only be the best means of communication, but ultimately the cheapest. The state of the communications, as they exist at present, would appear to act as a check upon the enterprise of the planters, and to present an almost insuperable obstacle to the extension of fresh settlements.

II.—Labour.

We now turn to the important question investigated by the Committee as to the amount and efficiency of the labour which can at the present time be obtained in the island, and be made available for the cultivation of the soil.

1. Population.—The actual numbers of the labouring population are not given in the evidence. The last census for the island which can be in any way relied upon was taken in 1838. The returns in 1839 and 1840 were so defective, owing, as the Commissary of Population states, to the wandering disposition of the labourers, that it was found impracticable to make a general census. The official returns of population from 1797 to 1838, with the exception of the years which intervene between 1824 and 1829, were handed in to the Committee. From them it appears that the number of inhabitants in 1838 was 39,328, that the females slightly preponderated over the males, and that the population had diminished since 1828 by 1,692 persons. But whatever may be the actual number of labourers in the island, the amount of labour supplied is affirmed in evidence to be altogether insufficient for the wants of the planters, and to have deteriorated in its character since the period of emancipation. That the supply is deficient, is proved by the high rate of wages, and by the competition which exists amo gst employers to obtain the services of the labourers. The evidence on the first points or the high wages, appears conclusive, whether viewed with reference to the expense of living, or compared with the rates in neighbouring places, or in the old islands.

2. Rates of Wages.—The amount usually paid in Trinidad appears to be 2*s.* 2*d.* for a task, besides allowances. The allowances consist of a house and provision grounds, rent free, half a pound of cod-fish, and one or two glasses of rum per task, and sometimes medicines and medical attendance. To those engaged in the manufacture of sugar, pork, flour and biscuit are given in addition. Two of these tasks, it is stated by the planters and managers, can be easily performed in one day; the American immigrants generally do three; but if two be performed, the profits of the labourer in the field, including the value of his allowances, may be reckoned at 5*s.* a day. Those who work about the mill and boiling-house, the labour being lighter and more agreeable, only earn about 3*s.* 4*d.* a day. The wages of domestic servants are 12 dollars a month for the men, and 10 dollars for the women. The evidence as to the expense of living for the labourers is not very complete. One proprietor states that he has ascertained that an expenditure of 1*s.* 3*d.* a week on farinaceous food, in addition to the allowance of fish, will support a labourer comfortably for the week; and it is his opinion that an ordinary labourer can certainly, if he pleases, lay by 20 dollars, or more than 4*l.* sterling a month. Another witness (a manager) states that labourers can easily save six or seven dollars a week, and instances two women on the estate who save as much.

Such being the remuneration ordinarily given for labour in Trinidad, it is compared in the evidence with the rate of wages obtained in places from which a fresh supply of labourers has been recently obtained.

It is stated by a gentleman who had lately arrived from Barbados, that labourers receive in that island 10*d.* sterling a day, with house and grounds rent free; but except occasionally a beverage of rum, water and molasses, no allowance of provisions. If the house and grounds be not given, the pay is 1*s.* 3*d.* sterling a day.

In St. Lucie, it appears from the evidence of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Agna, who had been a short time before in that colony, that wages vary from 1*s.* 3*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a day, with houses and gardens for the labourers; but no other allowances of any description. A day's work is considered to be nine or ten hours, exclusive of the time required for meals.

In Venezuela, on the continent adjoining Trinidad, the rate of wages is represented by a stipendiary magistrate acquainted with affairs in that republic, to be very low in the interior, not exceeding five dollars a month, with food; but that near Trinidad they rise, and are as high as 1*s.* 8*d.* per day of eight hours' duration on the shores of the Gulf.

The rate of wages at Sierra Leone is given by Lieutenant Hamilton, who had arrived at Trinidad with a party of emigrants from that colony. This gentleman had resided three years in Sierra Leone, and states that the rate of wages does not exceed 4*d.* a day, and that at this rate there is a great scarcity of employment. That filling the office of assistant surveyor, he has frequently turned away from 200 to 300 men soliciting employment at that rate. He adds further, that in saying this he is speaking only of Free Town; but that in the villages and sea districts he is at a loss to conceive what employment can be found for the population.

It, therefore, would appear to be sufficiently proved that the wages of labour in Trinidad are extremely high, both with reference to the cost of living and to the rates in other places; and this fact may of course be assumed to indicate the scarcity of labour compared with the capital applicable to its employment.

3. Competition amongst Employers for Labourers.—The same conclusion of the scarcity of labour is also obtained from the competition which apparently exists among employers to obtain labourers; a competition which affects the relation between the two parties in a manner unknown in older and more thickly-peopled countries. One example of this is furnished by the system of granting certain allowances over and above the wages, to which allusion has already been made. All parties agree in condemning it as most injurious to the labourers.

The Chairman of the Agricultural Society says, in his letter to the Governor, that the distribution of provisions, &c., tends to create unthrifty habits in the labourer, who, receiving often more than he requires, wastefully disposes of the rest; and, that of all the allowances granted, that of rum is the most intolerable in its accompanying circumstances, and the most alarming in its future consequences. The Governor replies, that he "coincides most perfectly with the view taken of this subject, and is glad to find that it is the opinion of the society." The clergymen lament the practice, particularly as regards the distribution of rum, in the strongest terms. Mr. Giuseppi, a stipendiary magistrate, considers that if the practice be continued for two or three years longer, it will demoralize the whole labouring population. It further appears, that the planters also invariably admit that it is demoralizing and pernicious. Yet the competition amongst them to secure the services of labourers is so great, that unanimity in suppressing it had been found impossible. If one party attempted it he would lose all his labourers, who would engage themselves to work for those who were willing to continue the indulgence. And although we have seen it stated in some public journals subsequently to the taking of the evidence now under consideration, that some efforts had been made in parts of the island to put down the practice by consent, none appear to be sanguine that the change can last beyond next crop time.

Again, the labourers will not enter into any contracts for service. One witness, who has the management of the largest estate in Trinidad, says, that he never heard of any contract beyond a day. Agricultural labourers refuse to engage themselves for the quarter or the month. Another witness says, that he should not dare to attempt getting the labourers on his estate to sign an agreement to work six days in succession. They seldom, indeed, engage by the day, but only for the task, which can be performed in four hours. Domestic servants will sometimes engage themselves for the month, but even then the competition amongst masters to obtain servants is so great, as appears by the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Hamilton, a Protestant clergyman, that characters are neither given nor required with the servants. The immigration agent moreover states that, "such is the demand for labour, that no sooner a vessel arrives but their services are immediately engaged;" a statement fully corroborated by the evidence of another official person. Mr. Stewart, the harbour-master, makes the following reply to the question, whether immigrant labourers suffer from want of employment on arrival: "On the contrary, such is the competition to secure them, that but for a regulation which prevents it, the employers would board the immigrant vessels to engage their services before I had officially visited them; and I know that a premium is now given of five dollars (20*s.* 10*d.*) per head, to persons who have influence enough to engage them, and this without any contract on their part to serve for any specific time; so that they may, and very frequently do, leave the parties engaging them immediately afterwards.

4. Industrial Habits and Moral Character of the Labourers.—In following out the examination which has been instituted by the Agricultural Society into the condition and character of the labouring population, we now come to the consideration of the important question, whether the industrial habits and the moral character of the labourers belonging to the island have deteriorated since their emancipation from slavery; and, first, as regards their industrial habits. The opinion of the witnesses examined before this committee appears to be unfavourable to the labourers in this respect. It is affirmed, that the amount of produce raised from the soil has diminished, and that the expense of raising it has increased, while, as regards the article of sugar, the quality of it has considerably deteriorated; that land also is going out of cultivation, and especially that the provision grounds of the labourers are becoming yearly less productive through neglect.

Mr. Phillip, the owner of three sugar estates, in answer to a question, whether his crops had increased in the same proportion as his labourers (the number of which had been doubled), says, "Certainly not on my estates, and generally, I believe, there has been a great decrease throughout the district; many cane-pieces are now overgrown with brushwood, which were previously in cultivation." Mr. Maxwell, the manager of an estate, says that the raising of provisions and small stock has, since the emancipation, "fallen off very much; they are so scarce now as hardly to be procured." Dr. Meikleham, a proprietor, says that the cultivation cultivation of provision grounds "has been generally neglected by the labourers." The harbour-master ascribes "the immense increase of imported provisions," which he states as taken place within the last two or three years, chiefly "to the neglect of the labouring population in cultivating them." "Port of Spain," he says, "which was formerly supplied from estates in Trinidad, is now, in a great degree, fed by imported provisions; and I know as a fact, that the town of San Fernando, which formerly received its supplies of vegetables and provisions from the neighbouring districts, is now not only furnished from abroad, but the labourers from the estates in the interior come into town to supply themselves." The complaint of the increase in the expenses of production seems generally supported by the proprietors and managers, who were examined. One who owns three estates says, that the expenses are much greater, and have been continually and regularly increasing to the present time since the period of emancipation; and that his revenue in 1840, as compared with 1838 and 1839, "was decidedly less from the greater increase of expenses and rise in wages." Another witness, a planting attorney for seven estates, says, that the expenses of cultivation have nearly doubled, the cash wages alone, without allowances, being nearly one-half of the whole expenditure. He further explains as one of the causes of this increase, "the growing carelessness of the labourers, the irregularity of their work, and their reckless disregard of the stock and utensils." This circumstance is also dwelt upon by another witness, the manager of an extensive estate, who gives some minute particulars as to the idle and careless habits of the labourers (607).

In support of the evidence as to the diminution in the amount of land in sugar cultivation, we should observe, that the official returns made to this country state, that in the year 1838 there were 30,161 acres planted in sugar-canes, and in 1839, 25,377 acres. While, from the latest returns in the office of the surveyor-general in the colony, which were laid before this committee, and which we supposed related to the year 1840, it appears that now only 21,700 acres are so planted. There is also more than a corresponding diminution in the amount of produce. For the year 1838 the official return states, that 40,848,784 lbs. of sugar were produced, and in 1839 only 26,553,765 lbs. The extent of land used in the cultivation of provision is returned as in 1838, 13,903 acres, and 1839, 5,483 acres. The latest return, however, from the surveyor's office, laid before this committee, gives, we suppose for the past year, 6,313 acres under this description of cultivation.

With regard to the second point, namely, the moral character of the labouring population of Trinidad, it is satisfactory to observe, that, notwithstanding the complaints which to so great extent are made in the evidence before us by their employers, the two clergymen of the Church of England and the Roman Catholic bishop agree in considering, that gradual improvement has taken place in their general character and conduct.

The Rev. Mr. Mühlhauser, who for five years has had the spiritual charge of an extensive district, is of opinion, that the state of the labouring classes is generally improving, both physically and morally. Marriages have increased amongst them, and they have a due sense of the duties and obligations of the married state. He thinks, also, they are improving in industry, although "there is certainly a great opening for further improvement in this respect." Their circumstances he considers "very comfortable," and he knows that many of them are saving money. "Every man who is willing to work can find employment at good wages;" and even those who neglect work habitually are not reduced to want, "as the high wages they receive while they do work prevents that." They are as yet indisposed to subscribe to any provident fund.

The Rev. J. H. Hamilton, who for four years has been clergyman over four districts, and states, that he is not in any way interested in the profits of sugar cultivation, but has derived his knowledge of the labouring classes from intercourse with them in his ministerial capacity, considers, that though their moral and religious state is at a low ebb, yet a gradual improvement is taking place. That there is a better observance of the Sabbath, an increase in marriages, and the abandonment of many superstitious and improper customs, and that, considering all the circumstances which have combined to affect their character, there is more industry amongst them than could have been reasonably anticipated. "They are never in want of employment," he adds, "and are in a state of great prosperity, and all have a great command of money, as evinced in the expenses they incur in dress and domestic comforts." In common with the last witness, he deprecates the practice of the proprietors in giving rum to the labourers, which has directly led to the habits of drunkenness observable amongst them; and he is most anxious that the competition amongst employers for their services, which is demoralizing to the labourers, should, if possible, be lessened. He considers that the facilities for religious instruction are less in Trinidad than in the old islands.

Dr. Smith, the Roman Catholic bishop, whose diocese comprises a large proportion of the West India Islands, considers that the emancipation had had the most favourable effect upon the general conduct and behaviour of the peasantry throughout the islands, particularly in a religious point of view; but he adds, that in some parts of Trinidad great deductions are to be made from this favourable statement. He ascribes the evils which exist among the labourers of this island to the competition of the masters for their services, and considers the custom of allowing them rum as most pernicious. There is a want of schools, or rather of the funds for keeping them up; and the labouring classes, as was also stated by the two preceding witnesses, are most unwilling to contribute any thing towards the education of their children, although he decidedly thinks that there is no peasantry in any part of the world so well able to pay for it. Marriages, however, he considers to be increasing; and he has succeeded in establishing 20 benefit societies, with 2,800 members, most of whom are heads of families.

5. Labourers occupying Land.—There is much concurrent testimony as to the fact of the labourers settling upon land, and for the most part withdrawing themselves from the labour market. As already observed by us under the head of "Squatting," the practice of unauthorized occupation, especially on the Crown lands, has much increased; but facilities appear also to be afforded to the labourers of purchasing small allotments from private proprietors. In some cases the price given by the labourers for village allotments, in a good situation, has been very high. A proprietor states in evidence, that he had recently sold 16 lots at the rate of 208*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per acre; and that he knows that two of his labourers had bought lots of another proprietor at the rate of 416*l.* per acre. The surveyor-general, who is also a commissary of population, in answer to the question, whether there is a want of land on which small settlers can establish themselves by purchase, he replies, "Not the least want, and they are settling every where rapidly. I really believe they settle nearly as fast as immigrants arrive. It is my opinion that few will remain above a year working as labourers whilst wages remain so high."

III.—Immigration.

Such being the general description of the labouring population, which has been given by the witnesses before this Committee, there remains to be considered the evidence under the third chief head of inquiry, viz., the means which have been taken, and which may still further be taken, for supplying fresh labour by immigration.

1. Past Immigration.—From a return furnished by the Agent-general of Immigration, it appears that the total number of immigrants introduced into the colony at the public expense during the two years and a half from the passing of the Immigration Ordinance was 3,879; but the whole number of immigrants arrived during that period is estimated by the same officer at 8,000. The harbour-master states, that for the last twelve months the immigration has continued steadily at the rate of 300 per month.

The places from which the immigrants have come have been Europe, the United States, the older islands, the Spanish Main and Sierra Leone. It does not appear what has been the relative supply derived from each of these sources, nor from which of them has been the greatest, even of those for whose introduction the colony has paid.

The evidence with respect to the immigrants from Europe shows that they are least suited to the colony, as being not adapted to the species of labour chiefly required, and they suffer much more than any other immigrants from the effect of the climate. The Rev. Mr. Hamilton observes, that the European immigrants have suffered severely from sickness and mortality; and Mr. Butter, the surgeon to the colonial hospital, states, that among the French and German immigrants the mortality has been five to one as compared with the coloured immigrants, and he thinks that Europeans will not answer as labourers, and that their introduction would be advantageous neither to themselves nor to the colony. With respect to the the immigrants from other quarters, all the witnesses who speak to the point decidedly give the preference to the liberated Africans, who, moreover, seem to suffer least from the effects of the climate. Mr. Maxwell, a proprietor, "prefers them much to the labourers from the old islands," as he thinks "they are disposed to settle down more steadily." So does Mr. Darling, another proprietor, because "they are steadier workers, and more hardy in the field." The colonial surgeon considers them to be "a manageable and orderly set of people;" and further, that they are "the healthiest class of people in the island, even more so than the creoles," and that no other class of labourers in the island would have supported, as some of them within his own knowledge do, the marsh miasma, to which they are continually exposed. He adds, "In general you can recognize the liberated Africans, before you see their country marks, by their stout and healthy appearance."

The American immigrants are stated to be the most anxious to amass money, and do not move about from mere caprice, but from a wish to undertake more profitable employments; and Mr. Darling, from whose evidence the above is quoted, thinks they will ultimately, as many have already done, abandon day labour on estates, and become contractors for job work, and act as middlemen. Mr. Phillips, who acts as road commissioner, states, that until the arrival of the Americans no parties would engage to carry on the repairs of the public roads; but these people, he adds, depend upon each other, and do the work in partnership. The mortality amongst this class is stated by Mr. Butter not to have been greater than amongst the natives or the immigrants from the older islands.

In support of this evidence may be added the opinion of the American immigrants, which was expressed by Sir H. M'Leod, in his despatch of 8th January 1840. He states that they "are a most valuable acquisition to this colony, not only as tending to the more rapid spread of English customs and language, but because, from their habits of industry, their correct moral conduct, and their strong religious feelings, they are well calculated to show a valuable example where it is much wanted."

2. Future Immigration.—With respect to the means of extending and continuing immigration, and the numbers of labourers which can be supplied from the different places, the evidence is far from perfect. Mr. Prescod, of Barbados, stated to the Committee that from 15,000 to 20,000 persons, taken in families, might "be advantageously spared from that island."

Lieutenant Hamilton, to whose evidence we have before referred, states, that the whole population of Sierra Leone may be estimated at near 50,000, and he thinks that 10,000 could be immediately removed with the greatest advantage to themselves and to those they would leave behind;" and that the withdrawal of this number, by raising wages in the colony, would cause a stream of immigration to be directed to it from the interior. He is also of opinion that a considerable number of Kroomen could be procured from Sierra Leone and elsewhere on the coast when made acquainted with the advantages awaiting them at Trinidad. There is at present a law prohibiting too great a number of them from settling in Sierra Leone, in order that they may not throw the liberated Africans out of employment. In answer to the questions of the Committee, Lieutenant Hamilton maintains his repugnance to the practice suggested to him of purchasing the freedom of labourers in the interior, for the purpose of enabling them to emigrate, because he considers that it would be virtually slave-dealing, and that it would set a bad example to foreigners.

IV.—Report of Committee.

The Committee, having taken the evidence which has been thus briefly digested, concluded their labours with certain resolutions in place of a more formal report. The substance of them is as follows:

That there is in the island a disproportion of fixed manufacturing capital to population, which must be ruinous to the interests of proprietors.

That this disproportion is increasing, because labourers are settling upon the land they purchase or occupy without authority.

That proprietors are now dependent on the will of the labourer in a manner which will destroy the profit of capital and be most demoralizing to the labourers.

TRINIDAD.

That the only relief is to be afforded by the introduction from foreign sources, as distinguished from British colonies, of immigrant labourers.

That the supply should be drawn from Africa, and the expense be defrayed by the establishment of a land and emigration fund.

Conclusion.

Upon the points referred to in these resolutions, we would beg leave, in conclusion, to submit a few remarks to Lord Stanley's notice, although, as the report and resolutions emanate from private and unofficial sources, we do not conceive, without being referred to the Governor, they would form a proper foundation for any general measure of a practical nature.

In the second resolution, as it stands in the report of the Committee, it is stated that the amount of fixed capital invested in sugar estates is estimated at two millions sterling, which gives about 50*l.* for every inhabitant, a proportion without precedent in any country. This fact, we believe, is assumed in the report, as we have not seen that it was stated in the evidence, nor do we know by what means it has been ascertained; but whether correct or not, we think that the high rate of wages which is freely given, and the unquestionable competition amongst employers to secure labourers, sufficiently proves that labour is deficient in respect to capital.

It further would seem to be proved, that this deficiency is so great as to render the employers of labour entirely dependent on the will of the labourers as to the terms of all contracts of service and rates of wages. It does not appear, however, to be conclusively established that this is a growing evil, or that the demoralizing consequences of it to the labourers are so pernicious as they have been represented. As regards the first point, although undoubtedly squatting has extended in the neighbourhood of occupied districts, yet there has been, and continues to be, an immigration, which we should think would more than balance the withdrawal of the squatters from the labour market—a withdrawal, moreover, which is never complete, as when pressed for money they return to work. As regards the bad effect upon the characters of the labourers, it is yet distinctly stated by the three witnesses who have spiritual charge over extensive districts in the colony, that improvement is gradually, but surely, taking place in the moral and religious character of the population; and it is the more remarkable that this should be the case since it is in spite of the practice, to which the proprietors are represented as being compelled to resort, of giving rum to their labourers, and thereby laying the foundation of the habits of inebriety which are observable amongst them. It is obvious that this practice would present the most serious obstacle to the social and moral advancement of the labouring population in any part of the world.

As regards the remaining propositions, there can be no doubt that the immigration of labourers would afford a great relief to the proprietors of land in the colony, and would tend to render available the fertile districts, which are now lying waste over a large proportion of the island. Whence, however, it can be obtained in sufficient amount, and by what means it can be paid for, are points which are very insufficiently dealt with and provided for in the report of the Committee. Nor is any estimate furnished of the numbers which could be annually absorbed into the community. The numbers of persons who have arrived within the last twelve months must be nearly 4,000, or about one-tenth of the whole population. This, however considerable, appears to be altogether insufficient for the wants of employers, but to what extent it is so does not appear to be stated in the evidence. As regards the source from which the requisite amount of immigration is to be derived, the committee, we observe, look exclusively to Africa, and not to the British possessions in Africa, but to Africa at large. This question, however, is one upon which we are imperfectly informed, and which involves political considerations of the highest importance, upon which it would be beyond our province to enter at any length. We can only say that it appears open to obvious objections, on account of its probable encouragement to internal slave-trading. In the mean time a considerable amount of immigration into Trinidad is, as we have already seen, taking place from the United States, from the older islands, and from Sierra Leone.

Upon the next point, namely, the funds which may be provided for supporting a free immigration, the Governor states, in a despatch to the Secretary of State recently referred to us, dated 18th August 1841, that the general revenue (which is, moreover, improving) has hitherto been found sufficient for the purpose. This source is also looked to in the Immigration Ordinance, which fixes the rates at which the passage of immigrants shall be paid. The Committee say that every expense connected with it can be easily defrayed by establishing a land and emigration fund. They do not, however, add how that fund is to accrue, nor is it easy to supply that deficiency in their report, as it is not contemplated that any Crown lands could, for a considerable period, be in demand. The question, however, is one of great, and, we should think, pressing importance. As it stands at present, the revenues of the colony are pledged to defray the charge of introducing any number of immigrants whose description is in accordance with the Ordinance. And should the efforts now making to increase that number be successful in any considerable degree, it is conceivable that demands might be made upon the Colonial Treasury beyond what it could meet. It would appear necessary, therefore, to provide for the augmentation of the funds applicable to immigration, or to place some definite limit upon the number of immigrants introduced each year at the public expense.

COPY of a LETTER from G. W. Hope, Esq., to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

Gentlemen, Downing-street, 30 December 1841.

No. 17. Letter from G. W. Hope, Esq. to the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, 30 December 1841.

LORD STANLEY has had under his consideration your letter of the 3d ultimo, in which you bring to his notice the results of the evidence taken by a Committee of the Agricultural and Immigration Society of Trinidad, in regard to the industrial condition of that colony.
